The defendant (a constable) seized, under a warrant of distress for poor-rates, goods that were already in the custody of the landlord of the premises under a distress for rent:—Held, that he was not within the protection of the 6th section of the 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, and consequently, that a demand of a copy of the warrant was not necessary to enable the landlord to maintain trespass. Kay v. Grover, 9 Law J. C.P. 112, s. c. 7 Bing. 312, s. c. 5 M. & P. 140.

CONTEMPT.

[Laws regarding commitments by courts of equity for contempt, and taking bills pro confesso, altered and amended by 1 Will. 4. c. 36, 8 Law J. Stat. 83.]

Exhibiting in an assize town inflammatory publications, respecting a crime about to be tried at the assizes, is not a contempt which the Judge of assize can interfere to stop by committing the party exhibiting. The King v. Gilham, 2 M. & M. 165. [Littledale]

The Court will pronounce an Irish peer in contempt for non-payment of costs, and direct such contempt to be signified, leaving the Lord Chancellor to decide whether the writ de contumace capiendo should issue. Westmeath v. Westmeath, 2 Hag. 653.

Whether the Court will make an ex parte order, that a person guilty of a contempt shall stand absolutely committed, upon the testimony of a single witness—quere.

An ex parte order of commitment for a contempt is not irregular, because it has been granted absolutely in the first instance, although the person guilty of the contempt is not a party in a cause. Ex parte Clarke, 1 Russ. & M. 563.

An order was made that the defendant should pay a sum of money by a certain day, or, on default, should stand committed. The plaintiff having been unable to serve that order in time, obtained, as of course, a second order to enlarge the time allowed for the payment, and make service of it on the defendant's clerk-in-court good service; the second order was irregular; it ought to have been made on notice. Leake v. Nalder, 1 Russ. & M. 357.

Three defendants were ordered to deliver up possession of estates to the receiver, within a certain time, or to stand committed; but no writ of execution of the order was served on them. The defendants refused to obey the order, the serjeant-at-arms was ordered to go against them. On the defendants being brought up in custody, it appeared that one of them was an infant, and he and another of them expressing contrition, were ordered to be discharged on payment of costs; the third, persisting in his contempt, was committed. The two others remained in custody, being unable to pay their costs. A motion afterwards made by the defendants to discharge the orders of commitment, for irregularity, was granted. Green v. Green, 2 Sim. 394.

Orders made ex parte to discharge a defendant in contempt for not answering, on certificate of answer filed and tender of costs.

The like order made ex parte without payment of costs, on certificate that the bill had been amended since the contempt. Gray v. Campbell—Smith v. Campbell, 1 Russ. & M. 323.

The "Suitors' Fund" not to be charged with the costs of contempt in any but especial cases of prisoners who are ordered to be discharged. Nodder v. Harris, 9 Law J. Chanc. 19.

A party in the custody of the marshal of the Marshalsea being brought into court, may be charged with a writ de contumace capiendo. The King v. Bailey, 9 B. & C. 67.

A party who is in contempt for disobedience to an order in a cause, is not thereby precluded from making a motion in another cause, having reference to a distinct subject, though between precisely the same parties—semble. Clark v. Dew, 1 Russ. & M. 103.

An offer made by one party to an intended contract, allowing a given time to the other to accept or refuse it, does not bind the person who offers, until it has been accepted; and he may therefore withdraw his offer within the limited time.

And semble, that if the acceptance of such an offer, and the withdrawing of it, be simultaneous, the withdrawing shall be preferred; and neither party will be bound. Head v. Diggon, 7 Law J. K.B. 36, s. c. 3 M. & R. 97.

Contract for sale of "about" 300 quarters of rye, "more or less," shipped on board the Ann Elizabeth:—Held, that the words "about" and "more or less," did not justify the seller in forcing upon the buyer 45 quarters above the 300, which came by the Ann Elizabeth.

Semble, that evidence of mercantile men is not admissible to fix, by usage, the extent of the meaning of those words. Cross v. Eglin, 9 Law J. K.B. 145, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 106.

The master and part owner of a ship delivered the ship's register to the agents of the ship, with a letter, stating that he deposited it with them as a security for the payment of all demands and charges on account of the ship. At this time there were debts due to the agents, and also to other persons. The agents received the register, and refused to deliver it back:—Held, that the letter, combined with the facts, did not amount to an agreement between the owners and the agents, that the letter, in consideration of the delivery of the register, would pay the debts due to other persons on account of the ship. Bowen v. Fox, 9 Law J. K.B. 101.

The plaintiff was engaged by the directors of a mining company, in the capacity of superintendant of their mines in South America, for a period of three years from the date of his arrival there. The agreement provided "that the directors might dissolve it at any time on giving the plaintiff twelve months' notice or twelve months' salary, and defraying his expenses to England; and also that, if the plaintiff served three years, he should in like manner be entitled to a reasonable sum for the expenses of his return, and that of his family, to England." The plaintiff arrived in South America in April 1826. In October 1827 he received notice to hold himself from that moment dismissed. The plaintiff thereupon sued the directors for the breach of contract, claiming a sum of 1815*l.*, including 700*l.* for a year's salary from the date of the dismissal, 470*l.* for further salary to the expiration of the three years of the contract, and a further sum of 320*l.* for the expenses of bringing home his family to England. A verdict was taken for the plaintiff, excluding these two sums of 470*l.* and 320*l.*, with leave to move to increase the damages by adding them, if the Court should think fit:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover them. French v. Brooke, 8 Law J. C.P. 91, s. c. 6 Bing. 354, s. c. 4 M. & P. 11.

On a contract by the owner of a ship to take out a boat, not exceeding certain dimensions, there is an implication that the boat will be so constructed as not to impede the navigation of the ship. Haynes v. Halliday, 9 Law J. C.P. 179, s. c. 7 Bing. 587, s. c. 5 M. & P. 572.

In a negotiation for the advance of a sum of money by way of mortgage, where the proposed mortgagor undertakes, in writing, to pay to mortgagee all "fair and reasonable expenses in ascertaining the value of the property;" if the negotiation goes off by the default of the mortgagee, the mortgagor is not bound to pay such expenses.

In such negotiation, agreement by mortgagee to advance a given sum, "subject to the approval of the title, and execution of such mortgage securities as shall be recommended and approved by his conveyancer," does not entitle the mortgagee to insist upon the appointment of a receiver, as part of the "securities," although such appointment be recommended by the conveyancer. St. Leger v. Robson, 9 Law J. K.B. 184.

The plaintiff, a surveyor, was retained by the defendant to negotiate with the Commissioners of Woods and Forests for the sale to them of certain premises of the defendant, for which he was to receive a commission of 2*l.* per cent. "on the sum which might be obtained, either by private treaty, arbitration, or trial by jury." The value of the property was assessed at 4,000*l.*; but there being an annuity charged upon the premises, which the Commissioners required the defendant to buy off, (of which annuity the plaintiff had had no notice,) the money was placed in the hands of the Accountant General, to await the adjustment of the difference:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to his commission until the sum was ascertained, and received by the defendant. Ball v. Price, 9 Law J. C.P. 78, s. c. 7 Bing. 237, s. c. 5 M. & P. 2.

A and B were litigant parties in several actions. C was the attorney of B; and, at a meeting to settle the actions, it was agreed between A and B, in the presence of C, inter alia, that C should give his promissory note at two months as a collateral security for the payment, by B to A, of the sum of 450*l.* And it was added, that all the effects which A had of B's should be delivered up to C, as B's attorney. C signed the note at the meeting, immediately after the signing of the agreement:—Held, in an action on the note by A against C, that the delivery up of the effects was not a condition precedent to the right of A to claim the money. Irving v. King, 4 C. & P. 309. [Tenterden]

Where it was part of a condition precedent to the claim of a sum of 80*l.* in addition to the purchase money for a new house, that the pavement in front of the adjoining houses should be laid down by the 21st April; it was held, that the delay of four days, though occasioned by bad weather, which prevented the workmen from proceeding, was sufficient to prevent the recovery of such claim. Maryon v. Carter, 4 C. & P. 295. [Tindal]

(c) Penalty or liquidated damages.

A "penalty" and "liquidated damages" are contradictory words. The Court leans against construing words to mean liquidated damages. Horner v. Graves, 9 Law J. C.P. 198, s. c. 7 Bing. 735, s. c. 5 M. & P. 768.

By an agreement containing various stipulations of different degrees of importance, some relating to matters of certain and some of uncertain nature and amount, it was provided, that, in case of the breach by either party of any stipulation therein contained, he should pay to the other 1000*l.*, which sum was declared to be liquidated and ascertained damages, and not a penalty or penal sum, or in the nature thereof. In an action for the breach of a clause of an uncertain nature:—Held, that the sum agreed upon as stipulated damages, was a penal sum only. Kemble v. Farren, 7 Law J. C.P. 258, s. c. 6 Bing. 141, s. c. 3 M. & P. 425.

In an action on the case for breaking up a road, the defendant gave the plaintiff a cognovit to confess judgment for 200*l.*, with a defeasance that no execution should issue if the defendant, within a certain time, reinstated the road. The road was not completed within the time, nor in the precise manner stipulated. The plaintiff thereupon issued execution, and levied the 200*l.* and costs:—The Court held, that the 200*l.* was in the nature of a penalty, and not of stipulated damages; and they referred it to the Prothonotary to ascertain what damages the plaintiff had sustained, and whether any and what portion of the damages levied should be restored to the defendant. Charrington v. Laing, 8 Law J. C.P. 50, s.c. 6 Bing. 242, s.c. 3 M. & P. 587.

(B) When valid or illegal.

[Murray v. Reeves, 2 M. & P. 423; and see Action—Frauds, Statute of.]

The plaintiff's servant bargained with the defendant on a Saturday evening, for the sale of cattle; the defendant agreeing to take them if he approved them on the Sunday morning. On the Sunday the defendant did consent to take the beasts, and they were accordingly delivered to him on that day, and some time afterwards he promised the plaintiff to pay for them:—Held, that although the contract was completed on the Sunday, and therefore void by the statute of Charles, yet that, the defendant having kept the beasts and subsequently promised to pay for them, he was liable for their value, on a quantum meruit. Williams v. Paul, 8 Law J. C.P. 280, s.c. 6 Bing. 654, s.c. 4 M. & P. 538.

It is illegal to purchase obligations or securities purporting to be granted by the government of a foreign country, which government has not been recognized by the King of England. Taylor v. Barclay, 7 Law J. Chanc. 65, s.c. 2 Sim. 213.

Whenever a contract is made in this country, for receiving or paying money, whether the money is payable here or not, if more than 5*l.* per cent. interest is stipulated for, that contract is void for usury.

A contracts for a loan to a foreign state, not acknowledged by this country; B purchases part of the loan, and sells some of the scrip to C; C makes several payments, according to his agreement, and then ceases to make them upon the representations of B; C then files a bill against A and B, to get back his money; B is out of the jurisdiction. A demurs generally—and the demurrer is allowed, the Lord Chancellor most seriously doubting the soundness of the decisions, in accordance with which he felt bound to decide. Thompson v. Barclay, 9 Law J. Chanc. 215.

An agreement between two persons, having expectations from a third, to divide equally whatever he might leave them, is valid. Harwood v. Tooke, 2 Sim. 193.

An agreement between two sons, to divide equally whatever property they may receive from their father in his lifetime, or become entitled to under his will, or by descent or otherwise from him, is not contrary to public policy, but will be enforced in equity. Wethered v. Wethered, 2 Sim. 183.

An agreement operating as a partial restraint of trade is void, unless supported by an adequate consideration; and a promissory note given to one of the parties to such agreement, for the amount of forfeitures incurred in breaches of it—held also to be void, and, in the hands of such party, not the subject of set-off. Young v. Timmins, 9 Law J. Exch. 68, s.c. 1 Tyrw. 226, s.c. 1 C. & J. 331.

An agreement between three persons carrying on the trade of trunk and box makers, and travelling, by themselves and their servants, into various parts of England, to vend trunks and boxes, to divide, and not interfere with certain districts of the several cities, boroughs, towns, and villages, as set forth by them on Bowles's Post Map of England, and that each, during his life, by himself and his agents duly authorized, shall travel into, to sell trunks and boxes in his way of business, without any interruption whatsoever by either of the other two, during their joint lives, in certain cities, boroughs, towns, and villages, and not to suffer any goods in the said trade to be manufactured at their respective shops or warehouses, or to be sent from their respective shops, houses, or warehouses, or from any other place, for the purpose of being sold or disposed of on the ground to be travelled by the other parties thereto; and not to aid or assist any person to oppose all or any and either of the parties; and not to purchase any tea chest or chests, black or green, at a higher price than 6*d.* or 8*d.* each in Oxford; and in case, at any time during their joint lives, any person or persons shall set up and oppose any or either of the parties, to meet together, and enter into such mutual agreement, to the intent therein agreed to, as shall be beneficial to the mutual interests of the parties, it being declared to be their intentions not to do any act prejudicial to the interests of each other; but to aid and assist each other in their said trade and business to the utmost of their power,—does not operate in general restraint of trade; and, as an agreement contemplating a partial restraint only, is founded on a sufficient and valid consideration. Therefore, counts setting forth the same, and averring, by way of breaches, that the defendant travelled into the districts of the plaintiff, and sold boxes therein—held good, on general demurrer. Wickens v. Evans, 3 Y. & J. 318.

It is no legal objection to a written contract, that it gives separate rights of action to different persons. Best v. Saunders, 7 Law J. K.B. 50, s.c. 3 M. & R. 4.

At the time of executing a bond to secure a sum of money, the obligors procure a letter from the obligee, stating his intention not to call in the money within a specified period, if the interest were regularly paid:—the letter is a binding undertaking. Norton v. Wood, 1 Russ. & M. 178.

A and B worked a colliery in partnership equally. A died, having by his will made a provision for his widow and infant children out of the accruing profits. The accounts were referred to arbitrators, who awarded 3,150*l.* to be due to B out of A's share, and to be retained by B out of the first proceeds. B, however, agreed with A's widow, to pay her 200*l.* a year out of the profits of A's share, and in every year in which they should not amount to 200*l.* to pay her 100*l.* certain, towards the maintenance of herself and children, to be placed to account of the provision under A's will; and she, on behalf of herself and infant children, agreed, that so long as B should manage the concern he should retain a salary of 150*l.* per annum.

Held, that (independently of the clause as to management) there was no consideration for B's promise to pay the annuity to the widow.

Semble, that such clause, had it been binding, would have afforded a consideration.

Held, that here, however, it did not amount to a consideration, because she had no power to bind the estate or the children to the payment of the salary; and that her ability to bind herself to the extent of her own interest, giving only a partial validity to the clause, did not create a binding consideration. Thackeray v. Ellam, 9 Law J. Exch. 132.

(C) STAMP.

[See STAMP.]

Where a plaintiff declares upon a contract, which appears to have been afterwards rescinded, and a new contract entered into, but which new contract has not been stamped, the plaintiff cannot resort for his remedy to the old contract, on the ground of the new one not having been stamped.

But if the defendant has no means of proving that the old contract was rescinded, except by shewing the new one, and that new contract requires a stamp, he cannot offer it in evidence, unless it be properly stamped. Sweeting v. Halse, 7 Law J. K.B. 156, s. c. 9 B. & C. 365, s. c. 4 M. & R. 287.

An unstamped agreement is admissible in evidence between the parties to it, for the purpose of proving usury. Nash v. Duncomb, 2 M. & M. 104. [Tenterden]

(D) PERFORMANCE.

[See VENDOR AND PURCHASER.]

In general, the time appointed for the performance of a contract, is of the essence of the contract itself.

But where, from the nature of the subject matter, the exact day does not appear to be material, a party who seeks to exact a forfeiture in case of failure on the appointed day, must give notice to the other party that he intends to hold him to the day. Carpenter v. Blandford, 7 Law J. K.B. 58, s.c. 8 B. & C. 875, s. c. 3 M. & R. 93.

Where work is undertaken on contract at a given price, the employer is not liable to any greater amount by consenting to alterations from the original plan, unless he is either expressly informed, or must necessarily, from the nature of the work, be aware that the alterations will increase the expense. Lovelock v. King, 2 M. & M. 60. [Tenterden]

If A agrees to make an article of certain materials for a stipulated price, but puts in materials of a better kind, he is not at liberty on that account to charge more than the stipulated price; nor can he require the articles to be returned, because the buyer will not pay an increased price on account of the better materials. Wilmott v. Smith, 3 C. & P. 453, s. c. 1 M. & M. 238. [Tenterden]

If an agreement be in part unperformed, the principle of a court of equity is compensation, not forfeiture. Page v. Brown, 4 Russ. 6.

In general, an entire contract is not divisible; and a part-performance cannot therefore be the subject of an action, either upon the contract itself, or for the value of labour applied to, and materials wrought up with, the property of the defendant, the subject of the contract. Sinclair v. Bowles, 7 Law J. K.B. 178, s.c. 9 B. & C. 92, s.c. 4 M. & R. 1.

Where a carriage is hired for a certain time, and sent back before the expiration of it, if the party of whom it was hired sell it within the time, he cannot recover his charge for the hire. Wright v. Melville, 3 C. & P. 542. [Best]

Where a contract is made to sell and deliver a certain quantity of goods, and a smaller quantity is sent to the buyer, and received and retained by him; the seller may, at the expiration of the time agreed for the delivery, maintain an action to recover the value of the quantity which he has delivered, although he may be subject to an action at the suit of the buyer, for damages for breach of the original contract. Oxendale v. Wetherell, 7 Law J. K.B. 264, s. c. 9 B. & C. 386, s. c. 4 M. & R. 429.

An author was engaged to write, for a certain sum, an article to appear among others in a work called the Juvenile Library. Before he had completed his article, and before any part of it was published, the work in which it was to appear was discontinued:—Held, that the publishers were not entitled to claim the completion of the article, that it might be published in a separate form for general readers, but were bound to pay the author a reasonable sum for the part he had prepared. Planché v. Colburn, 5 C. & P. 58. [Tindal]

A party published a prospectus for the publication of a county map and gazetteer, stating that the map would contain "the exact limits of every parish and township in the county." The defendant agreed to take a copy of each. They were published, and there were lines on the map denoting the boundaries of townships, but no distinct lines to shew the boundaries of those parishes which consisted of several townships:—Held, that the map was not according to the prospectus, and that the defendant was not bound to take the map, although by reference to the gazetteer it could be ascertained what townships were in each parish. Teesdale v. Anderson, 4 C. & P. 198. [Tenterden]

On an undertaking by the obligee of a bond, not to call in the money within a specified period, if the interest be regularly paid,—payments of interest made one, or even two days after they became due, are no defeasance of the undertaking, if the grantor accepts them without objection. Norton v. Wood, 1 Russ. & M. 178.

A sold to B, for 95*l.*, two pictures, representing them as "a couple of Poussins." They were, in fact, not originals, but very excellent copies. B did not offer to return them:—Held, that if the jury thought that B believed, from the representation of A, that they were originals, he was not bound to pay the price agreed upon; but that, as he kept them, he was liable to pay such sum as the jury might consider to be the value. Lomi v. Tucker, 4 C. & P. 15. [Tenterden]

On a representation that a ship will sail with convoy, whereby the plaintiff was induced to put his goods on board; the promise is complied with if she follows the convoy and joins it, so as to prevent the plaintiff from maintaining an action against the owner for a loss arising from another cause after she had joined.

Aliter if by reason of this representation the owner of the goods, in an insurance made thereon, was induced to warrant that she would sail with convoy. Christin v. Ditchell, Pea. A.C. 141. [Kenyon]

If A, for valuable consideration, undertakes to surrender a copyhold to B, who, on borrowing money from C, enters into a written agreement with C, that he, B, will surrender the same copyhold to C by way of mortgage security, A is not justified in refusing to surrender the copyhold to B, because he, A, has received notice from C of the agreement between him and B.

The surrender by A to B does not prejudice, but promotes, that agreement. —— v. Walford, 4 Russ. 372.

The owners of a ship applied by letter to S and G, shipwrights, to lengthen and repair the ship, requesting them "to further an estimate of the probable cost, and also to note the prices of timber, and the rate of wages." The letter contained this passage:—"The timber must be all English oak, and, if you have a sufficient quantity on hand, for the repair of the ship, besides her lengthening." S and G, by letter in answer, say the expense of lengthening, on a rough calculation, will be 900*l.*; and as the vessel would require other repairs, it would be best for both parties to do the whole by day-work. The letter then contains this passage:—"The captain will have it in his power to keep an exact account of the articles expended, and to turn off any workman that does not please him. We have on hand an excellent assortment of English oak timber, of a suitable size for the vessel." A note of prices was added:—"Wages, per day, 3*s.* 4*d.*; common English oak timber, per foot, 5*s.*" In a subsequent letter from the owners, announcing the dispatch of the ship, this postscript is added:—"As it is understood that nothing is to be put into the ship but English oak timber and Dantzic oak plank, to which you must bind yourselves by letter," &c. To this S and G answer thus:—"With respect to the materials, we have a good stock of English timber and Dantzic plank, and little or no Hamburgh; so that Captain Young will have it in his power to take what he likes best." In a subsequent letter, the agent of the owners says:—"I hope you will put on her the best of materials, and also the best of workmanship."

The repairs were superintended by the captain, the carpenter, the master, and a part-owner of the ship, and were completed in 1807. While the repairs were going on, the wages of carpenters were increased, by order of Justices, 6*d.* a day.

Immediately after the completion of the repairs the ship sprang a leak of an alarming description, on her return to port, when she was repaired by the owners, upon a notice given to the builders, who sent their foreman to inspect. After these repairs the vessel was proceeding on a voyage to Davis Straits, but was obliged to put back on account of her leaky condition, and was detained twenty-two days on repairs, when, the season being too late for the fishery in Davis Straits, she sailed on a fishing voyage to Greenland, and brought home a short cargo. These transactions took place in 1806 and 1807. In 1813, after various legal proceedings, upon inspection of the ship, it appeared that American oak had been used in the repairs of the ship; that two of the bolts had been driven and clenched imperfectly; that there was one hole without a treenail; and that the vessel, after the lengthening and repair, had increased in the midships five feet in width.

Held, under these pleadings and proofs, that the shipwrights had no right to charge in their account the additional 6*d.* per day for wages, nor for the price of superior oak timber; that they were answerable in damages for having used American instead of English oak for the repairs done by the respondents, and for the supposed loss in the fishing voyage consequent upon the detention for repairs.

Held also, that the costs were properly given against the appellants, although they had a judgment for a balance after allowance of all the deductions for damages. Strachan v. Paton, 3 Bligh, N.S. 360.

(E) When enforced or relieved against in Equity.

[See Specific Performance—Montgomery v. Reilly, 1 Dow. & C. 62, Dig. Law J. 152.]

The Court will not, generally speaking, enforce an agreement wholly voluntary, and without consideration. Groves v. Groves, 3 Y. & J. 163.

An old gentleman, who had several children and grandchildren, had made and executed two wills, and disputes having arisen in the family about them, some of the oldest members of it entered into an agreement amongst themselves for a division of his real and personal estate. This was to be taken the next day to the testator for his approbation, and he was to be desired to cancel both wills. In the course of the night the testator died. The personal property was divided according to the agreement, and a deed of covenant was executed with respect to the appropriation of the real estate; which deed the party, whose rights under the last will would be much diminished by it, understood to be a deed for carrying the first agreement into execution; but, in fact, the two instruments differed in many particulars:—Held, that the first agreement was only a recommendation to the testator, and could not be carried into effect in equity:—Held, that the second agreement or deed differing from the first agreement, whilst it was understood to contain corresponding provisions, could not be carried into effect. No costs given, the defendant having secluded the testator from the other members of the family. Beastall v. Swain, 1 Tam. 288.

Though, in cases of non-payment of money, the Court will relieve against penalty or forfeiture; yet, when it is not a question of penalty or forfeiture, but a privilege is conferred upon payment of money at a stated period, the privilege is lost, if the money be not paid accordingly. Davis v. Thomas, 1 Russ. & M. 506, s. c. 1 Tam. 416.

A agreed to lend B a loan of 500*l.* Navy five per cent. stock. He sold the stock for 522*l.*, which he paid to B. A bond is drawn by an unprofessional man, to repay "the sum of 522*l.*, (being the produce of 500*l.* stock, five per cent. Navy, or such other sum as would replace the stock,) with lawful interest." A sum equal to the dividends was paid half-yearly; but B, on discharging the bond, refused to transfer the stock, and would only pay the money received by her; to this A objected, but at length received it, and gave up the bond, remonstrating on the injustice of the proceedings, but being told, at the same time, that the money would only be paid in discharge of the bond:—Held, that A had no relief in equity; he should not have received the money, unless the party paying it had agreed that the remedy should remain open; but the costs were refused. Barnham v. Munn, 1 Tam. 84.

The defendant contracted to sell an inn to the plaintiff, and, in the treaty, represented to him that the agreement under which the tenant in possession held it was a void agreement, and that he would give the plaintiff possession at Michaelmas following. He had, in fact, given the tenant notice to quit at that time; the tenant did not quit. These representations were proved by witnesses:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to be released from the agreement, or that he might at his election perform it, and have compensation. He elected to have performance, and it was decreed to him, with compensation and costs. Besant v. Richards, 1 Tam. 509.

A bill having been filed by the devisees under a will, to revive and have the benefit of a suit instituted by the testator, to set aside a conveyance and mortgage of lands, on appeal against the decree, and order on further directions in this suit, it appeared that there was a subsequent will, and that R G, one of the appellants, the devisee under that will, was not a party to the suit and the appeal, that the proceedings should be carried on for the benefit of the party who should appear to be entitled. Upon the hearing of the appeal, it was adjourned, with liberty to make R G a party to the revived suit; whereupon R G filed a bill against all the parties, including an assignee under his insolvency, setting up the second will, and claiming, as executor and devisee, the benefit of the former proceedings. By the decree upon the hearing of this suit, the benefit of the former decree and proceedings was given to R G, as executor, but quâ devisee his bill was dismissed, and it was also dismissed against the assignee under his insolvency.

Under these circumstances the case again came on by appeal, but was again adjourned, with liberty to supply the defect of parties under the decree, there being neither devisee nor assignee before the Court.

Some years after this adjournment, a bill was filed by R G and his assignees, stating, that the defendants in the revived suit were cognizant of the second will and its contents, and the agreement between the original plaintiffs in the suit and R G, and that, with this knowledge, they acquiesced in those proceedings, and on that ground praying the benefit of the original decree and the former proceedings. The fact of knowledge and acquiescence was denied by the answers, and not proved in the cause. The bill was dismissed, on the ground of this defect of proof, and the decree affirmed on appeal.

Whether (if the allegations had been sustained by proof,) an agreement not stated in the pleadings, but kept out of the view of the Court, could under these circumstances have been carried into effect by the decree of the Court, and whether there was between the plaintiffs in the original and supplemental suits, such privity as to entitle the latter to the relief obtained by the former—quære. Franklin v. Latourche, 4 Bligh, N.S. 50, s. c. 1 Dow. & C. A.C. 485.

(F) ACTION ON.

[See ante, (D), and COMPANY.]

Two parties entered into a contract, by which one was to supply the other with certain machinery; after the machinery had been partly worked, the manufacturer of it by deed assigned it, in its then state, to a third person. The deed was shewn to the party for whom the machinery was intended, who told the assignee to go on with the work, and he would see him paid. The work was accordingly finished by the assignee:—Held, that he might maintain an action in his own name for the whole amount of the contract. Oldfield v. Lowe, 7 Law J. K.B. 142, s. c. 9 B. & C. 73.

The plaintiff had a demand on the defendant for 8*l.* 10*s.*, and the defendant, as executor of a deceased person, had a demand on the plaintiff for 21*l.* They agreed that the smaller should be set off against the larger debt, and the balance paid. To recover the balance, the defendant sued the plaintiff in a court of requests, which had no jurisdiction beyond 5*l.*, and recovered 5*l.*—Held, that this was no violation of the agreement to set off one against the other; and therefore, that the plaintiff could not sue for his debt of 8*l.* 10*s.*; treating the recovery in the court of requests, as a total satisfaction of the debt for 21*l.* Penney v. Squier, 9 Law J. K.B. 199, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 142.

Where an act of parliament has been passed to prevent the committing of frauds in a particular trade, the omitting to comply with those regulations will prevent the party who omits from recovering in an action founded upon the transaction in which the omission has been made, although it be not proved that any fraud has been committed; and although the party against whom the action is brought, has had the full benefit of his contract. Little v. Poole, 7 Law J. K.B. 158, s. c. 9 B. & C. 192.

An author engaged to write a work for a periodical publication, which is discontinued before his work is completed or published, may recover a reasonable sum, for the part he has prepared, on a quantum meruit in a common count for work done. Planché v. Colburn, 5 C. & P. 58. [Tindal]

Upon an agreement for the purchase of goods, the buyer stipulated that a part of the purchase-money should be applied in payment of a debt due to himself, other part in payment of a debt due from the seller to a third person, and the remainder, if any, should be paid to the seller; and that, for this purpose, the money should remain in the hands of a stakeholder:—Held, that this part of the agreement for the payment of the debt to the third person was founded upon consideration, and was not a mere revocable authority; and that the seller could not recover that part of the money in an action against the stakeholder. Brignell v. Ellis, 8 Law J. K.B. 155, s. c. 5 M. & R. 165.

If a builder do work at an intended hospital on the order of a physician and surgeon, they being announced to deliver lectures there, and being members of the provisional committee, such builder is not bound to look solely to the funds of the hospital for payment, but may sue the persons who gave the orders, unless he was distinctly informed that the dealing was to be on the terms of looking for payment to the funds of the hospital only. Pink v. Sendamore, 5 C. & P. 71. [Tindal]

[See LANDLORD AND TENANT.]

Where the plaintiff declares upon a contract for the sale to the defendant of goods; and charges a breach in not accepting and paying for them, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to aver, as special damage, a loss upon the re-sale of the goods. Such damage is considered as a necessary consequence of the breach by the defendant. Boorman v. Nash, 7 Law J. K.B. 150, s. c. 9 B. & C. 145.

An action on the case may be maintained for the breach of a mere implied contract, and without proving special damage. Marzetti v. Williams, 9 Law J. K.B. 42, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 415.

Where a man is employed to do work under a written contract, and a separate order for other work is afterwards given by parol during the continuance of the first employment, the written contract need not be produced by the plaintiff in an action for the second work. Reid v. Batte, 1 M. & M. 413.

A written parol instrument is not conclusive evidence of the terms of a contract previously made. Fairmanner v. Budd, 9 Law J. C.P. 180, s. c. 7 Bing. 374, s. c. 5 M. & P. 534.

In an action for work and labour, after the plaintiff's case was closed, the defendant offered in evidence a written contract, which, it was alleged, contained the terms of the dealing between the parties, and differed from the case proved by parol testimony for the plaintiff; but, it being unstamped, he was not allowed to produce it. On a motion for a nonsuit, on the ground that the written instrument containing the terms of the contract, was part of the plaintiff's case, and ought to have been produced by him, being the best evidence of the contract; or for a new trial—the Court refused to nonsuit the plaintiff, but directed a new trial, on payment of costs, in order to give the defendant an opportunity of setting up the contract, duly stamped. Fielder v. Ray, 8 Law J. C.P. 65, s. c. 6 Bing. 332, s. c. 3 M. & P. 659, s. c. 4 C. & P. 61.

On a written agreement for the hire of a vessel to be made ready to take on board "forthwith," evidence is inadmissible to shew that the parties agreed that the vessel should be ready in two days. But evidence of the known circumstances of the vessel is admissible to shew how soon she might reasonably be expected to be ready. Simpson v. Henderson, 1 M. & M. 300. [Tenterden]

A, by agreement, promised to surrender into the hands of the lord, &c. "all those brick-works, copyhold of inheritance, then in the possession of A, with full liberty," &c. to the use of B and C: no surrender was made, but B and C entered upon the premises. B afterwards surrendered his interest to C, and an action of trespass having been brought against C and D, they pleaded leave and licence from A to B and C; C justifying in his own right, and D as the servant of B and C, and by their command; to which A replied de injuriâ, &c. The question being whether the locus in quo was comprised in the agreement, B was called by the defendants to prove, by parol declarations of the plaintiff, that the locus in quo was so comprised. B's evidence was objected to —first, because he was bound to indemnify D, his servant, for an act done by his command in the assertion of a supposed right; and secondly, because it was not competent to the defendants to extend by parol evidence the terms of the agreement to premises not in the possession of A at the time:—Held, first, that B was a competent witness; and secondly, that the terms of the agreement being ambiguous, might be explained by parol testimony. Paddock v. Fradley, 1 C. & J. 90.

Where an agreement expressly refers to a plan as an existing document, forming a term in the contract, parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of identifying the plan. Hodges v. Horsfall, 1 Russ. & M. 116.

If, upon notice given to the attorney of a party to produce an agreement in his possession, he neglect so to do, he cannot be called as a witness to prove the contents. Bothomley v. Usborne, Pea. A.C. 101. [Kenyon]

Where it appeared on the record, that an agreement sued on was made by the plaintiff, on behalf of himself and the other proprietors of a theatre, evidence of the declarations of one of such other proprietors was held admissible on the part of the defendant. Kemble v. Farren, 3 C. & P. 623. [Tindal]

The plaintiff declared for work and labour generally, and proved the value of the work done, and rested her claim on the general quantum meruit count. The defendant proved that the plaintiff agreed to do the work on certain specified terms. The plaintiff then proposed to shew, that the work was done under another contract consistent with the original demand: —Held, that she could not do so, as she should have relied upon such contract in the first instance. Soulby v. Pickford, 7 Law J. C.P. 94, s. c. 2 M. & P. 545.

CONVICTION.

[See GAME, MISDEMEANOR, and SESSIONS.]

A local act, establishing a court of requests, gave power to the commissioners, in a certain mode, and under certain circumstances, to impose a fine upon any person who should insult them in court while executing their office. In an action of trespass against them by a person on whom they had exercised this authority, the following objections were taken to their proceedings; which objections were disposed of as follows:—

The commissioners pleaded as a distinct fact, that the plaintiff insulted them; and that they thereupon proceeded to impose the fine upon him. Objected, for the plaintiff, that the insulting as thus pleaded was a traversable fact; and that the conviction, not being pleaded as a conviction, could not conclude that fact. Answered, that, the conviction being set out in the plea, the allegation of the fact which led to the conviction was immaterial.

Commissioners pleaded that the plaintiff had insulted them, by accusing them of injustice, hatred, malice, and corruption. The conviction, when produced, appeared to be for insulting them by so accusing them, "and by calling Mr. G S, who was then attending in the court, an infamous liar and a scoundrel." Objected, that if the commissioners had properly considered by the conviction, that the so calling G S in their presence was an insult to themselves, there was a variance between the conviction and the plea: and that, if it could not be so considered, the conviction was bad; inasmuch as a part of the cause for which they had imposed the fine was not justifiable; and that the Court had no means of ascertaining how much of the fine was imposed for the justifiable, and how much for the unjustifiable cause. Answered, that the conviction might be held applicable to the justifiable cause, and that the unjustifiable might be rejected as insensible.

The commissioners pleaded, in the terms of the clause which gave them power, that the plaintiff was apprehended in court "by their order." The conviction omitted the latter words; but the statement throughout shewed that the plaintiff was in court at the time, as well as the commissioners. Objected, that the conviction did not prove the plea. Answered, that the order of the commissioners might fairly be inferred.

The local act directed the Court to be holden on Tuesdays. The warrant of distress was headed on the Tuesday on which the conviction took place, but at the foot purported to be signed and sealed on the following day. Objected, that the warrant should have been made at the court:—Held, that the heading was sufficient; that the signature might be out of court.

The act directed the Court to sit within certain specified hours only, on the day prescribed. The conviction and the plea were silent as to the hours. Objected, that, as this was a limited authority, it must appear to have been strictly pursued, and that it did not so appear, unless it was stated that the Court was sitting within the prescribed hours. Answered, that as it appeared they were sitting on the prescribed day, it would not be inferred that they were sitting out of the prescribed hours. Aldridge v. Haines, 9 Law J. K.B. 202, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 395.

COPYHOLD.

(A) Nature of the Tenure.
(B) Surrender and Admittance.
(C) Fine.
(D) Forfeiture.

(A) Nature of the Tenure.

Where conveyance by bargain and sale, as well as surrender and admittance, is necessary to pass the interest in customary tenements, the freehold is in the tenant, and not in the lord.

Where the lord, being tenant for life of the manor, takes a conveyance of such customary tenements to himself in fee, the customary estates are only suspended, and not extinguished; and on his death, the customary tenements, so acquired by him, descend to his heir, and do not go to the remainder-man, who is entitled to the manor. Bingham v. Wood—Huddlestone v. Corbett, 8 Law J. Chanc. 46, s. c. 1 Tam. 183, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 750.

The conventionary tenants within the assessionable manors of the duchy of Cornwall, have a perpetual indefeasible right to them and their customary heirs and surrenderees, to renew their estate from seven years to seven years. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & R. 361.

A copyholder, who has no interest in the minerals, has yet a sufficient possession of them by reason of his possession of the soil, that he may maintain trespass against a person, who, by means of an entry made in the adjoining land, takes away the minerals. Lewis v. Branthwaite, 9 Law J. K.B. 263, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 437.

(B) Surrender and Admittance.

[Infants, femes covert, and lunatics, may be admitted to copyholds by their guardian, committee, or attorney, 1 Will. 4. c. 65, 8 Law J. Statutes, 134.]

A copyhold estate will not pass by the will of a devisor who dies before admittance. King v. Turner, 2 Sim. 545.

Where a grant is made by the lord to A to hold to B and others for lives, it is not necessary for B to be admitted, in order to recover in ejectment. Doe d. Besley v. Maisey, 7 Law J. K.B. 85.

Where a surrender is made referring to a deed, and that deed states on the face of it, that the surrender was made as a security for money, and provides, that, after twelve months more, the surrenderee may sell, and pay himself:—The Court holds such deed and surrender to be a mortgage, and will compel the lord of the manor, upon the death of the surrenderor, to admit his heirs on payment of the fines, according to the custom of the manor. Weaver v. Kinglake, 9 Law J. Chanc. 20.

Where a copyholder devised his estate:—Held, that the heir had nevertheless a right to come in and be admitted, subject to the right of the devisee afterwards to come in; as the estate descended to the heir-at-law, and could not vest in the devisee until admittance.

The Court will order a mandamus to admit the heir: although it may appear that there has been collusion between the heir and the devisee to defeat the lord of his fines. The lord must seek his remedy for the fines, and cannot refuse to admit the heir, if the devisor do not choose to come in and be admitted. The King v. Sir T. M. Wilson, 8 Law J. K.B. 101, s. c. 10 B. & C. 80, s. c. 5 M. & R. 140.

Where, by the peculiar tenure within a manor, the customary estates of inheritance might be conveyed by lease and release, by the licence of the lord, and passed by descent on the heir appearing and paying a fee to the steward for having his name enrolled:—Held, that there was no duty payable upon this last act, (whether it was an admittance, or a mere recognition) according to the 55 Geo. 3. c. 184, schedule, part 1. Doe d. Carlisle v. Towne, 9 Law J. K.B. 278, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 585.

A copy of a surrender and admittance, purporting to be signed by the steward, and coming out of the hands of the customary tenant, is admissible in evidence, without producing the court roll. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & R. 298.

(C) Fine.

The fine for admission to a copyhold cannot, in general, be allowed to exceed double two years value; whatever may be the number of lives named in the copy.

The proper mode of assessing such a fine, in a particular case, was held to be, for the first life, two years value; for the second life, one-half the sum taken for the first; for the third life, one half the sum taken for the second, and so on; so that in the result the sum taken should never be quite double the sum taken for the first. Wilson v. Hoare, 9 Law J. K.B. 253, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 350.

In ascertaining the amount of a fine, payable by a copyholder, dependent on the annual value of the premises, the amount of rent reserved by a lease granted by such copyholder, is not conclusive of the annual value of the copyhold: he may shew that it is of less annual value. Lord Verulam v. Howard, 9 Law J. C.P. 69, s. c. 7 Bing. 327, s. c. 5 M. & P. 148.

(D) Forfeiture.

The succeeding lord of a manor may avail himself of a right to seize copyhold land quousque, which right accrued to the preceding lord, on default of the heir of the copyholder coming in to be admitted.

The devisee of the lord is entitled to avail himself of such right, the same as the heir of a lord who died intestate.

But, to warrant such seizure, there must be three proclamations made, for the heir of the copyholder to come in and be admitted.

And, according to Lord Tenterden, Mr. Justice Bayley, and Mr. Justice Littledale, those three proclamations must be made at consecutive courts: According to Mr. Justice Parke, three proclamations, though not at consecutive courts, would be sufficient. Doe d. Bover v. Trueman, 9 Law J. K.B. 119, s.c. 1 B. & Ad. 736.

COPYRIGHT.

[See Injunction.]

The Court will not protect a foreigner's copyright. Delouche v. Shaw, 2 Sim. 237.

A book is published in a foreign country, copies of which are bought and then published in this country—persons who purchase a part of such work and publish it here, have no copyright therein. Guichard v. Mori, 9 Law J. Chanc. 227.

The fraudulently taking copies of an original engraving, to the injury of the proprietor, is not a piracy within the meaning of the acts 8 Geo. 2. c. 13, 7 Geo. 3. c. 38, and 17 Geo. 3. c. 57.

But, being a fraud at common law, it may be the subject of an action on the case at the suit of the party aggrieved. Murray v. Heath, 9 Law J. K.B. 111, s.c. 1 B. & Ad. 804.

In a case of alleged piracy of part of a work, the Court, if it refuses the injunction, will not interfere to give any other relief. Baily v. Taylor, 8 Law J. Chanc. 49, s.c. 1 Russ. & M. 73, s. c. 1 Tam. 295.

Equitable jurisdiction upon the 34 Geo. 3. c. 23. is not excluded from the special remedy thereby provided. Independent of that remedy, the statute vests in the inventor a right of property which, though only of three months' duration, equity will protect by injunction, if the title be satisfactorily established.

In this case the evidence as to title not being conclusive, the injunction was dissolved, and an issue directed, the defendants keeping an account.

The Court will, itself, compare and decide upon alleged piracies by inspection, where that can be easily and safely done. Sheriff v. Coates, 1 Russ. & M. 159.

CORN AVERAGES.

The sales of corn, which, according to the 9 Geo. 4. c. 60, are to be returned weekly, are not of necessity sales, the contracts for which would be binding according to the Statute of Frauds. Whether so binding or not, they must be returned; and the party not making the return is liable to the penalty, although the contract for the sale was not enforceable, by reason of the Statute of Frauds.

Nor is the time of delivery, or the fact of delivery or non-delivery, material. The sale must be returned within the prescribed time, although there may have been no delivery. Rex v. Townrow, 9 Law J. M.C. 40, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 465.

CORONER AND CORONER'S INQUEST.

[Laws relating to coroners in Ireland amended by 10 Geo. 4. c. 37, 7 Law J. Statutes, 74.]

A freeholder of the county, having a place in the county where he has a right to reside, is capable of being elected coroner.

Such a person, being elected coroner, will not be removed from the office, because he has also a residence in a town comprised within the ambit of the county, but not being part of the county, which has been his more usual place of abode.

Quære—whether a coroner will be removed on account of his more usual place of abode being in a town situate within the ambit of the county, but not part of the county, when no inconvenience has arisen from the circumstance. In the matter of the election of a Coroner for the county of Nottingham, 7 Law J. Chanc. 61.

Semble—that the Court of Quarter Sessions have no power to compel the personal attendance of the coroner with his inquisitions.

But, at all events, they are not justified in refusing to give him an order for his fees, because he had disobeyed a rule of the Sessions, directing such personal attendance. The King v. the Justices of Cumberland, 9 Law J. M.C. 102.

If the names of the jurors be not set out in the caption of a coroner's inquisition, and the inquisition be not signed by the jurors, with their names at length, the inquisition is bad. If some of the jurors sign with their marks, such marks ought to be verified by an attestation. Rex v. Bowen, 3 C. & P. 602. [Park]

It is the duty of a coroner, in a case of death occurring in a pugilistic encounter, to examine a surgeon as to the cause of the death. Rex v. Quinch, 4 C. & P. 571. [Alderson]

CORPORATION.

(A) Of the Charter.

(B) Rights, Liabilities, and Disabilities.
(C) Bye-laws.
(D) Officers and Members.
(c) Rights, Duties, and Liabilities.
(d) Amotion.
(E) Remedies by and against.

(A) Of the Charter.

A charter granted by the Crown cannot be partially accepted, unless it should appear to be the intention of the Crown that the grantee should have the option to accept in part and reject in part. Rex v. Westwood, 2 Dow. & C. 21, s. c. 4 Bligh, N.S. 213, s. c. 7 Bing. 1.

(b) Construction.

A charter creating a corporation provided for electing a mayor on the Monday before Michaelmas-day, and for the swearing him in on the Friday after Michaelmas-day, in every year. A subsequent clause declared that no person who had served the office of mayor should be capable to be re-elected until the space of three years next ensuing the end and determination of his office of mayor. A person who held the office of mayor was, three years afterwards, re-elected; but, if the computation of the calendar was to be taken, three years had not intervened; for he had gone out of office on the 6th of October 1826—was re-elected on the 28th of September 1829, and on the 2nd of October in that year was sworn in. If the computation was to be taken according to years of office, then, according to the charter, three years had intervened:—Held, that the latter was the proper mode of computation; and that he was well elected. Rex v. Sawyer, 8 Law J. K.B. 221, s.c. 10 B. & C. 486.

In several charters granted to an immemorial city corporate, it was directed that sheriffs should be chosen by the citizens and commonalty "from themselves." A subsequent charter, which confirmed former privileges, and which gave direction as to time and mode of electing sheriffs, did not contain the words "from themselves;" but the usage before and after that charter had been to elect sheriffs from among the freemen:—Held, that the mere omission of those words in the last charter did not dispense with the previous limitation; and that a person not a freeman at the time of his election was not well elected. Rex v. Grant, 8 Law J. K.B. 382.

A charter of incorporation directed the election of common councilmen to be made out of the burgesses and inhabitants:—Held, that a person who was a burgess, but not also an inhabitant, was not well elected.

Held also, that the meaning of the charter was too clear to admit of evidence of usage, to give it a contrary interpretation.

A charter of restoration, reciting previous charters and a surrender, granted and restored to an immemorial corporation, all elections, nominations, and appointments, which they had before the surrender, by reason or pretence of any charters, or by any other lawful manner, right, or title:—Held, that this did not sanction a practice to elect out of burgesses not inhabitants; the charter, to which the pretence was referred, directing an election out of burgesses and inhabitants. Rex v. Salway, 7 Law J. K.B. 277, s. c. 9 B. & C. 424, s. c. 4 M. & R. 314.

(B) Rights, Liabilities, and Disabilities.

If the mayor of a town order weights and measures, and, when supplied, they be examined at a full meeting of the corporation,—this is such a recognition of the contract as will make the corporation liable to pay for them, although the order for them was not under the common seal of the corporation; and the fact, that the mayor was afterwards ousted from his office by a judgment of the Court of King's Bench, makes no difference. De Grave v. the Mayor and Corporation of Monmouth, 4 C. & P. 111. [Tenterden]

A member of a corporation is not a competent witness to sustain the claim of the corporation, even though he release his interest in the subject-matter of the suit. Doe v. Tooth, 3 Y. & J. 19.

(C) Bye-laws.

A bye-law enlarging the class of persons from whom a corporate officer is to be selected, beyond the number or class described by the charter, is bad. Rex v. Barnstead, 9 Law J. K.B. 321, s.c. 2 B. & Ad. 699.

A charter vests the right to elect burgesses in the general body of an ancient corporation, and gives a power to make bye-laws to a select body. The general body makes a bye-law delegating the power to elect burgesses to the select body:—Held, that this is a good bye-law; for the power given by the charter to the select body to make bye-laws does not divest the general body of the right to make such laws, which is incident to it at common law. Rex v. Westwood, 2 Dow. & C. 21, s. c. 7 Bing. 1, s. c. 4 Bligh, N.S. 21.

The common council of the city of London have, by custom, a right to make ordinances for regulating carts worked within the city for hire, restraining their number, licensing them, and regulating the manner in which they shall be licensed. A bye-law was made in common council, that 420 of such carts, and no more, should by the president and governors of Christ's Hospital be allowed or licensed to work for hire within the city:—Held, that such bye-law was supported by the custom; and that the discretionary power of licensing was rightly and ex necessitate delegated by the common council to a smaller body. And (on motion for a procedendo, after return to a habeas corpus, obtained by a party sued on the bye-law) the Court refused to inquire whether or not the number of 420 was reasonable. Shaw v. Pope, 2 B. & Ad. 465.

The masters of a company, under a bye-law, issued to the wardens their warrant to distrain for a penalty. This warrant was put in as evidence by the plaintiff (the party distrained upon) in an action for the seizure, to establish his case against the masters as co-defendants with the wardens. The warrant recited a demand of the penalty previous to the seizure:—Held, that such demand was not established by the putting in of the warrant by the plaintiff, but that the defendants ought to have proved it.

This objection, on behalf of the plaintiff, in banco, on resisting the defendant's application for a new trial, was held valid, though not noticed at the trial.

Although a bye-law, inflicting a penalty, do not in its terms require that it shall be demanded previously to distress being made, yet such demand is necessarily to be implied, and must be proved. The practice on such bye-laws has accordingly been, to aver a demand and refusal in the pleadings.

Unless such be a necessary implication, the bye-law would be unreasonable in inflicting a penalty against a stranger without such demand and refusal, and therefore bad.—Semble also, that, without such implication, it would be unreasonable and bad, in not requiring, in terms, notice of the bye-law to be given to a stranger previous to infliction of the penalty.

In support of a bye-law, in favour of a company in a corporate town, to exclude strangers from free trade, a corporator is not a competent witness where the corporation participates in the penalty for infraction of the bye-law.

But semble, that the declarations of a deceased corporator, as to reputation of the custom so to exclude strangers, would be admissible.

In order to introduce, in evidence, an entry in the company's book, of an acknowledgment by a stranger, that he had infringed the bye-law, evidence aliunde must be previously given, to establish who the party was who made the entry, and in what situation he stood; those circumstances are not to be gathered from the entry itself.

Such an entry being ancient, lapse of time dispenses with the necessity of proving the handwriting of the person who made it. Davies v. Morgan, 9 Law J. Exch. 153, s. c. 1 C. & J. 587, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 457.

(a) Qualifications.

Where the custom of a corporation was, that "every freeman's son born in the town after his father was a freeman, should be admitted a freeman on attaining his age of twenty-one years;" and no instance appeared, since the time of Queen Elizabeth, of more than one son of a freeman having been admitted in right of his father:—Held, that the expression, "every freeman's son," when construed by the usage, did not mean "every son of a freeman;" and that the custom was satisfied by one son of a freeman being admitted. Rex v. the Mayor and Jurats of Rye, 7 Law J. K.B. 107.

Where a charter, creating a corporation of mayor, jurats, bailiffs, and burgesses, provided that the vacancies in the office of jurat should be filled up from the burgesses "or inhabitants" of the town; and nothing appeared to shew that it was intended that a jurat should first be a burgess:—Held, that an inhabitant who had not been previously a burgess was well elected to the office of jurat. Rex v. Grest, 7 Law J. K.B. 98, s. c. 8 B. & C. 363, s. c. 2 M. & R. 391.

A person who had been bound to serve a notary, for the purpose of being admitted to act as one, but who, during the time of his apprenticeship, filled the situation of a banker's clerk from nine in the morning until five in the afternoon, going after five to the notary's office, was refused admission as a member of the Scriveners' Company (preparatory to his application for admission as a notary), on the ground, that the service with the notary was merely colourable:—The Court held the refusal to be warranted; and would not grant a mandamus to the company to admit the applicant. Rex v. the Scriveners' Company, 8 Law J. K.B. 199, s. c. 10 B. & C. 511.

The general body of a corporation may lawfully delegate the power to elect burgesses to a select body of the corporation. Rex v. Westwood, 2 Dow. & C. 21, s. c. 4 Bligh, N.S. 213, s. c. 7 Bing. 1.

(c) Rights, Duties, and Liabilities.

The offices of town clerk and common councilman in the same person, held not to be incompatible; no fact appearing from which it must be inferred, that the person who held them would have to perform any conflicting duties. Rex v. William Jones, 9 Law J. K.B. 103, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 677.

Whether the offices of town clerk and alderman are of themselves incompatible, so that they can, under no circumstances, be held by the same person—quære.

But where the duties of the office of town clerk required that he should attend the corporate meetings, and take minutes of their proceedings, and by the charter he was removable at the pleasure of the corporation,—Held, that this office was incompatible with that of alderman, inasmuch as the town clerk might, in his character of alderman, have to vote upon a question affecting his own conduct, or touching the retaining of his own situation as town clerk.

The fact, that the town clerk had a yearly salary, which might be increased, diminished, or taken away by the corporation, was held, for the same reason, to render the office of town clerk incompatible with that of alderman.

The circumstance that, by the charter, the number of aldermen was indefinite, held not to answer the above objections. Rex v. Tizzard, 7 Law J. K.B. 275, s. c. 9 B. & C. 418, s. c. 4 M. & R. 400.

Where it is sought to deprive a corporator of one office, on the ground that he has vacated it by the subsequent acceptance of an office incompatible with the former one, it must be shewn, not only that he has acted in the subsequent office, but that his appointment to it was legal. Until such appointment, the holding of the former office is legal. Rex v. Day, 7 Law J. K.B. 308, s. c. 9 B. & C. 702, s. c. 4 M. & R. 541.

A town clerk of a borough held his office for life, with power to appoint a deputy. He appointed one. A bill of indictment for forgery being found against the town clerk, he fled the country and did not return. The duties of the office were continued to be discharged by the deputy, until he (the deputy) died.

Whereupon, the corporation met on a charter-day, and adjourned to a future day (as was customary); and they issued a summons, calling for the attendance of the town clerk. On the day appointed, he not attending, by himself or by sufficient deputy, they removed him from the office and appointed another.

To these proceedings it was thus objected, and was thus answered by the Court:—

1. Objection—No sufficient summons to the party.
   Answer—He was not within reach of a summons.
2. Objection—No conviction for the offence charged by the indictment.
   Answer—He was removed for not attending the duties of his office. His flying from the indictment raises a presumption that he did not intend to return. He had abandoned the office.
3. Objection—The meeting at which he was removed, was not held on a charter-day. No notice of the purpose given for the adjournment day.
   Answer—Every member is presumed to attend on the charter-day; and the adjournment according to the usage, was a continuance of the day: notice, therefore, not necessary.

Rex v. Harris, 9 Law J. K.B. 165, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 936.

(E) Remedies by and against.

[Attorney General v. Mayor of Exeter, 3 Russ. 395, Dig. Law J. 163.]

It is not necessary, in order to create a corporation, that any express form of words be used, either in the charter or the act of parliament which incorporates. Accordingly, where, from different parts of acts of parliament, it clearly appeared that certain persons were to act for a public purpose—that of making a river navigable; and among other provisions, that they were to have a public corporate name, to make orders for the guidance of other persons than those of their own body, and to take land by succession, and not by inheritance:—Held, that they were entitled to sue in their corporate name for an injury done to their real property, (although they had not been created or described in express words as a corporation,) and were also entitled in their corporate character to take the tolls, although the produce of the tolls were to go to the personal representatives of the persons interested. The Conservators of the River Tone v. Ash, 8 Law J. K.B. 226, s. c. 10 B. & C. 349.

A trading corporation having by its bye-laws fixed a rate of allowance to be made to the widows of deceased members, subject only to variation upon a defect of funds, cannot exercise a discretionary power as to the rate of allowance, but may be compelled by process in the ordinary courts of justice (no defect of funds being alleged) to make the allowance fixed in a bye-law in favour of the widow of a freeman, who had entered after the date of the bye-law in question, and paid upon his entry a sum of money to the funds of the corporation, and made a small annual payment to the time of his death. Flashers of Glasgow v. Scotland, 3 Bligh, N.S. 384.

(A) In general.

[See Trespass and New Trial.]

A Judge at chambers has no power to give costs to parties, in respect of a summons, attended before him at chambers. Read v. Lee, 9 Law J. K.B. 238, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 415.

A man cannot be made liable for the costs of another by a parol undertaking. Howell v. Edmunds, 7 Law J. Chanc. 147.

J S mortgaged to the lessors of the plaintiff certain premises, by way of security for the payment of a sum due on a cognovit, and the costs of the judgment, and all other costs and charges whatsoever attending the same. The mortgagees having levied the amount of the judgment, the assignees of J S, against whom a commission had issued, sued them for the money received, and obtained a verdict; but, on a second trial, the verdict was for the defendants, J S proving not to be a bankrupt:—Held, that the mortgagees were not entitled to claim the costs of this action as costs attending the judgment under the cognovit.

On the levy, J S gave notice to the sheriff that the goods belonged to him jointly with another person, whereupon the sheriff impanelled a jury to ascertain the fact, who found that they were the sole property of J S—Quære, whether the sheriff was entitled to call upon the parties for the costs of the inquisition—Semble, not. Doe d. Holt v. Rex, 8 Law J. C.P. 147, s. c. 6 Bing. 447, s. c. 4 M. & P. 177.

The costs incurred by an investigation of a disputed fact, not allowed to a party who had the judgment upon the general question of right, the fact being found against that party. Flashers of Glasgow v. Scotland, 3 Bligh, N.S. 384.

Where a case determined by the House of Lords on an appeal is sent back to this Court, to do what should be just, a part of the decree having been reversed, the question of costs is in the discretion of this Court.

Costs of the appeal in the particular case ordered in favour of the party succeeding on the appeal, although only in part. Noel v. Henley, 12 Price, 700.

Where copies of deeds or other papers are furnished by either party to the Judge of the Court, the party is not entitled to the costs of such copies as against the other side; but they are merely personal costs, to be sustained by the party furnishing them, unless there be a fund in court, this being in accordance with the practice in the Court of Chancery. Bozon v. Williams, 3 Y. & J. 378.

(B) PLAINTIFF'S RIGHT TO.

Where a statute imposes a certain penalty, to be recovered by action, and vests the right of action in a particular person, or collection of persons, the withholding of the penalty is an injury which gives a right to costs of suit, as well as to the penalty. Aliter, where the penalty, or the persons who are to sue for it, be uncertain. The College of Physicians v. Harrison, 7 Law J. K.B. 249, s.c. 9 B. & C. 524, s. c. 4 M. & R. 404.

Where the jury return a verdict for the plaintiff upon a particular part of his count, the Master is justified in not allowing the costs relating to the remainder of the count; although the verdict be taken and the judgment be entered generally; without noticing the special finding of the jury. Cocks v. Peachy, 7 Law J. K.B. 241, s. c. 2 M. & R. 420.

Where the plaintiff obtained a verdict, and the Court of Exchequer arrested the judgment, which judgment was reversed by the Court of Exchequer Chamber:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the motion in arrest of judgment, and that such costs must be taxed by the officer of the Court of Exchequer. Adams v. Meredew, 3 Y. & J. 419.

A Judge, under the 43 Eliz. c. 6, is authorized to grant a certificate to deprive the plaintiff of costs, where the verdict is for less than 40*s*. (and the action is not within the exception mentioned in the act,) although the plaintiff could not have proceeded in the county court. Such a circumstance may influence the Judge in his discretion, whether he will grant the certificate; but it is no bar to his granting it, where he is of opinion that the action ought not to be brought at all. Wright v. Nuttall, 8 Law J. K.B. 188, s. c. 10 B. & C. 492.

Where a defendant dismisses a bill for want of prosecution, without having made a motion of which he had given notice, the plaintiff cannot afterwards obtain an order for the payment of the costs of that motion, as being a motion abandoned. Farquharson v. Pitcher, 4 Russ. 510.

(C) DEFENDANT'S RIGHT TO.

[See MALICIOUS AND VEXATIOUS ARREST.]

Where a plaintiff would be entitled to costs, had he succeeded, he is liable to costs where he fails. The College of Physicians v. Harrison, 7 Law J. K.B. 249, s. c. 9 B. & C. 524, s. c. 4 M. & R. 404.

A defendant is not entitled to costs upon a judgment of non pros. for not entering the issue, where the issue grows out of a plea in abatement. Michlam v. Bate, 7 Law J. K.B. 121, s. c. 1 B. & C. 642, s. c. 3 M. & R. 91.

In debt on a bail-bond against three defendants, one of them pleaded his bankruptcy and certificate, whereupon the plaintiff entered a nol. pros. as to him. The plaintiff had notice of the bankruptcy before plea pleaded:—Held, notwithstanding, that the defendant was not entitled to costs under the 8 Eliz. c. 2. s. 2. Booth v. Middleroat, 8 Law J. C.P. 149, s. c. 6 Bing. 445, s. c. 4 M. & P. 182.

Where the plaintiff obtains a verdict with damages upon the general issue, and the defendant obtains a verdict upon pleas of justification, or other pleas which answer the action, the defendant is entitled to judgment upon the whole record, and to the general costs of the cause.

Semble—that it is proper, in all such cases, for the plaintiff to have damages assessed at Nisi Prius, under the general issue; in order that he may be entitled to judgment in case the defendant's pleas should afterwards be held not to amount to a legal defence. Alexander v. Lawson, 7 Law J. K.B. 155.

The statute 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 11. s. 1, which gives costs to one of several defendants obtaining a verdict in actions of trespass, assault, false imprisonment, and ejectione firmæ, does not apply in an action on the case for a malicious prosecution, wherein a false imprisonment is alleged consequentially, or by way of special damage. Murray v. Nicholls, 8 Law J. C.P. 217, s. c. 6 Bing. 530, s. c. 4 M. & P. 280.

(D) EXTRA COSTS.

[Dew v. Clarke, 4 Russ. 511, Dig. Law J. 166.]

Extra costs occasioned by a mistake of the Master allowed to a creditor proving his debt against a lunatic's estate. In re Buckle, 1 Russ. & M. 360.

(E) DOUBLE COSTS.

Where the plaintiff is nonsuited, the Judge before whom the cause was tried, may, after an interval of four years, upon an affidavit that the defendant was within the provisions of the statute 7 Jac. 1. c. 5, grant a certificate to entitle him to double costs. Norman v. Danger, 3 Y. & J. 203.

(F) SECURITY FOR.

Where an infant sued by a prochein amy, who was stated to be insolvent, and fraud was suggested, the Court ordered him to give security for costs. Mann v. Bertram, 8 Law J. C.P. 155, s. c. 4 M. & P. 215.

Security for costs to the satisfaction of the Master, ordered to be given by a person residing abroad who sought to defend in an action of ejectment as landlord, upon the usual landlord's rule. Doe d. Hudson v. Jameson, 4 M. & R. 570.

Security for costs not required from a bankrupt plaintiff resident abroad. Roper v. Phillips, 3 M. & R. 84.

A plaintiff will not be required to give security for costs, or disclose his place of residence, where there is no doubt whether he sues in his own right, and it does not appear that he is out of the kingdom. Lloyd v. Davis, 1 Tyrw. 533.

(G) TAXATION OF.

Where two of three defendants defend together, and the third alone, the costs of all (in the event of a verdict for them) should be taxed together. Smith v. Campbell, 8 Law J. C.P. 277, s. c. 6 Bing. 637, s. c. 4 M. & P. 467.

It is not requisite that a bill for business in bankruptcy should be taxed under the statute 6 Geo. 4. c. 16. s. 14, before the commencement of an action. Crowder v. Davies, 3 Y. & J. 433.

A bill of costs was delivered by the solicitor in 1809, and shortly afterwards paid by the client; between that time and March 1817, four other bills of costs were delivered, and various payments were made on account. In November 1817, a sixth bill was delivered, when the client paid the general balance due on the bills of costs, at the same time stating, that he would insist on having the bills taxed; an application for taxation to a Judge at law in 1818, and an application to the Court of King's Bench in 1819, failed, from circumstances not involving the merits of the question. Some attempts at a compromise were made from time to time, and the client was obliged on three or four occasions to leave England, in order to attend to urgent business in foreign countries; but at length, in 1824, a motion was made to have the bills referred for taxation, supported by evidence that some of the items of charge were improper. The Court ordered that the bill last delivered should be taxed generally; and that the five antecedent bills should be referred to the Master, with a direction that the client should deliver to the solicitor a schedule of the items complained of, and that the Master should exercise as large a discretion as he might think fit, with respect to the evidence on which he should proceed in forming his judgment concerning these items. Scougall v. Campbell, 3 Russ. 545.

It appearing, upon a reference to tax an agent's bill of costs in a Chancery suit, that he never had been a solicitor of the court, the Master was directed to disallow all the items, except those for disbursements made to his clerk in court. Sumner v. Ridgeway, 1 Russ. & M. 748.

After the plaintiffs' costs had been taxed and paid, it was discovered that their agent in the cause had never been admitted as a solicitor; and an order was thereupon made, that the Master should review his taxation, and disallow all such items as did not consist of fees paid to the clerk in court, with a view to having them refunded. Coates v. Hawkyard, 1 Russ. & M. 746.

The Master was ordered to tax the costs of all parties, and the amount was directed to be paid out of the assets of the testator in the cause, by his executors, who were at liberty to pay the costs of certain parties to A B, their solicitor. A B was an attorney of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, but had never been admitted as a solicitor in the Court of Chancery; and the Master, for that reason, disallowed the whole of his charges, except what he had paid to his clerk in court. He had, however, previously received from his clients, to the full amount of his bills. The clients then petitioned for an order on the Master to review his certificate, and tax A B's bills; but their petition was dismissed. Prebble v. Boghurst, 2 Sim. 246.

If an attorney, after the expiration of the month, commence an action against his client for the amount of his bill, and the client afterwards apply to have it taxed, though on taxation more than a sixth be taken off, the attorney will not be liable to the costs of the taxation.

But if the client obtain an order for taxation, before the commencement of the action by the attorney, the latter will be liable to the costs of taxation, if the bill be reduced by a sixth. Jay v. Coaks, 7 Law J. K.B. 32, s. c. 8 B. & C. 635, s. c. 3 M. & R. 25; s. p. Quarman v. Veale, 7 Law J. K.B. 42, s. p. Harbyn v. Mills, 7 Law J. K.B. 336; s. c. 9 B. & C. 755.

Where the plaintiff's attorney, in an arrangement with the defendant, exacted from him the payment of costs as between attorney and client; and the bill was reduced on taxation from 27*l.* to 9*l.*:—Held, that it was not a case within the 2 Geo. 2. c. 23, in which the attorney could be ordered to pay the costs of the taxation.

Nor would the Court introduce a precedent by exercising their jurisdiction, independent of the act, over the attorney, as one of their own officers. Sutcliffe v. Clegg, 8 Law J. K.B. 280.

An attorney liable to pay the costs of a taxation of his bill, having promised to pay those costs if an account were given him, not liable to the costs of an application to the Court, made without sending such account. Keeling v. Heude, 9 Law J. C.P. 225.

Injunction granted to restrain an action for the amount of a solicitor's bill, which had been taxed after the commencement of the action, and more than one-sixth had been taken off, but the costs of taxation had not been ascertained. Walton v. Johnson—Heselton v. Johnson, 2 Sim. 456.

(H) Payment of, how enforced.

Under a commission of delegates in the ordinary form, a proceeding after sentence, to enforce payment of the costs, is a proceeding incident to the principal cause, and requires the presence and consent of three delegates. And a writ de contumace capiendo, founded upon a significavit in the names of two only, was accordingly quashed. Rex v. Blake, 9 Law J. K.B. 142, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 139.

The plaintiff's attorney having applied by letter to the defendant for the payment of a debt, the latter four days afterwards paid the amount to the plaintiff, not knowing that a writ had been previously sued out against him. The plaintiff's attorney afterwards caused the defendant to be arrested on a writ sued out before the payment was made to the plaintiff:—The Court directed the proceedings to be stayed without costs. Reeks v. Wasp, 7 Law J.C.P. 69, s. c. 5 Bing. 190, s. c. 2 M. & P. 304.

(I) Costs in the Ecclesiastical Court.

Costs are peculiarly in the discretion of the Court. Delay is a ground for refusing them. Headington v. Holloway, 3 Hag. Ec. 280.

But that discretion is guided by precedent. Goodall v. Gray, 2 Hag. Ec. 374.

The principle on which costs are given out of the estate, is that the party was led into the suit by the state of the deceased's testamentary papers. Hilton v. Walker, 1 Hag. Ec. 74.

A suit by the wife against her husband having abated by the wife's death, the Court will not, at the petition of the proctor, direct the costs incurred by the wife to be paid by the husband. Cheale v. Cheale, 1 Hag. Ec. 374.

Bills of costs between a proctor and his party are of common law cognizance; the Ecclesiastical Court has no jurisdiction over them; the examination of such bills by the deputy registrar is only by consent and ex gratiâ, and neither party is thereby bound as to the amount.

The Court will not direct the deputy registrar to allow the solicitor of a party, who has a new proctor, to be present at the examination by consent of the bill of costs of his former proctor; such an attendance being unusual and unnecessary to the purposes of justice.

The Ecclesiastical Court can enforce the payment of costs, where one party is condemned in costs to the other party; and such costs are then taxed by the Judge in open court, on the report of the deputy registrar, subject to objection from either party. Peddle v. Evans, 1 Hag. Ec. 684—686.

On appeal in a pew cause from condemning churchwardens in costs,—Held, first, that giving or refusing costs is not a matter absolutely unappealable; though such appeals, especially for trifling sums, are much to be discouraged. Secondly, that an appeal is perempted by doing any subsequent act in furtherance of the sentence—viz. attending taxation of costs. Third, that churchwardens were properly condemned in costs, where the party proceeded against, in substance, succeeded, and the suit was rendered necessary by their undue suppression of information. Lloyd v. Poole, 3 Hag. Ec. 477.

In general the husband is bound to defray the wife's costs, and also to provide alimony pendente lite; but when the wife has separate means, which the Court deems sufficient for her defence and subsistence, she is not entitled to alimony nor costs during suit: she then stands on the common footing of a litigant party, and, on proving her case, has a primâ facie right to costs. It is, however, discretionary with courts, on a consideration of all circumstances, to relax the rule. D'Aguilar v. D'Aguilar, 1 Hag. Ec. 788.

Costs in the courts below not allowed to be taxed in the Court of Appeal, as between husband and wife; or (before sentence) as between party and party.

Costs taxed de die in diem, between husband and wife, though she had a separate income. Westmeath v. Westmeath, 2 Hag. Ec. 133.

When a party is out of the kingdom, the Court will direct him to give security for costs. Hillam v. Walker, 1 Hag. Ec. 72.

The costs of exceptive allegations tendered on both sides, (the admission whereof was suspended till the final hearing, and then not prayed to be received,) not allowed to be taxed against a party condemned in costs. Bird v. Bird, 2 Hag. Ec. 553.

Where a bill of particulars for business done in the Court of Delegates had been recently delivered, though a general account had been rendered, settled, and paid, three years before, the Court, on petition, (though such petition contained impertinent matter,) directed the bill to be examined by the registrar, in order, first, that the suitor might decide as to proceeding in other courts, to recover the excess (if any); secondly, to found a complaint against the proctor, if the charges were exorbitant or fraudulent; but the Court cannot notice an asserted undertaking, that disbursements only, and those not exceeding a certain sum, should be charged; nor will it make an order for the production of vouchers, which, if demanded, are produced as of course before the registrar. On the registrar's report, that the bill was just and reasonable, and on the proctor for the complainant declaring he proceeded no further, costs against the petitioner were not given, only because he was almost a pauper.

When a detailed bill of costs has been delivered and long acquiesced in, and payment made after the suit was at an end, and when the party was not inops concilii, the party would not be entitled to have it referred to the registrar for examination: aliter, where the payment took place without a detailed bill, and application for reference to the registrar was made shortly after the delivery of the bill.

A client is under all circumstances entitled to a detailed bill from his proctor. Peddle v. Toller, 3 Hag. Ec. 283—97.

COVENANTS.

(A) Construction.
(B) Valid or void.
(C) Pleading and Damages.
[In Leases, see Lease.]

[Needham v. Smith, 4 Russ. 318, Dig. Law J. 173.]

A, by deed, on his marriage, covenanted to settle by his will, all his real and personal property to his wife for life, with remainder to the issue of the marriage as tenants in common.

By the same deed, an estate of the intended wife was conveyed to the use of A for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live; remainder to the wife for life; remainder to the children of the marriage, as the husband and wife should appoint; in default, over.

Another estate was conveyed, in contemplation of the marriage, to the use of A for life; remainder to the intended wife for life; remainder to the children of the marriage, as A and wife, or the survivor, should appoint; in default, over.

The marriage took effect, and there were issue three children (daughters), B, C, and D.

After the marriage another estate was conveyed to the use of A for life; remainder to his wife for life; remainder to the children of the marriage, as A and his wife, or the survivor, should appoint; in default, over.

A and his wife, by deed, appointed one of the estates to the use of B for ninety-nine years, if she should so long live; with remainder to the use of her children, as she should appoint; and reserved a power of revocation; and he made similar appointments of the other two estates to C and D respectively.

B married, and died in the lifetime of A, leaving her husband and three children.

C died in the lifetime of A, intestate and unmarried.

D remained unmarried.

A, (being possessed of considerable real estates, besides those appointed to B, C, and D, and also much personalty), by his will gave all his real estate to trustees, upon trust for his wife for life; after her death, as to one moiety, in trust (subject to the provision thereout in favour of D,) for the three children of B, their heirs and assigns; and, as to the other moiety, in trust for D and her husband (if any) jointly for life, and then for the survivor for life; after his or her death, in trust for the children of D, as she and her husband should appoint. The will then gave out of the first moiety to D, in case of her marriage, an annual sum equal to that which the testator had settled upon the marriage of B.

Held, that, by the construction of the covenant, all the children took as tenants in common, and had vested interests from the time of their birth:

That the parties were bound to elect between the provisions made by the settlement and the will; and that the three appointments were bad, except in so far as they gave the estates for ninety-nine years. Nayler v. Wetherell, 9 Law J. Chanc. 125.

The vendor of a public house covenanted with the purchaser not to carry on the business of a publican within the distance of half a mile. Upon a question, whether this covenant had been broken, it appeared that if the distance were measured along the footpath, with an occasional crossing of the carriage way, so as to arrive at the point by the shortest possible mode, the distance was within half a mile:—Held, that for this purpose, the mode of admeasurement which had been taken was correct, and that the covenant was broken. If the distance were to be measured by drawing a straight line, or, as it is popularly termed, as the crow flies, whether this would be a correct mode of admeasurement for such a purpose—quære. Leigh v. Hind, 7 Law J. K.B. 313, s. c. 9 B. & C. 774, s. c. 4 M. & R. 519.

Where the captain of a post-office packet covenanted with the owners thereof, and their several and respective executors, administrators, and assigns, to pay to such owners, and their and every of their several and respective executors, administrators, and assigns, the sum received from government for the hire of the ship, and a proportion of the freight, to be paid to them at the banking-house of Messrs. B. & Co., or such other bankers as the captain and the said owners should appoint, and in such shares and proportions as were set against their several names; and further covenanted to pay to the said owners, their executors, &c., the appraised value of the tackle and apparel of the ship, &c., in their shares and proportions aforesaid:—Held, that these were several covenants, under which the owners had separate interests, and whereon they could not maintain a joint action. Serrante v. James, 8 Law J. K.B. 64, s. c. 10 B. & C. 610.

(B) Valid or void.

A covenant, by a lessee with the lessor, to indemnify the parish in which the demised premises lay "from all costs by reason of his (the lessee's) taking an apprentice or servant who should thereby gain a settlement:"—Held valid. Walsh v. Fussell, 7 Law J. C.P. 261, s. c. 6 Bing. 163, s. c. 3 M. & P. 457. See 7 Law Journ. C.P. 25.

Covenants in general restraint of trade are void. Particular restraints are good, if not unreasonable, and made with consideration; but where the restraint is larger than is necessary for the protection of the party for whose security it is made, it is void. Hornor v. Graves, 9 Law J. C.P. 192, s. c. 7 Bing. 735, s. c. 5 M. & P. 768.

(C) Pleading and Damages.

In an action on a covenant that a married woman should join in levying a fine, and executing a deed to declare the uses thereof, in order to bar her dower,—it was held, that the plaintiff's declaration, which averred merely an application to, and refusal by her to join in a fine, and to execute the deed, was insufficient, in not averring an application to the covenantor, in order that he might have an opportunity of seeking to obtain her consent. Tooley v. Nicholls, 7 Law J. K.B. 17.

Defendant covenanted, by his marriage settlement, to pay off, within a year, certain incumbrances on his estate, to the amount of 19,000*l*. On his failing so to do, and being sued by the trustees on his covenant, he suffered judgment by default. The estates were of sufficient value, and no special damage was averred. The jury having assessed the damages at 1*s*., the Court ordered a new inquisition;—holding that the plaintiffs were, at law, entitled to damages to the full amount of the incumbrances; and that the defendant must seek relief in equity. Lethbridge v. Mytton, 9 Law J. K.B. 330, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 772.

COUNTY PALATINE.

Service of a mandate obtained upon a non-bailable writ of latitat into a county palatine, or of the latitat itself, will suffice. Ashbrook v. Townley, 9 Law J. K.B. 207, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 416.

COUNTY TREASURER.

A bond given by a county treasurer pursuant to the statute 12 Geo. 2. c. 29, with a condition for the performance of his duties as county treasurer, renders him liable in respect of a breach of duty created by act of Parliament passed subsequent to that under the authority of which the bond is taken, but before the taking of the bond.

The Militia Act, 43 Geo. 3. c. 47, (sect. 9, 16, and 17,) casts certain duties upon a county treasurer: among them, that of transmitting to other county treasurers accounts of money paid by him in pursuance of the act, and which it is the duty of the other county treasurers to reimburse him.

Held, that it is no part of the duty of the county treasurer to demand or recover such money from the other county treasurers.

Nor is it any part of the duty cast upon the county treasurer, after he has duly transmitted such account to the other county treasurers, and payment has not been made, to notify to the Sessions the fact of the transmitting to, and of the non-payment by, the other county treasurers.

Nor, where he has paid to another county treasurer a sum chargeable to a parish in his own county, is it a part of his duty to obtain from the Justices at Sessions an order upon their parish officers to reimburse him. Farr v. Hollis, 8 Law J. K.B. 11, s. c. 9 B. & C. 315, s. c. 4 M. & R. 230.

COURT.

The Court refused to award a procedendo, where a cause had been removed by pone from the county court, after a judgment by default, and notice of the execution of a writ of inquiry. Godley v. Marsden, 8 Law J. C.P. 138, s. c. 6 Bing. 433, s. c. 4 M. & P. 138.

Where magistrates are sitting judicially (as in the case of an information for an offence against the game laws), whether an attorney has a right to be present, and, in that character, to take a part in the proceedings on behalf of the accused—quære.

But, in general, the court in which magistrates are sitting judicially is an open court, to which the public have a right of access; and, supposing there to be room, that a person conducts himself properly, and there be no reason to justify an order for his removal, every one of the public has a right to be present.

Accordingly, where magistrates sitting judicially ordered an attorney, who attended on behalf of the accused, to be turned out of the room:—Held, that (independent of any question as to his right as an attorney) he was entitled to maintain an action of trespass for being thus turned out, on the ground of right, as one of the public, to be present. Daubney v. Cooper, 8 Law J. K.B. 21, s. c. 10 B. & C. 237, 830.

An attorney, merely in that character, has no right to insist upon taking part as an advocate upon proceedings before Justices under a penal statute, where it is the practice of the Court in which the proceeding is pending not to allow persons to practise as attornies or advocates. Collier v. Hicks, 9 Law J. K.B. 300, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 663.

COURT MARTIAL.

A purser in the navy, charged with making false entries in the ship's books, for the purpose of fraud, is liable to be tried by a Naval Court Martial, under the 36th of the articles incorporated in the 22 Geo. 2. c. 33. Man v. Owen, 7 Law J. K.B. 255, s. c. 9 B. & C. 595, s. c. 4 M. & R. 449.

[Grant of leases of lands, &c. in the Duchy of Cornwall, 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 5, 9 Law J. Stat. 6.]

Although the King holds lands as Duke of Lancaster, he holds them as King also; and all his prerogatives belong to him, with reference to such lands, as they do with regard to lands which belong to him immediately in right of his Crown. Alcock v. Cooke, 7 Law J. C.P. 126, s. c. 5 Bing. 340, s. c. 2 M. & P. 625.

CUSTOM.

A custom, that no person, not free of the city of London, should sell or put to sale any wares, &c., within the city or liberties, by retail, or keep any shop for use of any art, &c., warrants a bye-law forbidding any but freemen to shew, sell, or put to sale, &c., or to use any art, &c., within the same; the difference between keeping a shop for the use of an art, and the using of an art, and the other slight difference, being considered as merely verbal. Clark v. Denton, 8 Law J. K.B. 333, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 92.

CUSTOMS.

CUTTING AND MAIMING.

[See MALICIOUS INJURY.]

DAMAGES.

If by the negligence of A, in building his house adjoining to that of B, the house of B is thrown down,—A is liable only to such sum in damages as was the value of the old house, and not the whole expense of building a new one. Lukin v. Godsall, Pea. 15. [Kenyon]

In an action for an injury to the plaintiff's premises, in consequence of the pulling down of the defendant's house adjoining, the plaintiff may recover damages for any injury actually caused by the negligence of the defendant, although he has not himself used those precautions which it was his duty to adopt against such injury. Walters v. Pfeil, 1 M. & M. 362. [Tenterden]

The plaintiff had accepted a bill for 148*l.*, for the accommodation of T, who gave it to N for a particular purpose. N borrowed 10*l.* of the defendant, and gave him this bill as a security. This sum of 10*l.* was repaid by N, but the bill was not given up; and the defendant indorsed it for value to K, who, when it was dishonoured, caused both the plaintiff and T to be arrested; and the plaintiff paid the amount of the bill, and the costs of both arrests:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of the bill from the defendant, but not the costs of the two arrests. Roach v. Thompson, 4 C. & P. 194, s. c. 1 M. & M. 487. [Tenterden]

A party employing another to present a bill for acceptance is entitled to recover nominal damages against such agent, if he fails to present it, although no real damage whatever is occasioned by the neglect, the bill and costs having been paid by other persons liable on it. Van Wart v. Woolley, 1 M. & M. 520. [Tenterden]

Where a general judgment has been given upon several counts, some of which are good, and some bad, and a court of error for this reason reverse the judgment,—whether such Court should, since the 6 Geo. 4. c. 50. s. 60, award a writ of inquiry, and not a venire de novo—quære. Fisher v. Clement, 8 Law J. K.B. 176, s. c. 10 B. & C. 472.

A nolle prosequi entered up after judgment by default, is a remittitur of the damages, and no second action can be brought for such damages. Boaden v. Horne, 9 Law J. C.P. 229, s. c. 7 Bing. 716, s. c. 5 M. & P. 756.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

[See ASSIGNMENT.]

(A) DEBTOR.
(B) CREDITOR.
(a) Rights and Liabilities.
(b) Priority of Payment.
(C) COMPOSITION.

(A) DEBTOR.

Where money has been levied under an execution, and paid to the sheriff, the debtor is discharged; and the remedy of the creditor is against the sheriff only. Morland v. Pellatt, 7 Law J. K.B. 54, s. c. 8 B. & C. 722.

The discharge of a defendant in Scotland, under the law there called the cessio bonorum, is not pleadable in bar to an action for debt which arose in this country, unless it appear that the creditor has received a dividend, or otherwise claimed the benefit of that law.

The mere appearance of the English creditor before the Scotch Court, and his opposing the debtor's discharge under the law of cessio bonorum, is not such a claiming by him of the benefit of that law, as to deprive him of his right afterwards to sue the debtor in England.

But an English debt, proveable under a Scotch sequestration, is barred by the 54 Geo. 3. c. 137. Phillips v. Allan, 8 Law J. K.B. 2, s. c. 8 B. & C. 477, s. c. 2 M. & R. 576.

An acceptance of the debtor, taken as payment by the creditor, must be taken as a discharge, if not proved to be destroyed, although it is proved to be lost, and although the creditor offer to indemnify by rule against any claim on the bill. Woodford v. Whitsley, 1 M. & M. 517. [Parke]

Where a creditor takes a bill from the agent of the debtor for the amount of the debt, and renews it from time to time at the request of the agent, his so doing will not discharge the debtor, unless the latter shew that he dealt with his agent upon the faith of the money being paid; or that, in some other mode, he has been prejudiced by the fact of the creditor so dealing with the agent.

Accordingly, goods were sold upon a certain credit; before the time for credit expired, the creditor applied to the agent of the debtor to give him a bill, deducting the discount in respect of the credit unexpired. The agent accordingly gave his acceptance, deducting the discount. At this time, the agent had money in hand sufficient to pay more than the debt. When the bill became due, it was renewed, and again renewed; and the renewals carried the time beyond the expiration of the credit. There had been no adjustment of accounts between the agent and his principal, the debtor. The agent failed, largely in debt to his principal:—Held, that, inasmuch as it did not appear that the debtor had sustained any prejudice, or been misled by this course of dealing with his agent, the creditor had a right to recover against him for the unsatisfied debt. Robinson v. Read, 7 Law J. K.B. 237, s. c. 9 B. & C. 449, s. c. 4 M. & R. 349.

(B) CREDITOR.

(a) Rights and Liabilities.

[Selby v. Selby, 4 Russ. 336, Law J. Dig. 178.]

[See 1 Will. 4. c. 47, 10 Law J. Stat. 102, consolidating and amending the laws for facilitating the payment of debts out of real estate.]

Where a debtor sends bills to his creditor to be discounted, and applied to a particular purpose, the creditor cannot apply the proceeds of the bills to his own debt, and against the particular purpose for which they were remitted.

If in such a case the debtor become bankrupt, his assignees may maintain either trover for the bills, or money had and received for their produce; and, in the latter case, the creditor will not be entitled to set off his old debt. Buchannan v. Findlay, 7 Law J. K.B. 314, s. c. 9 B. & C. 738, s. c. 4 M. & R. 593.

Where an estate is settled to the usual uses to bar dower, and then a judgment is entered up against the owner of the estate, and before execution is taken out the owner of the estate appoints it to a purchaser, the judgment creditor's lien is defeated. Tunstall v. Trappes (Lawson's case), 3 Sim. 300.

An assignment of property for the purpose of securing debts due and to be due, with a power of sale upon giving six months' notice, is only a collateral security; and, without a special clause to that effect, does not suspend the remedy by action against the debtor. Emes v. Widdowson, 4 C. & P. 151. [Tindal]

A receiver appointed in a suit instituted by incumbrancers, was ordered to keep down the incumbrances out of the rents, and to pay the residue to the owner of the estate. A judgment creditor may file a bill against the owner and receiver, without making the other incumbrancers parties, to have his debt satisfied out of the surplus rents. Lewis v. Lord Zouche, 2 Sim. 388.

A father conveys his estates to trustees for paying off annuities granted by his son, together with the arrears, and also the son's debts, if they thought proper to pay them; remainder to himself for life, remainder to his son in fee. The annuities were mentioned in a schedule, but the annuitants were not parties to the deed. The father and son then execute other deeds, varying the former trusts. Motion by one of the scheduled creditors, to restrain the trustees from executing the trusts of the subsequent deeds, until they had performed the trusts of the first, refused. Walwyn v. Coutts, 3 Sim. 14.

In a suit instituted in 1814, to administer the personal estate of an intestate, who died in 1807, the Master reported that no debts had been proved; and by the decree on further directions, in 1817, the whole of the residue was apportioned and distributed; but as the plaintiff was then an infant, his share, amounting to four-ninths of the fund, was retained, and carried to his separate account. In 1825, a foreign prince, claiming to be a creditor of the intestate, petitioned for leave to prove his debt against the sum remaining in court; and the plaintiff, coming of age soon after, applied to have that sum paid out:—Held, that the creditor was not precluded by the previous proceedings, or the lapse of time, from tendering such proof before the Master; but that every defence should be allowed there, which would have been competent upon a new bill; that the debt, if established, must be restricted, as against the fund in court, to that proportion which the plaintiffs' share bore to the whole amount distributed; and therefore, that after reserving a sum equal to four-ninths of the claim, the residue of the fund ought to be paid out to the plaintiff. Greig v. Somerville, 1 Russ. & M. 338.

A testator gave lands to A, in strict settlement, and a manor to B, in strict settlement. On his death a creditor's bill was brought for the administration of assets; and it appearing that the testator owed a debt on mortgage, and some specialties, the Master was directed to ascertain what proportion the properties contained in the several devises ought to bear, and to raise the amount by sale or mortgage. The Master sold the manor and lands. The title to the lands was completed, and the purchase money paid; but no good title could be made to the manor. The report was confirmed in 1798. B continued in the possession of the manor, and never paid the contribution; and, in 1824, he and his eldest son, having suffered a recovery, sold it to J. T. F. In 1825, A died; and, in the same year, his eldest son, tenant in tail, filed his bill against B and his eldest son, and the purchaser:—Decreed, that this was a purchase pendente lite; and the contribution reported by the Master to be paid from the estate devised to B, with interest and costs, was ordered to be raised by sale and mortgage, and paid to the plaintiff. Kinsman v. Kinsman, 1 Tam. 399, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 617.

(b) Priority of Payment.

By deed between A and B, it was agreed that a sum in the hands of A, but belonging to B, should be laid out in the funds, in A's name, in trust for B. A died, never having invested the money:—Held, that B was a specialty creditor of A for the amount. Mavor v. Davenport, 2 Sim. 227.

Husband and wife being lessees of a rectory, assign it to trustees, in trust to sell, and pay certain bonds of the husband, and mortgages on his freehold estates; and, by a deed of even date, the husband, in consideration of his wife having joined in the assignment, conveys his freehold estates in trust for himself and his wife for their lives, and, after their deaths, to be sold for benefit of their children. The produce of the rectory was not sufficient to pay, in full, both the bonds and mortgages:—Held, that the bond creditors had no right, as against the children, to throw the mortgagees upon the produce of the freeholds. Boasman v. Johnston, 3 Sim. 377.

Where an estate is sold under a decree of the Court for payment of debts, a judgment creditor will be entitled to be paid out of the whole produce of the estate, and not out of a moiety only. Tunstall v. Trappes—Lawson's case, 3 Sim. 300.

(C) Composition.

A conveyance by a debtor, to trustees for payment of scheduled creditors, who do not execute the deed, or conform to its terms, cannot be enforced by the creditors. Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, 3 Sim. 1.

The plaintiff agreed to accept a composition of 10*s.* in the pound for a debt, on his debtor's brother's agreeing to supply him with coals to the amount of the remaining moiety of the debt. The plaintiff was the last person who signed the agreement for the composition. The coals were delivered, and the plaintiff afterwards sued the surety on the composition note:—Held, that the note was void, the stipulation for the coals being a fraud on the rest of the creditors. Knight v. Hunt, 7 Law J. C.P. 165, s. c. 5 Bing. 432, s. c. 3 M. & P. 18.

By an agreement entered into between the defendant and his creditors, reciting that the defendant was indebted to his said creditors in the several sums of money set opposite to their respective names in the schedule thereunder written, the creditors, in consideration of a composition of 10*s.* in the pound, upon and in respect of their said several debts, agreed to execute a general release. This deed was executed by the plaintiffs. Besides the amount inserted in the schedule as the debt of the plaintiffs, they held a bill, of which the insolvent was the drawer. This bill, having afterwards been dishonoured by the acceptor, was put in suit against the insolvent:—Held, that the release contained in the deed operated in discharge of the insolvent's liability, the concealment of the amount of the debt being in effect a fraud upon the other creditors. Britten v. Hughes, 7 Law J. C.P. 188, s. c. 5 Bing. 460, s. c. 3 M. & P. 77.

A creditor, in respect of two demands, seized the goods of B, his debtor, under an execution for one of the two debts, and afterwards at a meeting of some of the creditors of B, when a composition was proposed, declared that he would not agree to the composition, unless the debt for which the goods had been seized, were secured to him; C, who was not a creditor, guaranteed the debt, and A withdrew his execution, and signed the composition deed:—Held, that the bargain was a fraud upon the rest of the creditors, and void. Coleman v. Waller, 3 Y. & J. 212.

An agreement between a debtor and certain of his creditors, by which they agree "to accept payment, by his covenanting to pay to a trustee a third of his income and executing a warrant of attorney, as a collateral security;" so far binds each of the creditors parties to it, that neither can sue upon his original demand, unless the debtor has failed to perform his part of the agreement. Good v. Cheesman, 9 Law J. K.B. 234, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 328.

A tradesman, holding a situation in a public office, being indebted to several persons, they met together, and signed an agreement, in which they stated, that he, being unable to make immediate payment, they agreed to accept payment by his covenanting and agreeing to pay to a trustee of their nomination, one-third of his annual income, and executing a power of attorney as a collateral security. The debtor did not sign the agreement, but attended the meeting, and expressed his willingness to comply with its terms. Before anything had been done in execution of the agreement, one of the creditors, who had signed it, brought an action against the defendant for his original debt:—Held, that he could not recover. Good v. Cheesman, 4 C. & P. 513. [Tenterden]

Trustees under a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, refused to allow one of them to sign the deed, on the ground that they had discovered, after the assignment was agreed on, that his claim was founded on usurious transactions:—Held, that this refusal remitted him to his original rights. Garrard v. Woolner, 4 C. & P. 471. [Tindal]

The defendants entered into an agreement with their creditors, by which trustees were appointed, to whom all the estate and effects of the defendants were to be conveyed and assigned, until each creditor was paid in full; the deed to contain "all usual and necessary clauses and conditions." The trustees took possession of the personal property, and paid 10*s.* in the pound on the debts. A deed of conveyance of the real property was prepared, which the defendants refused to execute, it not containing a clause of release. The deed had not then been executed by all the creditors, and the meeting at which it was produced was therefore adjourned. The plaintiffs in the meantime sued for the residue of their debt:—Held, that no sufficient breach of the agreement by the defendants had been shewn, to remit the plaintiffs to their original right. Tatlock v. Smith, 8 Law J. C.P. 54, s. c. 6 Bing. 339, s. c. 3 M. & P. 676.

Trustees under an assignment for the benefit of creditors, are entitled (like assignees under the Bankrupt and Insolvent Debtors Acts) to a reasonable time to ascertain whether property held under a lease by the debtor, can be made available for the benefit of the creditors or not; but if they act in such a way as to render the premises of less value to the lessor, or deal with the property as if the lease were vested in them, they will by that conduct make themselves personally liable for the payment of rent and performance of covenants. Carter v. Warne, 4 C. & P. 191, s. c. 1 M. & M. 479. [Tenterden]

DECEIT.

In an action on the case for wilful misrepresentations as to the character of an agent, whereby damage accrued to the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant was liable on the ground of the falsehood of the representations so made by him, without express proof of malice. Foster v. Charles, 8 Law J. C.P. 118, s. c. 6 Bing. 296, s. c. 4 M. & P. 61.

DEEDS.

(A) Execution and Delivery.
(B) Construction and Operation.
(C) Validity of, and where set aside.
(D) Registration.
(E) Remedies on.

(A) Execution and Delivery.

Where a defendant in ejectment produces a deed called for by the lessor of the plaintiff, such production does not dispense with the necessity of proof of the execution, unless the defendant claims some interest under the deed. Doe d. Wilkins v. Marquis of Cleveland, 8 Law J. K.B. 74, s. c. 9 B. & C. 864, s. c. 4 M. & R. 666.

Where a party produced a deed which had been for some time in his possession, and offered it in evidence against a party who formerly claimed and received a benefit under it, but afterwards abandoned that benefit, and gave up the deed to the party then producing it in evidence:—Held, that this did not dispense with the evidence of the attesting witness. Vacher v. Cocks, 8 Law J. K.B. 341, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 148.

An instrument executed by mark, may be proved from inspection by a person who has seen the party so execute instruments. George v. Surrey, 1 M. & M. 516.

It is not necessary in the absence of the subscribing witness, to prove the handwriting of the party executing the deed, it is enough to prove the handwriting of the witness. Kay v. Brookman, 3 C. & P. 555, s. c. 1 M. & M. 286. [Tindal]

Where the subscribing witness to a deed cannot be produced, proof of his handwriting is sufficient evidence of the execution by the parties, whose signature purports to be affixed to it, without any further evidence of their identity. Kay v. Brookman, 2 M. & M. 286, s. c. 3 C. & P. 555. [Best]

Upon a question of settlement by apprenticeship, the indenture was produced, apparently executed by all parties: and the name of "George Jones" affixed to the attestation, as the attesting witness; but without any description. It was proved, that diligent search had been made in the place where the indenture was executed, but no person of that name could be there found; and that inquiry had also been made of the parties to the indenture, but no information as to the witness could be obtained from them:—but that between two and three miles from the place, there was a George Jones, who had been applied to, and who said he knew nothing at all about the matter. He was not produced.

Upon this evidence, the Sessions refused to receive the parties themselves to prove the execution of the indenture; being of opinion that enough had not been done to prove the handwriting of the attesting witness. The Court of King's Bench held the Sessions to have decided rightly. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Muscleston, 7 Law J. M.C. 96.

(B) Construction and Operation.

General words, sufficient to pass a reversion, will pass it, unless the party using them indicate a clear intention to the contrary.

Accordingly, a settlor had a life-estate in a tenement in Wootton, of which he was also entitled to the reversion after other life-estates. He subsequently executed a deed, by which he professed to advance his sons. He granted a particular property in Wotton, which he described, to certain uses. Then followed general words, not describing the first-mentioned property in terms, but sufficient to include it. He also expressly passed his household goods. One of the trusts was, the paying to himself an annuity for life: another was, to pay thereout 10*l.* a year to one of his sons; but this 10*l.* a year could not properly have been thus charged upon the first-mentioned property:—Held, that these circumstances did not shew a clear intention to limit the effect of the general words: and consequently, that the life-interest of the settlor and the reversion passed by the general words. Doe d. Pell v. Jayes, 9 Law J. K.B. 82, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 593.

The defendant drew certain bills of exchange as surety for C H, the acceptor. By a deed to which C H, the defendant, the plaintiff, and one B, were parties, C H conveyed his lease, fixtures, and effects to B, upon trust to sell the same and pay to the plaintiffs a debt due to them from C H and also the bills in question. The deed also contained a proviso that the premises should be sold, and the proceeds applied to the purposes specified in the deed, before any proceedings should be had on the bills against the defendant. The trustee, with the knowledge of the defendant, omitted to take possession under this deed; and in the meantime a commission of bankruptcy issued against C H, under which his effects were sold by the assignees:—Held, that the proviso in the deed did not under these circumstances operate as a bar to the plaintiffs' right to sue the defendant upon the bills. Lancaster v. Harrison, 8 Law J. C.P. 288, s. c. 6 Bing. 728, s. c. 4 M. & P. 561.

A person having a legal estate in certain premises as trustee, and an equitable and beneficial interest in the same estate, executes a deed which might be construed as purporting to pass either both estates, or only the equitable estate which alone he has a right to convey:—Held, that the instrument should be construed as intending to pass only the estate which he had a right to convey; for a party shall be presumed to have intended to do only that which he had a right to do, provided the instrument be fairly and reasonably capable of that construction. Fausset v. Carpenter, 2 Dow. & C. 232.

(C) Validity of, and where set aside.

[Pratt v. Barker, 4 Russ. 507, Dig. Law J. 182; Harvey v. Cooke, 4 Russ. 34, Dig. Law J. 182.]

By a deed, bearing date the 17th of April 1672, conveying a turn of an advowson, the considerations were thus stated—"The sum of 20*s.* paid to the grantor by the grantee, and for true and faithful service done unto the former by the latter; as also for divers other good and valuable causes and considerations him (the grantor) thereunto moving:"—Held, that, in the absence of all proof of fraud and covin, the consideration (regard being had to the date of the conveyance,) must be presumed to be valuable. Gully v. Bishop of Exeter, 7 Law J. C.P. 50, s. c. 5 Bing. 171, s. c. 2 M. & P. 266.

A deed was made in 1672, by which the person entitled to present in the fourth turn, (the church being then full upon the first presentation only,) in consideration of 20*s.*—of true and faithful services done—and for divers other good and valuable causes and considerations, conveyed the right to present upon the fourth turn. In 1828, such deed being pleaded in support of the title to the fourth turn, the party against whom it was set up, pleaded, that the deed was made fraudulently, in order to deceive such person as should purchase afterwards. Issue was joined upon this; and the jury found a verdict negativing fraud:—Held, that after this verdict, the Court could not hold that, in point of law, the deed was fraudulent. Gully v. Bishop of Exeter, 8 Law J. K.B. 281, s. c. 10 B. & C. 584.

A having purchased a freehold estate, and paid part of the purchase-money, died intestate, leaving two daughters his co-heiresses and next-of-kin. After his decease, on payment of the remainder of the purchase-money by the two daughters and their husbands, the estate was conveyed to the two daughters as tenants in common. By an arrangement between the two daughters and their husbands, the freehold estate and certain personal property were agreed to be taken by B, the husband of one of the daughters, (by whom the remainder of the purchase-money for the estate was recited to have been paid,) as his share of the property, and a fine was covenanted to be levied to the use of B in fee. The fine was neglected to be levied, but B remained in possession till his death, acting as absolute owner of the estate: shortly before his death, and seventeen years after the covenant to levy the fine, a deed was executed and a fine levied, by which the estate was settled to the use of B and his wife for their lives successively, with remainder to their children. A bill by the creditors of B, to set aside this settlement as voluntary and fraudulent within the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, was dismissed. Houghton v. Tate, 3 Y. & J. 486.

The grantor of a heritable bond is taken bound "to infeft and seise A B and his foresaids, on our own expenses, in the lands and others above disponed, to be holden from me of and under my immediate lawful superiors thereof, in the same manner as I hold the same myself, and for payment of the feu-duties as I pay or am bound to pay therefor." No confirmation is procured from the superior:—Held, by the House of Lords, affirming a judgment of the Court of Session, that this was a public holding, and invalid for want of confirmation. Stevenson v. Rowand, 2 Dow. & C. 104.

John Ewen, by his marriage contract, covenants that his whole property at the time of his death shall belong to the issue of the marriage. His wife dies in his lifetime, leaving a daughter, an only child, who, when about twenty-one years of age, marries a young man about the same age, and in a year after a son is born of the marriage. The husband then proposes to go abroad to improve his fortune, and Ewen, who was then a prosperous trader, persuades him and his wife to execute a deed, in the nature of a post-nuptial contract, by which, in consideration of a sum of 315*l.* they discharge him from all claims whatever on his property. They were at this time ignorant of the daughter's claims under her father and mother's marriage contract, and Ewen, attended by his man of business, brought them the deed to sign on the night of the husband's departure, and it was then executed. It was stated in the deed that Ewen had paid a moiety of the 315*l.* at the time of the execution of the contract, and that the other moiety was to be paid after his death. But in point of fact he paid down nothing at the time of the execution, but only renounced a debt of 61*l.* due to him from the husband for goods, and gave a promissory note for the other 96*l.* Ewen lived for a considerable time after; and two days after his death, by a trust deed of settlement, conveyed the bulk of his property, amounting to 14,000*l.* to trustees to build an hospital.

The daughter's post-nuptial contract reduced on the ground of fraud and circumvention. Ewen v. Bannerman, 2 Dow. & C. 74.

Maccabe, an Irish barrister, becomes casually acquainted with Mrs. Hussey, a widow lady, possessed of some property of her own, and having large expectations from an aunt. Maccabe acquires her confidence, and engages in the management of her affairs, and persuades her to give him a deed of gift of a third of the aunt's property. When that property comes into possession, he persuades her to transfer to him one-half of it for himself, and also the other half to be managed by him on her account. He makes misrepresentations to her about her son, and as to other matters, and prevails upon her to execute a release to him. Mrs. Hussey at length calls for an account, which he refuses to render. She offers him a full discharge, if he would pay her the two-thirds of her property, calculated by her at 21,000*l.* He refuses. She files her bill in equity, and the deed of gift and release are set aside, as having been obtained by fraud and undue influence and misrepresentation; and Maccabe agreed to refund 36,500*l.* to Mrs. Hussey. This decree affirmed on appeal. Maccabe v. Hussey, 2 Dow. & C. 440.

J M, a man eighty-three years old, being entitled under the provisions of a trust disposition and settlement, to the annual produce of a fund during his life, estimated at the value of 6,000*l.*, but subject to reduction in the proportion of one third, upon the event of a suit, executed a deed, by which he renounced all his interest in the fund, and assigned it to his daughter and her husband, to whom the reversion belonged, in consideration of an annuity of 40*l.* a year, to be paid to him for life out of the fund, and his funeral expenses. In a suit instituted to reduce this deed, it was admitted that he was weak and infirm, and addicted to intoxication; and it appeared that the deed was drawn up by the agents of the daughter and her husband, and that no agent or other person was employed on the part of the father. Under these circumstances the deed was held void and reduced, and the judgment affirmed on appeal. M'Diarmid v. M'Diarmid, 3 Bligh, N.S. 374.

By a deed in 1762, lands were conveyed to the use of the grantor for life, and after his death in trust for D S his daughter, the wife of R S; and after her death, to the first and other sons successively of D S by R S, with remainders over, and subject to a power of revocation. In 1763 the grantor, by a will made in execution of the power, directed and desired that if there should be no issue male of the existing marriage, the lands should stand limited (subject to the dispositions of the deed of 1762) to the first and other sons of his daughter by any other husband.

R S died in 1778, leaving D S, his widow, and four sons surviving. Soon after his death D S married R B, by whom she had a son A B.

J S, the eldest son of the first marriage, having been from infancy a person of weak capacity, in the year 1785, as soon as he came of age, joined with his mother and father-in-law, as party to a deed, by which, reciting his title as tenant in tail in remainder, subject to his mother's life-interest in the lands, and an agreement which had been made for providing thereout, a present maintenance for him; and that the younger children of his mother had been left without provision by the deed of 1762, and further reciting certain expenditure made on the premises by R B, the husband of his mother, for the benefit of the inheritance, the lands were assigned to trustees for a term of 500 years, in trust to secure to J S an annuity of —l., and subject thereto to the use of the mother for life; remainder to R B for his life, remainder to trustees for a term, to raise portions for the younger children of D M his mother, and subject thereto to the use of J S and the heirs male of his body; and in default of male issue, to such other of the children of D M, as she should appoint, and in default of appointment, to R S, E S, and A B, three of her children; remainder to her right heirs.

A fine and recovery were levied to give effect to this deed, which was registered in 1789.

J S died in 1794. In 1800 L S, the second son of the first marriage, filed a bill in Chancery against R B and D his wife, to establish the deed of 1762, and to set aside the deed of 1785 on the ground of fraud. This bill was dismissed by the plaintiff, 1805.

By deed in 1803, D, the mother, appointed the lands to A B her youngest son, subject to the payment of annuities. In 1809 the lands were, by deed executed on the marriage of A B, settled on the husband and wife, and the issue of the marriage, notwithstanding notice given to the parties by L S of his claims.

R B died in 1813; A B died in 1814, leaving a son. D, the mother, died in 1818. Upon this event L S brought an ejectment against the parties in possession, under the deed of 1785. This ejectment was not prosecuted, but in 1821, L S being dead, an ejectment was brought against the same parties by his son. Upon the trial, it was agreed between the parties that the sole question should be, whether the deed of 1785 was void at law as the deed of J S. It was sworn upon the trial, by some witnesses, that J S was not competent at the time of executing the deed, and they spoke to acts and conduct evidencing mental incapacity. On the other hand, it was by others sworn that he was competent to execute. It was admitted that the incapacity did not arise from lunacy, no evidence having been given of lunacy.

The Judge, in his charge to the jury, told them that the question for them to try was, whether J S was a person of sound mind or not, and that to constitute such unsoundness of mind as should avoid a deed at law, the person executing such a deed must be incapable of understanding and acting in the ordinary affairs of life, that it was not necessary that he should be without any glimmering of reason, and that as one test of such incapacity, the jury were at liberty to consider whether he was capable of understanding what he did by executing the deed in question, when its general purport was fully explained to him. To this direction a bill of exceptions was taken, upon the ground that the Judge refused to tell the jury that in order to avoid the deed at law, the unsoundness of mind must amount to that which constitutes idiotcy according to the strict legal definition of an idiot.

Held, that this direction was right, and that the case could not be argued or decided upon an objection that the direction was too general and vague, because such objection was not taken at the trial, and did not form part of the bill of exceptions. Ball v. Mannin, 3 Bligh, N.S. 1, s. c. 1 Dow. & C. 380.

Releases set aside as fraudulent; and that, too, though there was no express prayer that they might be set aside. Williams v. Smith, 7 Law J. Chanc. 129.

A, an army agent in Dublin, having effected a policy of insurance on his own life for 3,000*l.*, in 1819, by an informal instrument, attested by two witnesses, assigned the policy to C, who had been for many years his confidential clerk. From the time of the assignment A paid two-thirds, and C one-third of the premium. In 1821, by a more formal instrument, drawn up by a professional person, he executed a further assignment of the policy. In the first instrument, the consideration expressed for the assignment is, "regard and affection," in the second, "friendship and affection." The last assignment was drawn up by the attorney of C, and both the instruments were drawn up and executed, without the knowledge of A's family.

By a codicil to his will, A gave to C a legacy of 100*l.*, as a further mark of his regard and affection. Upon the death of A, a letter addressed to his son was found inclosed in his will, stating that the assignment had been extorted from him by C, by threats and undue influence.

Upon a bill filed by H, as executor of A, to set aside the assignment on the ground of fraud and undue influence, C, by his answer, claimed the interest under the assignment, as a compensation given to him by A, in the place of an increase of salary. Upon the depositions it appeared, in evidence, that C had given different accounts of the object of the policy—viz. that it was effected as a provision for the wife of A, and that it had been given to him, for making up the accounts of A, in a way to deceive government.

It appeared also in proof of the charge of influence, that C had declared when the codicil was in contemplation, that none should be executed unless he chose; and when the letter was found in the will, that he said he could ruin the credit of the house and the character of the testator. Upon this, and other evidence, an issue was directed at the instance of the defendant, to try whether the assignments as to two-thirds of the sum insured, were the free and voluntary acts of the testator, or extorted from him by threats or undue influence, or obtained by fraud; the defendant, upon trial of this issue, was to produce the deeds of assignment, and the attesting witnesses.

Upon the trial of the issue, the letter found inclosed in the will, was tendered in evidence by the plaintiff; but rejected. The deeds of assignment and the attesting witnesses were produced by the defendant, but the plaintiff declined proving them, and the witnesses were not examined, and the deeds not proved by either party, but other evidence was given nearly similar to that which appears upon the depositions in equity on the part of the plaintiff. The defendant produced no witnesses, whereupon the jury found that, in the event of any assignment having been made, as to two-thirds thereof, it was obtained by undue influence.

A motion to set aside this verdict, and grant a new trial, was refused; and upon a re-hearing, a decree was made in favour of the plaintiff.

This decree was affirmed on appeal. Collins v. Hare, 2 Bligh, N.S. 106, s. c. 1 Dow. & C. 139.

(D) Registration.

A term for 399 years in certain lands in Ireland, being vested in B for life, with the residue in his daughter, a settlement is made on the inter-marriage of the daughter and W, by which the whole term is conveyed to trustees, on trust to pay the rents and profits to B, the father, for life, then to W, the husband, for life, then to the daughter for life, if she survived him, and afterwards to convey the term to the first son. This settlement is not registered. On the death of B, the father, W, the husband, demises the whole term for valuable consideration to K, and the indenture is duly registered; and K afterwards assigns for like consideration his lease of the term to I:—Held, by the House of Lords, in conformity with the unanimous opinions of the attending common law Judges, that the registered indenture shall prevail over the unregistered settlement, and that the title of the assignee of the lease is to be preferred to that of the widow of W, and of the trustees under the settlement; and that this is so, whether the assignment from K to I was registered or not, for the unregistered assignment would pass the interest as between the lessee and assignee, and there is no conflicting claimant under a registered deed. And this construction of the Registry Act, 6 Ann. c. 2, holds good, whether the party executing the prior secret conveyance, and the subsequent registered deed, be the same party or not. Warburton v. Loveland, ex dem. G. & H. Ivie, 2 Dow. & C. 480.

(E) Remedies on.

Quære—Whether an illegality appearing on the face of the deed, can be taken advantage of, at the trial, on a plea of non est factum. Horner v. Graves, 9 Law J. C.P. 192, s. c. 7 Bing. 735, s. c. 5 M. & P. 768.

Where a deed purported to be made "in consideration of esteem for A T, and for divers other good considerations," evidence is admissible that it was made in consideration of an intended marriage with A T.

And it is admissible evidence of this fact, that the settlor (the future husband) instructed his solicitor to prepare the deed as a marriage settlement. And that after the deed was executed, and before the marriage, he spoke of it as such. Tull v. Parlett, 1 M. & M. 472. [Tindal]

To a bill by one who claimed estates, either as heir ex parte maternâ of G, the person last seised or as a remainder-man under the limitations of some prior settlement, charging that G had only a life-interest in the property, as would appear if the contents of a certain deed executed in 1730, and within the power of the defendant, were set forth, and praying besides discovery in aid of an ejectment, the removal of outstanding terms, and other relief connected with the action at law; a plea, that in 1766, G being then tenant in tail in possession, duly suffered a recovery of the estates in question to the use of himself in fee, and subsequently devised them to the defendant, but taking no notice of the deed of 1730, and not stating any part of its contents, was overruled. Hungate v. Gascoigne, 1 Russ. & M. 698.

DEMURRER.

(A) Where allowed.
(B) Form.
(C) Practice.

(A) Where allowed.

[Grant v. Grant, 3 Russ. 598, Dig. Law J. 187.]

A general demurrer for want of equity allowed, where it appeared on the face of the bill, that, of two co-plaintiffs, one had not any interest in the matters of the suit. Cuff v. Platell, 4 Russ. 242.

Where a bill charges a defendant with acts which would subject him to a criminal prosecution under a statute, the defendant need not plead the statute, but may demur to the bill. Fleming v. St. John, 2 Sim. 181.

After a cause was at issue, the plaintiff filed a supplemental bill, setting forth facts which occurred before the filing of the original bill, and alleging the contrary of a fact which was stated in the original bill. The defendants put in a general demurrer to the supplemental bill; which, on argument, was allowed by the Court. Coleclough v. Evans, 9 Law J. Chanc. 72.

(B) Form.

A defendant who demurs generally, does not thereby admit the truth of the bill. Thompson v. Barclay, 9 Law J. Chanc. 215.

If a foreign government has not been recognized by the King of Great Britain, the Court will, upon demurrer, consider such government as not recognized, notwithstanding an allegation in the bill, that the government has been recognized by us. Taylor v. Barclay, 7 Law J. Chanc. 65, s. c. 2 Sim. 213.

(C) Practice.

A demurrer to the whole of an amended bill may be filed, though the original bill has been answered.

Semble—Where a demurrer is allowed to an amended bill, the suit is entirely out of court; and the defendant is entitled to the costs of the whole suit. Jones v. Reid, 7 Law J. Chanc. 160.

Leave given to file a general demurrer after the second order for time had been taken out, the subpœna having been made returnable immediately, and there having been no wilful delay on the part of the defendants. Attorney General v. the Mayor and Corporation of Carlisle, 2 Sim. 427.

On a demurrer by a defendant, obviously for delay, the Court allowed a concilium, moved for on the last day but two of the term, to be drawn up for the last day of the term, although no rule had been given to bring in the paper-books, nor had the books been delivered, there not being a sufficient number of days to enable the plaintiff to conform to the usual practice in cases of demurrer. Cooper v. Hawkins, 9 Law J. Exch. 53, s. c. 1 C. & J. 219.

Before the plaintiff can move for judgment upon demurrer, the demurrer-books must be delivered to all the Barons; and if the defendant do not deliver his books, the plaintiff must deliver them on his behalf. Commelin v. Thompson, 1 C. & J. 461, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 346.

Demurrer not allowed to be withdrawn after judgment—nor, semble, after argument, without affidavit of merits. Farebrother v. Worsley, 9 Law J. Exch. 166, s. c. 1 C. & J. 549, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 424.

DEPARTURE.

[See Detinue.]

DEPOSITIONS.

[See Evidence.]

Magistrates should not allow depositions to be framed so as to meet the enacting words of a statute. Mills v. Collett, 7 Law J. M.C. 97, s. c. 6 Bing. 85, s. c. 3 M. & P. 242.

DETINUE.

The gist of detinue is detainer: therefore, where A declared against B, in detinue, as upon a general bailment; and B pleaded that the subject-matter was delivered, not upon a general bailment, but as a deposit for a loan of money still due; A replied a tender; and B demurred, alleging that the replication was a departure from the declaration:—Judgment was given for the plaintiff. Gladstone v. Hewitt, 9 Law J. Exch. 145, s. c. 1 C. & J. 565, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 445.

[Farmer v. Bradford, 3 Russ. 354, Dig. Law J. 191; Harvey v. Cooke, 4 Russ. 34, Dig. Law J. 190.]

A testator bequeathed Blackacre to A and B, with permission to dispose of it if they thought proper; but if it was not sold, he gave it, after the decease of either, to the survivor, and directed that, after the death of both, it should be sold, and the purchase money equally shared between the children of A and B, who were infants:—Held, that A and B took only a life estate, with a power of sale; that they could make a good title, and give discharges for the purchase-money; that, after the death of A and B, the purchase-money belonged to the remainder-men. Breedon v. Breedon, 8 Law J. Chanc. 104, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 413.

T H, by his will, devised certain freehold and leasehold property to a trustee, upon trust to permit his son, T E H, to receive the rents during his life, subject to the payment of rents and performance of the covenants reserved and contained by and in the present or future leases, whereby the leasehold premises were or should be held; and also all taxes, fines, and expenses attending the same; remainder upon trust for the sons of T E H in fee, as tenants in common. The tenant for life became bankrupt, and afterwards died. His assignees received a sum of 2,000*l.*, subsequent to the bankruptcy, for rents:—Held, that these rents were liable to the fines for renewal. Hulkes v. Barrow, 1 Tam. 264.

A testator, in the early part of his will, gave all his property among his four illegitimate children, a boy and three girls, subject to such regulations and legacies as he should thereafter mention. He then says, "As the whole of this estate is to be equally divided amongst the before-mentioned four children, or the survivor of them, a regular division must be made of the estate when each comes of age, or is married; and the share of such person is not to be considered any longer as belonging to the general stock, but to the particular person so coming of age, if a boy. When the girls, or any one of them, come of age or get married, I hereby direct that their shares may be so settled on themselves during their lives, and on their children, in equal proportions, after their deaths, that it will not be in the power of the husband, if so inclined, to injure either his wife or children." The testator then proceeds:—"Should it be the will of Almighty God to take one or more of these children unto himself, the share or shares of such children dying without issue are to be equally divided amongst the survivors; but in case of issue, these children are to inherit the share of their parents amongst them equally; and in case they die without issue, it is to return for the benefit of the survivors of those four children, or their families. Upon the reversion of any sum to the public stock, the issue of a deceased child is to have the share which its parent would have had:—Held, that the boy, on attaining twenty-one, took an absolute interest in his share. Held, that the daughters took for life, with remainder to their issue. Held, that on either daughter dying without issue, her share would go to the survivors of the four children, in the like manner as their original shares. Jackson v. Forbes, 1 Tam. 88.

Devise to executors and trustees of a freehold inheritance for a term of ten years, in trust to pay debts and legacies, and after testator's decease, to his wife for life; then to his grandson, "Thomas Chorlton, son of the late Richard Chorlton, all that my estate where I now live, and all that other estate and premises thereto belonging, situate in Pendleton aforesaid, called or known by the name of Weaste estate, now in the tenure or holding of Thomas Walker, his assigns or under-tenants, for his own use during his natural life, with remainder to the first son of the body of the said Thomas Chorlton, lawfully begotten, severally and successively in tail male, of the name of Chorlton. And for want of such lawful issue of that name, either by my said grandson Thomas Chorlton or my son John Chorlton, then I give and devise the said estate where I now live, and the Weaste estate, amongst my daughters and their children, share and share alike, to hold unto them, his, her, or their heirs for ever, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants." Thomas Chorlton suffered a recovery. He had no child.

Held, on an exception to title, taken by a purchaser under a sale by order of the Court, that the devisee could make a good title in fee to the vendee. Quære—whether, as tenant in tail or tenant for life, with remainder in tail, or tenant for life, &c., with contingent remainder over, barred by the recovery.

Quære—whether John or his issue took any estate by implication. Rushton v. Craven, 12 Price, 599.

Charges imposed by will, creating a term upon real estate, to be paid out of the rents and profits, are primâ facie to be paid out of the annual rents and profits. Such is the primâ facie meaning of the words.

The same words may mean, that the charges shall be satisfied by sale or mortgage of, or of part of, the estate, as where it would be necessary to give effect to the charge on the property, according to the intention of the testator, and where the tenant for life is also remainder-man in fee. Heneage v. Lord Andover, 10 Price, 316.

(B) Of the Devisee.

[Mortimer v. West, 3 Russ. 370, Dig. Law J. 196; Crozier v. Fisher, 4 Russ. 398, Dig. Law J. 191; Pycroft v. Gregory, 4 Russ. 526, Dig. Law J. 192.]

Under a devise by a man married at the time of making his will, and having a wife then living, but never having had any legitimate children, (the will being republished by him after her death,) giving part of his freehold estates of inheritance, except, &c., (after devising his mansion-house to his wife for life, and giving to her an annuity for life in lieu of dower, and giving the said mansion-house, after her decease, to Ann Lewis for life, provided she so long continued unmarried,) to trustees for the term of thirty-one years, and after the expiration thereof, "to the children which I may have by the aforesaid Ann Lewis, and living at my decease, or born within six months after," and all the other his estates, lands, &c. in certain counties in England and Wales, "to the use and behoof the child or children which I may have by the said Ann Lewis, as above mentioned,"—real property may be passed to such natural children so described, born before the date of the will, such a description of natural children as the objects of a devise, where they have acquired a reputation of being the children of the testator, as will distinctly and certainly point them out, being a sufficient designatio personarum.

The capacity of illegitimate offspring to take real property under a will, when termed children, depends wholly on the due description of the devisees by other means of designation; and whether it appear, from the general tenor of the will, that such offspring were meant by the testator.

Argument, founded on the particular terms of the description of the devisees, as children "which I may leave," that the words of the will should be construed as having reference to future legitimate children of the testator by the same woman, the will being submitted to be made in contemplation of a possible marriage,—rejected, as inconsistent with the general tenor of the devise, which was held to be too plain to be open to such a construction.

If the testator had married Ann Lewis after the death of his wife, and had had other children,—semble, aliter. Wilkinson v. Adam, 12 Price, 470.

A testator devises Black-acre to A, and White-acre (which is of equal value) to B; afterwards, a commission of lunacy having issued against him, White-acre is sold by the order of the Lord Chancellor, for the payment of the lunatic's debts:—A is not entitled to have any compensation out of the lands devised to B, for the loss of the lands devised to him, A. Holmes v. Goodworth, 7 Law J. Chanc. 128.

J L by his will gave to his niece the rents of houses for her life, and after her death devised the houses to her children by her late husband, in what proportions she should by her will direct. At the testator's death, the niece had nine children, but four died in her lifetime:—Held, that all the five surviving children were entitled, to the exclusion of the representatives of those who died in the lifetime of their mother. Held also, that these children took as tenants in common. Arrow v. Bellamy, 9 Law J. Chanc. 198.

(C) What Property passes.

A testator, resident in Jamaica, devised the rents, issues, and profits of his estate, called Islington and Cove's Pens, in that island, to A B:—Held, that the estate, and the slaves, mules, cattle, and machinery thereon, passed under this devise. Stewart v. Garnett, 3 Sim. 398.

A, being entitled to a Scotch heritable bond, devised it, with other property:—The heritable bond does not pass, but descends to the heir-at-law. It is immaterial that there is also a personal obligation. The debt still retains its real character as the jus nobilius. Jerningham v. Herbert, 1 Tam. 103.

Edward Gore, by his will, made in February 1801, devised all his manor, or reputed manor, of Barrow Minchin, in the county of Somerset, with the mansion-house, called Barrow Court, thereunto belonging, and the park, and also all his freehold messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments thereunto belonging, situate in the parish of Barrow Minchin and Barrow Gurney, to trustees, to the use of his eldest son, W. G. Langton, for twenty years from the day of the testator's death; and after the determination of that estate, to the use of the first and other sons of the testator's younger son, Charles Gore, in tail male; remainder to testator's grandson, J. G. Langton, and his sons, in tail male; and he directed that the persons so taking these estates in tail male should assume and use the name of Gore. He then disposed of other parts of his real property, situate in various counties, and, among other legacies, he bequeathed to his executors all arrears of rent due from any tenants of his estates in the parish of Barrow, to be laid out upon the farms, &c. appurtenant thereto; and he charged his said estate at Barrow with certain annuities. He bequeathed the residue of his personal property to his son Charles Gore. It appeared manifestly, from the whole of the will, that his intention was to dispose thereby of all his real estate. The testator died in March 1801.

The estate and manor of Barrow had been in the testator's family for several generations. In October 1800, he purchased a farm and premises, which adjoined to and were in some parts intermixed with the Barrow estate, and which were situate in the parish of Barrow Minchin and Barrow Gurney. That parish contained two hamlets, Barrow Minchin and Barrow Gurney.

The manor of Barrow Minchin was a reputed manor, without courts, quit rents, or freehold tenants. It extended beyond the hamlet of the same name, and comprised lands in the other hamlet. The gamekeeper of the manor of Barrow Minchin had been in the habit of shooting over the lands in question for several years before and after they were purchased by the testator, both in the time of the testator and of the defendant.

The testator, upon the marriage of his eldest son, had settled upon him considerable estates at a distance from Barrow Court. The son acquired also property by his wife, whose name (Langton) he took; and upon his marriage he fixed his residence upon one of the estates so acquired, at a distance from Barrow Court.

On ejectment brought by M G, son of Charles Gore, the second son of the testator, to recover the farm and premises purchased by the testator in October 1800:—Held, (on a special case submitted to the Court,) first, that the date of the purchase, the situation of the lands in question, the fact of William Gore Langton being eldest son of the testator, and having married a lady of fortune, and taking her surname, and that the ancient seat of the Gore family was at Barrow, the eldest son residing at another place, were admissible in evidence to explain the intention of the testator.

Held, secondly, that as the intention of the testator appeared manifest from the whole of the will, (if the words "thereunto belonging" had not been in it,) that the lands in question should pass as part of his Barrow estate, and as a jury might have inferred, from the fact of the gamekeeper of the manor having shot over the lands in question, that they were within the limits and part of the manor; and it was left to the Court to draw such conclusions as a jury might have drawn. The words "thereunto belonging" might be understood to mean, in a popular sense at least, "situate within the manor;" and, consequently, that the land in question passed by the will. Doe d. Gore v. Langton, 2 B. & Ad. 680.

(D) WHAT INTEREST VESTS.

[Crozier v. Fisher, 4 Russ. 398, Dig. Law J. 193.]

Testator, after devising certain real property to his heir-at-law, devised "to my daughter, E M, all that part of a messuage or tenement, with the appurtenances, which is now in the occupation of H L, situated in Ringstead, adjoining the tenement in the occupation of J M, to hold to her and her assigns, for and during the term of her natural life, if she shall so long continue a widow and unmarried; and, from and after the day of her decease, or day of marriage, which shall first happen, I give and devise the said part of a messuage or tenement, with the appurtenances, and also all that the aforesaid tenement, with the homestead and appurtenances, in the occupation of J M, and also, all that my close or orchard lying above the said homestead, &c., unto the four children of my late son:—Held, that these four grandchildren of the testator, under this devise, did not take an immediate vested interest in any part of the premises mentioned therein, but a remainder expectant on the decease or second marriage of E M, and consequently, that one of those grandchildren, a pauper, did not obtain a settlement by forty days' residence in the parish where those premises were situate, during the life and before the second marriage of E. M. Rex v. Ringstead, 7 Law J. K.B. 197, M.C. 103, s. c. 9 B. & C. 218, s. c. 4 M. & R. 67.

(E) DEVISES IN TRUST.

In a devise, the words, "and I earnestly recommend to my said wife the care and protection of my affectionate (friend), most heartily beseeching my said wife, that she will permit and suffer the said (friend) to live and reside with her, and that she will afford to the said (friend) the same kind attention and tenderness which has been always shewn her in my lifetime. And I seriously and warmly entreat my said wife, at her decease, to settle and assure to two trustees such part of my real estate as she shall think proper, for the special purpose of securing to the said (person) during her natural life, (in case she survives my said wife, but not otherwise,) such an income as will enable the said (nominee) to enjoy all those comforts of life which she has hitherto been used and accustomed to, leaving the amount of such income to the entire discretion of my said wife," although sufficient per se to raise a trust, do not do so where they are coupled with words of confidence in the discretion of the devisee, as to the exercise of a controlling power conferred upon her by the will, such as these—"And I have devised and bequeathed the whole of my said real and personal estate, hereinbefore particularly set forth, unto my said dear wife, (and which she must acknowledge not to be inconsiderable,) unfettered and unlimited, in full confidence, and with the firmest persuasion, that in her future disposition and distribution thereof, she will distinguish the heirs of my late father, by devising and bequeathing the whole of my said estate, together and entire, to such of my said father's heirs as she may think best deserves her preference:"—Held, that by the latter clause no trust was raised for the heirs-at-law of the testator's father, or any of them, the words and objects of the bequest being too vague, undefined, and uncertain—Graham, B. dissentiente. Heneage v. Lord Andover, 10 Price, 230.

A recommendation or desire expressed in a will, that the devisee to whom the will declares the testator "has devised and bequeathed the whole of his real and personal estate, unfettered and unlimited, in full confidence, with the firmest persuasion" that she will adopt it, that is, in the words of the will, "that, in her future disposition and distribution thereof, she will distinguish the heirs of my late father, by devising and bequeathing the whole of my said estate, together and entire, to such of my said father's heirs as she may think best deserves her preference," is not confined strictly to the heirs-at-law of the original testator, but may be applied to any or either of all his direct descendants.

Thus, in such a case, the second testator may devise to a son of a younger daughter of the youngest sister of the first devisor, in preference to the daughter of an elder sister, and to the only son of the same youngest sister of the first testator.

It is not the true construction of the terms of such a devise, accompanied with such a trust, that the estate should be given entire and altogether to any one of the first testator's heirs or descendants.

Notwithstanding, therefore, the terms of the will, expressing confidence that the testator's devisee would devise the whole of his devised estate, together and entire:—Held, that the testatrix was not bound thereby to make such entire disposition of the whole. Meredith v. Heneage, 10 Price, 306.

Devise to trustees, their heirs and assigns for ever, upon trust to pay the rents to a married woman for her life, notwithstanding her coverture; and after her decease to convey to the use of such persons as she should appoint:—Held, that this passed the whole legal estate in fee to the trustees. Doe d. Booth v. Field, 9 Law J. K.B. 274, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 564.

Devise to trustees and their heirs, upon certain trusts; then followed similar devises of other lands; at the close were these words: "And I hereby will, order, and direct, that the said trustees, and each of them, shall, may, and do, in every respect, give receipts, pay money, and demise the aforesaid premises or any part thereof, as shall be consistent with their duty and trust, or otherwise:—Held, that the trustees took the whole legal estate in fee. Doe d. Keen v. Walbank, 9 Law J. K.B. 276, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 554.

A testator devised lands to trustees, upon trust, out of the rents and profits to pay two annuities, and subject thereto to permit A, and after him his wife, to receive the rents and profits during their respective lives; and, after the decease of the survivor, he devised the lands to their children:—Held, that the trustees could grant a valid lease of the lands for a term of ten years. Naylor v. Arnitt, 1 Russ. & M. 501.

A testatrix devised lands to trustees, in trust, in the first place, at their discretion, to pay an annuity to her son A, and next to apply the rents to the maintenance, education, and bringing up of the three children of A, during A's life. The sole survivor of the three children attained twenty-one in the lifetime of A:—Held, that the interest of such surviving child in the surplus rents and profits did not cease on his attaining twenty-one, but that he continued entitled to them during the life of his father. Badham v. Mee, 1 Russ. & M. 631.

A testator, by his will, devised to trustees and their heirs, all his freehold and copyhold land at S, and also his freehold land at H, in case there should be but one son of his daughter A who should attain the age of twenty-one years, upon trust for such son and his heirs; and in case there should be two or more sons of A who should attain the age of twenty-one years, then in trust for the second of such sons and his heirs; and in case there should be no son of A, upon trust for such of the daughters of A, (if any,) as should first attain the age of twenty-one years, &c.; and then after certain bequests of stock in trust to pay the dividends by way of life annuities, the testator devised and bequeathed all the residue of his property, whether freehold, copyhold, or for years, money in the funds, upon mortgage or otherwise, upon security or at interest, debts of whatever other nature or kind, to the same trustees, their heirs, executors, and administrators, upon trust, to sell, get in, &c.; and as to the residue of the monies to arise by such sales, to invest the same in the public funds or real securities; and if there should be only one child of A, upon trust, to transfer or assure the funds, and the dividends, interest, and annual proceeds thereof, to such only child, at or on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, &c.; and if there should be two or three children of A, in trust for such two or three children, equally to be divided between them, the shares of sons to be transferred on their attaining the age of twenty-one years, &c.

The testator afterwards made a codicil to his will, in these words, to the effect following:—"Having some short time back drawn my pen through the first fifteen lines of the sixth sheet of my will, and being apprehensive that such rasure not being witnessed, might lead to litigation, I declare that the sole intention of such rasure is, to revoke that part only of the will, whereby I direct the sale of my freehold property; and I hereby direct and appoint that the son of my daughter A who shall first attain the age of twenty-one years, shall, on attaining that age, change his name to Elwes; and I give and devise to the said son of A on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, and changing his name to Elwes, all my freehold property, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, to hold to my said grandson, his heirs, and assigns, &c.; and I do hereby ratify and confirm the said will, except as before is excepted."

Held, that the will was revoked by the codicil, expressly as to the power of sale; and as to the corpus of the lands at S and H by the effect of inconsistency of devise, but that the will was unrevoked and operative in all other respects; and that under the devise, by the effect of the will and codicil, no estate in the lands at S and H and the other freehold estates was vested, but remained contingent upon the event of sons or daughters of the testator's daughter, according to the limitations of the will, living to attain the age of twenty-one, &c.; and that until such vesting upon such event, (or until such event should become impossible,) the estate in the lands vested in the trustees, and the rents and profits were applicable according to the trusts of the will. Duffield v. Duffield, 3 Bligh, N.S. 261, s.c. 1 Dow. & C. 268.

(F) Estates in Fee.

A devise of lands to A, "for paying his son 50*l.* when of the age of twenty-one years," gives A the fee beneficially, charged with the payment of 50*l.* Abrams v. Winshup, 3 Russ. 350.

Devise to trustees and their heirs, during the life of M P, in trust, to lay out in rents, &c. on government securities, to accumulate until she shall attain twenty-one, and from and after she shall attain that age to suffer her to receive and take the rents, issues, and profits during her life, not subject to the control of any husband with whom she may intermarry; her receipt to be a sufficient discharge for the same: and from and after the decease of the said M P for ever:—Semble, that the legal estate is vested in the trustees during the life of M P, and, therefore, that there can be no union, under the rule in Shelley's case, of the legal estate in remainder to the heirs of M P, with the preceding estate for the life, so as to give M P the fee. Playford v. Hare, 3 Y. & J. 175.

Testator gave to his heir 1*s.*, and devised to W B all his lands; and, in the next sentence, gave to him all his goods, chattels, personal and testamentary estate:—Held, that the fee-simple of the lands passed to W B. Bradford v. Belfield, 2 Sim. 264.

A will began "As touching such worldly property wherewith it has pleased God to bless me in this world." The testator then devised several real estates, bequeathed sundry chattels, and charged a freehold estate called C, with annuities, but did not otherwise mention C. He then proceeded, "All the rest of my worldly goods, bills, bonds, notes, book debts, and ready money, and everything else I die possessed of, I give to my son George, whom I make my whole and sole executor."—Held, that the residuary clause, coupled with the preamble, gave George an estate in fee in C, to the exclusion of the heir-at-law. Wilce, demandant, Wilce, tenant, 9 Law J. C.P. 197, s.c. 7 Bing. 664, s.c. 5 M. & P. 682.

The testator by his will, after giving several pecuniary legacies for the benefit of his children, devised to his widow in one paragraph, "the whole of his remaining property in the Bank of England or otherwise, and also a freehold house in C, also a freehold estate in C, also about sixty-one acres of freehold land, with a house and barns thereon in B, (and two other similar freeholds,) also a copyhold estate in E B, also a leasehold estate in C, with all right and title to the same:"—Held, that the widow was entitled to an estate in fee-simple in the freeholds, and to an estate in fee, according to the custom of the manor, in the copyhold. Sharp v. Sharp, 8 Law J. C.P. 231, s.c. 6 Bing. 630, s.c. 4 M. & P. 445.

A testator devised property to trustees, in trust for the use of his daughter E E till the age of twenty-one, at which time the trustees were to account to E E, and put her in possession of the lands. In the event of the death of E E before twenty-one, or without issue, the testator gave to T E on his attaining twenty-one, for his life, &c. But if E E should attain twenty-one, or marry, the trustees were to hold, in trust, a portion for her first male issue, other part to the second, and other part to the third male issue, charged with an annuity for E E. And in case E E should die without issue male, leaving issue female, he gave to such issue female, and the heirs male of their bodies; remainder to the testator's right heirs:—Held, that E E took an absolute estate of inheritance in fee simple in the estate in question. Permewan v. Mitchell, 9 Law J. C.P. 38, s. c. 7 Bing. 351, s. c. 5 M. & P. 256.

(G) Estates in Tail.

[Reece v. Steel, 2 Sim. 233, Dig. Law J. 197.]

Devise of all testator's real and personal estate unto the heir-at-law of Mrs. R, (Mrs. R being then alive, and surviving the testator), and, in case such heir-at-law should die without issue, then to the next heir-at-law of the said Mrs. R, and his or her issue:—Held, that the eldest son of Mrs. R took an estate tail in the real estates devised by the will, as heir at-law. Carne v. Roch, 9 Law J. C.P. 19, s. c. 7 Bing. 226, s. c. 4 M. & P. 862.

A testator devised lands "to the use of G B, the second son of his nephew J B, to enter upon and possess the same after the decease of his father, the said J B;" and by his will directed that J B and G B should, within one year next after his decease, pay 100*l.* to certain trustees named in the will, for them to discharge certain legacies; and that, if J B and G B did not pay the 100*l.* within the time limited, the trustees should let the premises, and receive the rents, until the 100*l.* should be paid, they keeping possession of the title deeds, and not allowing J B and G B to sell or mortgage the estate until the legacies were paid; and that, if G B should die, and leave no child lawfully begotten of his body, the trustees should sell the premises, and distribute the produce amongst the brothers and sisters of the testator:—Held that, under this devise, G B took an estate tail in the premises, upon the death of J B, his father. Raggett v. Beaty, 7 Law J. C.P. 9, s. c. 5 Bing. 243, s. c. 2 M. & P. 512.

A testator devised lands to trustees, upon trust to convey the same to his son J H L, for life, remainder to the use of the second, third, fourth, fifth, and all and every other the son and sons of the said J H L, severally, successively, and in remainder, one after another, as they, and every of them, should be in seniority of age or priority of birth, &c., with divers remainders over. The will contained various provisions as to portions, &c., which were to take effect only on a general failure of issue male of J H L; and there was a power of charging the lands with portions for the children of J H L, other than an eldest or only son:—Held, on the whole context of the will, that, notwithstanding he was omitted in the enumeration, the first son of the testator's son J H L took an estate in tail male expectant on the death of his father. Langston v. Pole, 7 Law J. Chanc. 185, s. c. 1 Tam. 119.

Devise "to my son-in-law John, and Elizabeth, John's wife, for their lives, and that of the survivor; and immediately after the survivor's decease, then to the heirs of the body of Elizabeth by John, to be equally divided among them, share and share alike." Devise of the residue to John:—Held, that the words "heirs of the body," were words of limitation, and were not altered by the subsequent words "to be equally divided," &c.; consequently, that the first devisees took an estate tail. Doe d. Atkinson v. Featherstone, 9 Law J. K.B. 163, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 944.

Testator devised all his real estate to his wife for life; after her decease, a part to his grandson Alexander, his heirs and assigns, for ever. Of other part he thus disposed:—To his daughter Ellen for life; remainder to her husband John for life. Then followed—"My will likewise is, that, at the decease of my son-in-law John, the same, the whole legacy to him, shall go to my grandson William, and to his children lawfully begotten, for ever; but, in default of such issue, at his decease, to my grandson Alexander, his heirs and assigns for ever":—Held, that the grandson William took an estate tail. Broadhurst v. Morris, 9 Law J. K.B. 27, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 1.

(H) Estates for Life.

Estates held for lives will pass under a general devise of lands.

A testator devises leaseholds for lives to his daughter F, and the heirs of her body, and, in default of such issue, to A and her heirs: the daughter being at the time of his death a married woman, and of unsound mind, her husband took out administration to the testator, with his will annexed, and, as such administrator, renewed the leases and assigned them to a trustee for his own benefit. F survived her husband:—Held, that, upon the death of F, A became entitled to the renewed leases. Fitzroy v. Howard, 7 Law J. Chanc. 16.

A testator devised, "as to the rest of my estate, the two houses, one in St. John's-lane, and the other in Foggwell-court, in Charterhouse-lane" to his wife for her life, and after her decease, that in St. John's-lane, to his daughter:—Held, that the daughter took only an estate for life under the devise. Esdaile v. Gall, 8 Law J. Chanc. 133, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 540.

Devise to trustees to pay rents and profits equally to A, B, C, and D, (females) for their respective separate use; and if they die, leaving daughters, the share or interest of the respective mothers to go to the daughters: provided that, in case any of them, A, B, C, or D, shall die without issue, then, devise over:—Held, that A, B, C, and D, respectively took estates for life, and their daughters estates for life. Bennett v. Lowe, 9 Law J. C.P. 132, s. c. 7 Bing. 535, s. c. 5 M. & P. 485.

A, a married woman, having, by virtue of her marriage settlement, power to appoint her personalty and a freehold to such person as she should direct, with remainder to a trustee to sell and distribute amongst her next of kin, gave, devised, and bequeathed to her husband the freehold by the description of her two fields and house; likewise, the remainder of her personalty, and all she might die possessed of, at the time of her death, after certain previous bequests, and her just debts were discharged, and appointed him and another executors:—Held, that the husband took only an estate for life, and that the next of kin were entitled to the monies to arise by a sale of the reversion. Monk v. Mawdsley, 1 Tam. 24.

(I) Estates by the Courtesy.

Devise to A and her heirs; but if she died leaving issue, then to such issue and their heirs. A died, leaving issue:—Held, that her husband was not entitled to be tenant by the curtesy. Barker v. Barker, 2 Sim. 249.

(K) Copyhold Estates and Customary Lands.

Since the statute 55 Geo. 3. c. 192, copyholds will pass under a general devise of real estate, without a surrender to the use of the will, notwithstanding there are freeholds to answer the devise; such general devise being in itself sufficient to include both freeholds and copyholds; and an intention to include the copyholds in the legal operation of such general devise not being negatived by the absence of such surrender. Doe d. Clarke v. Ludlam, 9 Law J. C.P. 74, s. c. 7 Bing. 275, s. c. 5 M. & P. 48.

A testator, by his will, devised to trustees all his freehold messuages, stock or shares in any of the public funds, and all money in hand or debts due to him, and all shares or property whereof he might be possessed or entitled to, upon certain trusts. By a codicil, he directed his copyholds to be transferred to his wife, until the expiration of certain leases, or till her death, and then to be sold for the benefit of his children and their heirs:—Held, that the copyholds did not pass to the trustees by the will; but that the interest in them passed to the wife, determinable on the expiration of the leases, or at her decease. Chapman v. Prickett, 8 Law J. C.P. 199, s. c. 6 Bing. 602, s. c. 4 M. & P. 404.

Devise of a copyhold estate upon certain trusts. Proviso thus—"Provided also, and I do desire and direct that the present tenant of the said copyhold estate, or any of his children desiring to be continued tenant or tenants thereof, be suffered to hold and occupy the said premises, upon payment of the present rent, and the taxes and levies which the said present tenant hath been accustomed to pay, and also all future taxes, during the time he or they shall respectively be tenant or tenants of the same, and upon entering into proper agreements not to commit any waste, or do any damage by sowing the same with flax, hemp, or woad, or by any other means whatsoever:"—Held, that this was merely a trust; and gave no legal interest to the tenant, or any of his children. Doe d. Griffin v. Grafter, 9 Law J. K.B. 266.

In two manors in Durham there is no custom for surrendering to the uses of the will, but the tenant divests himself of the legal estate, and by surrender vests it in a trustee, who subscribes a memorandum or defeazance, that the surrender is to the uses of the surrenderor's will. In this case, the father and maternal grandfather of the testator R N, both being copyholders, had respectively caused their copyhold tenements to be surrendered to the other, who had subscribed the usual defeazance. The legal estate in both descended to the testator. But, with regard to the tenements in the manor of Houghton, they were devised by the father of the testator to trustees, to the intent that his widow might receive an annuity thereout, and subject thereto to the testator R N in fee. The widow being alive at the time, the testator R N made his will and died; it was held, that the copyholds in the manor of Houghton passed by his will. With respect to the tenements which were in the other manor, the testator's maternal grandfather, who had the beneficial interest in them, devised them unto trustees, upon trust for the testator R N; Held, that there being nothing to separate the legal estate and equitable interest, the equitable interest had merged in the legal estate in the testator, and could not be devised by him according to the custom of the manor.—Held, that his widow was entitled to free bench, and the heir, subject thereto, to the inheritance, but they, taking benefits under the will, were bound to elect. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 1 Tam. 319.

A testator, being absolute owner of some copyholds, of which he had been admitted tenant, and having the legal fee of other copyholds holden of the same manor, to which he had not been admitted, but subject to trusts, under which he was in equity only tenant for life, with remainder to his son in tail, remainder to himself in fee, surrendered to the use of his will all his copyholds, holden of that manor, or which he was seised of, or entitled to, either in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy: he was subsequently admitted tenant of all the copyholds which were subject to the trust, except the moiety of one tenement, and afterwards made a will, devising all his hereditaments, freehold and copyhold, in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, to trustees and their heirs, upon trust for his son for life; with remainders over:—Held, that the surrender and the will passed both the legal and beneficial interest in all the copyholds upon which the surrender operated, including those of which the devisor was in equity only tenant for life, and that the son was bound to elect whether he would give effect to this general devise, or would insist upon the benefit of the equitable estate tail, which he took under the whole trusts, to which some of the copyholds were subject. Abdy v. Gordon, 3 Russ. 278.

A testator possessed of freehold lands, and of copyhold lands of Borough English custom, devised all to A for life; remainder to A's son, remainder to the eldest son of that son if he had one, but if he had no son, then to the next eldest regular male heir, of his (testator's) family, so long as there should be one of them in being:—Held, that the son of the first devisee took an estate tail; and that the descent, as to the copyholds, must follow the custom; and, therefore, that the youngest son of the tenant in tail was entitled. Doe d. Garrod v. Garrod, 9 Law J. K.B. 149, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 87.

(L) Estates in Mortgage.

Where a testator was mortgagee in fee, and devised all his freehold estates under certain limitations which could be applicable only to property which was his own:—Held, that the devise did not pass his legal estate as mortgagee.

Where that testator in another part of his will devised all his stock in trade, cotton-mill, machinery, cupola furnace, mineral tools, implements and utensils, ready money, and securities for money, debts, personal estate and effects, upon trust that the trustees, their heirs, &c. should dispose of the stock, get in the debts, and lay out the produce in the purchase of freehold property, upon certain trusts:—Held, that this devise did not pass the testator's legal estate as mortgagee. Galliers v. Moss, 7 Law J. K.B. 109, s. c. 9 B. & C. 267, s. c. 4 M. & R. 268.

Devise of lands subject to 1,000*l.* to be raised for the testator's daughters, to an annuity of 37*l.* 10*s.* to his widow, and to all such incumbrances as might happen to be thereon, does not exempt the personal estate from the payment of a mortgage thereon. Phillips v. Parker, 1 Tam. 136.

(M) JOINT TENANCY AND TENANCY IN COMMON.

[Thomas v. Phelps, 4 Russ. 348, Dig. Law J. 200.]

Devise to Margaret and Elizabeth, of the residue, to them and the survivor of them, their heirs and executors for ever:—Held, that they took a joint tenancy in fee. Doe d. Young v. Sotheron, 9 Law J. K.B. 286, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 628.

Devise to A for life, of messuage and other freehold estate at ——; and after her decease "I give the same estate to all and every the child and children of A, equally to be divided amongst them; and for want of such issue," over:—Held, that the children of A took as tenants in common in fee simple. Esdaile v. Wilshere, 9 Law J. Chanc. 71.

Where the residue of real and personal estates was devised by a testator to his two sons as joint tenants, and the two sons, after the father's decease, and during the period of twenty years, carried on the business of farmers with such estates, and kept the monies arising therefrom in one common stock, and with part of such monies purchased other estates in the name of one of them, but never in any manner entered into any agreement respecting such farming business, or ever accounted with each other:—It was held, under the circumstances, that they continued, at the death of one of them, joint tenants of all the property that passed by the will of their father, but were tenants in common of the after-purchased estates. Morris v. Barrett, 3 Y. & J. 384.

(N) CONDITIONAL AND CONTINGENT DEVISES, AND LIMITATIONS OVER.

[Parr v. Swindells, 4 Russ. 283, Dig. Law J. 202.]

Devise "to R W and his heirs for ever. But if in case the said R W dies without heirs, then to J P and his heirs; or if in case the aforesaid R W offers to mortgage or suffer a fine or recovery upon the whole or any part thereof, then to go to the aforesaid J P and his heirs:"—Held, that the condition to restrain the alienation was void, and that R W took an estate in fee. Ware v. Cann, 8 Law J. 164, s. c. 10 B. & C. 164.

A devise in terms which would give an estate tail, after a life estate. Proviso, that the devisee should, on his surviving the tenant for life, pay A B 5*l.*:—Held, that this proviso did not enlarge the estate tail into an estate in fee. Doe d. Jones v. Owens, 8 Law J. K.B. 404, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 318.

A testator, having daughters in England, and an only son in the West Indies, thus devised:—"I give and devise to my son R H, now of the island of St. Christopher's, all that &c., to hold the said premises to my said son R H, his heirs and assigns for ever; subject, nevertheless, to the payment of the sum of 600*l.* to my said three daughters. And I do hereby direct, that, until my said son R H, or his heirs, shall come to England, and also pay the said 600*l.*, that he shall not have the possession of the said estate, but that the rents and profits shall be equally divided among my said daughters, until my said son shall return to England and pay the said sum."

Then followed a power to the daughters to let for seven years.

"And in case my said son shall not come to England during his lifetime, to take possession of the said estate, and shall die without leaving any issue, lawfully to be begotten, then I do give and devise the said estate to my said daughters in equal parts as tenants in common, and to the respective heirs of their several bodies for ever."

Held, that the daughters took, not an estate tail, but either an estate in fee on condition, to determine when R H, or his heirs, should return to England and pay the 600*l.*, or a chattel interest, to continue until such return and payment. Doe d. Goldin v. Lakeman, 9 Law J. K.B. 138, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 30.

A testator devised lands to trustees, in trust for his son J H L, for life, remainder to the use of the second, third, fourth, fifth, and all and every other the son and sons of the said J H L, severally, successively, and in remainder, one after another, as they and every of them should be in seniority of age or priority of birth, &c., with divers remainders over:—Held, that, notwithstanding his being omitted in the enumeration, the first son of the testator's son J H L, took under this devise an estate in tail male expectant on the death of his father. Langston v. Pole, 7 Law J. C.P. 1, s. c. 5 Bing. 228, s. c. 2 M. & P. 490.

Devise to husband and wife, and to the survivor for life; then to their daughter and other children; and, in case they leave no children, then to their heirs and assigns for ever. The wife having died in the lifetime of her husband, and afterwards the daughter (their only child) in her father's lifetime, the heir-at-law of the testator was not entitled to take on the decease of the father; the remainder in fee becoming vested in the latter, as the survivor of the husband and wife, leaving no children. Doe d. Nesmyth v. Knowls, 9 Law J. K.B. 78, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 324.

Devise to A, B, C, &c., share and share alike, for their lives, remainder to their respective children for their lives, and so to be continued from issue to issue for life. But if any of them die, leaving no issue, their shares to go to the survivors, for their lives, and the issue of such of them as shall be dead; and, for default of any issue, then over:—Held, that A, B, C, &c. take estates tail, with cross-remainders. Mortimer v. West, 2 Sim. 276.

An estate at C was settled on A for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, remainder to A in fee. A devised as follows: "As to the reversion and inheritance of the freehold estate at C, purchased by me in pursuance of my marriage articles, bearing date, &c., in case of failure of issue of my body by my said wife, I give and devise the same," &c. He then limited the estate to his brothers in succession, and to their respective first and other sons in tail male:—The Court was of opinion that the devise was good. Egerton v. Jones, 3 Sim. 409.

(O) EXECUTORY DEVISES.

A testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, upon trust to pay, apply, and dispose of it to two women, A and B, when they should attain their respective ages of twenty-one years, directing that their shares should not be subject to the controul of their husbands: but in case both or either of them died without issue living at the time of their respective deceases, then he gave the share of her or them so dying to his nephews and nieces: —Held, upon the whole context of the will, that the executory devise over of the residue was not confined to the death of A and B, or either of them, under twenty-one, and without leaving issue; but would take effect upon their respective deaths at any time, without leaving issue then living. Gray v. Folds, 7 Law J. Chanc. 182.

Devise to A and B, and their heirs, to sell and dispose, at their discretion, of all the testator's rights in King's Sedgmoor, belonging to the manor of Moorlinch, and all his rights in Moorlinch, if an act should pass for inclosing the said moor within twenty years, and to pay the proceeds to the several persons therein mentioned. An inclosure act passed within the twenty years, and various allotments were made in respect of the testator's estates:—Held, that the devise was in the nature of an executory devise, to take effect on the passing of the act; and that, under the devise, the devisees took a quarter part of the money produced by the sale of the allotments in King's Sedgmoor in respect of the manor of Moorlinch, and the whole of the proceeds of the sale of allotments in respect of lands in Moorlinch. Gardner v. Lyddon, 3 Y. & J. 389.

(P) Devises by Implication.

The Court held, upon the particular language of a will, that an estate tail would not be implied in A and B, though an estate was given to them for life, and the property was, upon failure of their issue male, limited over to their grand-daughters, and there was no express limitation which would include all their issue male. Houston v. Platt, 7 Law J. Chanc. 20.

A testator devised to his sons T and S, and their heirs males, then to his (testator's) four grandsons, share and share all alike, then to the heirs males of all his said grandsons, and then to go to his grandsons' heirs males that part that belonged to their father, and then to them, and then to the last liver, to their heirs males of his said grandsons; and, for want of issue males of his grandsons, to the testator's nephew, and his heirs males, &c.; and, for want of such issue male, to the testator's own right heirs for ever:—Held, that cross-remainders might be implied. Doe d. Edward Southouse v. Jenkins, 7 Law J. C.P. 182, s. c. 5 Bing. 469, s. c. 3 M. & P. 59.

Where estates tail are devised to more than two persons as tenants in common, and it is manifest that the testator did not intend that any part of the estate should go over, unless there was a failure of issue of all the devisees, there the devisees take cross-remainders.

Where estates tail are given to two persons only as tenants in common, there cross-remainders between them will be implied, although there is no expressed intention that no part of the estate should go over until the failure of issue of both, unless the limitation to them be successively, severally, or respectively. Livesay v. Harding, 1 Russ. & M. 636, s. c. 1 Tam. 460.

(Q) Devises for Payment of Debts.

[Hewill v. Witaker, 3 Russ. 343, Dig. Law J. 203.]

A testatrix devised certain estates to trustees for a term of five hundred years; and, subject to the term and the trusts thereof thereinafter declared, she devised the same estates to the use of various persons successively for life; with remainder to the first and other sons of such several persons successively in tail male; with remainder to the daughters of such several persons successively in tail general; with remainders over. The trusts of the five hundred years' term were declared to be, that the trustees of the term should, out of the rents and profits of the hereditaments comprised in the said term, pay the several annuities mentioned in the will; and, subject thereto, should, out of the residue of the rents and profits of the premises comprised in the said term, levy and raise such sums of money, not exceeding 8,000*l.* in the whole, as should be necessary to pay and satisfy such debts or sums of money as might be due and owing by her late husband, or by herself, either by mortgage, bond, or otherwise; and all which she directed the trustees to pay, satisfy, and discharge out of the said rents and profits, in such manner and form as they should think fit, and as soon as conveniently might be after her decease; and, subject and without prejudice to the several trusts declared of the said term, upon trust to pay and apply the residue and overplus of the net rents, issues, and profits of the premises comprised in the said five hundred years' term, unto the person or persons who for the time being should be next entitled to the reversion or remainder of the premises, expectant on the said term, under the limitations thereinbefore contained: —Held, that it was a question of intention, to be collected from the provisions of the will, whether the testatrix meant to charge the debts upon the corpus of the estate, or only to direct the payment out of the annual rents and profits; and, upon the several provisions, the Court held, that the testatrix did not intend that the debts should be raised out of the corpus of the estate, but only that the same should be discharged out of the annual rents and profits.

Though, in favour of creditors, the Court considers a devise in trust for payment of debts out of rents and profits, to be equivalent to a devise of the estate itself in trust for payment of debts, and will direct the estate to be sold for that purpose, yet it has been in cases where the remainder-man was either tenant in fee or in tail, and therefore liable to pay the debts sooner or later. Hanage v. Lord Audley, 3 Y. & J. 360.

DIEM CLAUSIT EXTREMUM.

Where freehold and leasehold property had been seized under a writ of diem clausit extremum, on an old commission and inquisition, and various claims were entered on the part of the persons insisting on a prior right to that of the King, and the executor of the deceased Crown debtor, and his surviving partners in trade, and the purchasers of part of the leasehold estate from his executors and mortgagees, apply by motion to the Court (without prejudice to their right to traverse the debt found due to the Crown) for an amicus curiæ as to the leasehold property, for a reference as to the partnership property, and a further reference as to part of the leasehold estates which had been sold, and the proceeds of which had been applied in paying off or reducing mortgages on the other parts of the property,—the Court refused to entertain any part of the application, on the ground, that where so many claims were made, and points of law were raised, they could not act in a summary way without the consent of the Crown.

Semble—That the parties applying ought to admit the debt claimed to be due to the Crown as an indispensable preliminary to being heard by the Court on the merits of the motion. Hullock, B. dissentiente.

Quære—whether, and to what extent, and from what time, and under what circumstances, leasehold property of a deceased Crown debtor is bound by inquisition and a writ of diem clausit extremum.

Quære—how far partnership property is affected by such a writ against a deceased partner for a partnership debt.

Quære—whether, and how far, freehold and real chattels of a deceased Crown debtor, sold by his executors, are subject to a writ of diem clausit extremum, where the proceeds have been applied by them in payment of incumbrances on the other real property of the deceased, and in discharging it from bonâ fide legal charges. Rex v. Hodge, 12 Price, 537.

DIGNITY.

[See Peer.]

DILAPIDATIONS.

The liability of an incumbent to repair the parsonage house and the chancel, is a liability at common law, and has not been enlarged by any statute.

The principle upon which that liability is to be ascertained in amount is, that the premises are to be put into such a state of repair as an outgoing lay-tenant ought to leave his buildings, where he is under covenant to leave them in good and sufficient repair.

But he is not bound to supply or maintain anything in the nature of ornament. Painting, whitewashing, and papering, are for this purpose considered as ornament; except where the painting be necessary to preserve exposed timber from decay. Wise v. Metcalfe, 8 Law J. K.B. 126, s.c, 10 B. & C. 299.

DISCLAIMER.

In order to get rid of the effect of a disclaimer, a distinct application, supported by affidavits establishing a special case, is necessary. Sidden v. Ledlard, 1 Russ. & M. 110.

DISCOVERY.

Where a bill for discovery and relief is demurrable to, for want of equity to the relief, the plaintiff cannot have the discovery prayed. Mellish v. Richardson, 12 Price, 530.

A plea of matter, which would constitute a defence to an action at law, is not a good plea to a bill in equity for discovery leading to legal relief. Robertson v. Lubbock, 9 Law J. Chanc. 138.

The Dean and Chapter of C, being rectors of a parish, leased all the tithes belonging to the rectory; the lessees filed a bill for tithe of hops, against the occupiers, to which the vicar was made a party, as claiming that tithe. The occupiers then filed a cross-bill against the Dean and Chapter and their lessees, for a discovery and production of documents. Demurrer by the Dean and Chapter, allowed. Tooth v. the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, 3 Sim. 49.

DISTRESS.

[See Indemnity and Replevin.]

(A) Who may distrain.
(B) What may be taken.
(C) How disposed of.
(D) Distress for Damage feasant.
(E) Action for an Excessive Distress.
(F) Fraudulent Removals.

(A) Who may distrain.

A tenant from year to year, underletting from year to year, has a reversion, which entitles him to distrain. Curtis v. Wheeler, 2 M. & M. 493, s. c. 4 C. & P. 196. [Tenterden]

A demise, not under seal, of tithes, and also of a corporeal hereditament, at an entire rent, will not justify a distress for the rent reserved. Gardiner v. Williamson, 9 Law J. K.B. 233, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 336.

A tenant held premises under an agreement for a lease. No rent was paid; but the tenant, in an account stated between him and his landlord, assented to an item therein debiting him for a half-year's rent:—Held, that the assent was equivalent to a payment, and established a tenancy from year to year, so as to entitle the landlord to distrain. Cox v. Bent, 7 Law J. C.P. 68, s.c. 5 Bing. 183, s. c. 2 M. & P. 281.

P and R entered into agreement; the former to grant, and the latter to take, a lease at a certain rent, to commence at a future day; the landlord to make the premises habitable, and allow the tenant 15*l.* towards building an oven. R entered, built the oven, and occupied four years without paying rent; P not having made the premises habitable. On being called on, R said he was ready to pay the rent, but insisted on P performing first his part, and on being allowed sums he had been compelled to lay out:—Held, that distress did not lie for the rent, the circumstances not amounting to an actual existing demise at an ascertained rent. Regnart v. Porter, 9 Law J. C.P. 168, s.c. 7 Bing. 651, s. c. 5 M. & P. 370.

A, entitled to a lease for lives, renewable for ever, assigns the whole of his estate and interest in the lands of B, reserving a rent, and a power of distress and re-entry, but no reversion. The rent being in arrear, A distrains, and B replevies; A avows under the Irish statute, 25 Geo. 2. c. 13, corresponding to the English statute, 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, giving the landlords remedy by distress, and judgment in the Irish Common Pleas and Exchequer Chamber for A. But, on error by B, in Dom. Proc., the judgment reversed; for the statutes apply only to those leases where there is a reversion, or an interest vested in the lessor at the expiration of the lease; and here there is no reversion. Pluck v. Digges and another, 2 Dow. & C. A.C. 180.

The plaintiff being desirous of taking apartments of one B, a tenant of the defendant, the latter promised him, that, "as long as he paid B's rent, he (the defendant) would never trouble him or his property." The plaintiff had failed duly to pay the whole of his rent, but had tendered the balance to B, when the defendant distrained the plaintiff's goods for rent due to him from B. The defendant had no notice of this tender:—Held, that the defendant's right of distress was not taken away. Welsh v. Rose, 8 Law J. C.P. 246, s. c. 6 Bing. 638, s. c. 4 M. & P. 486.

H S demised premises to the plaintiff for a term of years, and died. The property descended to his heir-at-law, who devised it to the defendant for life, and died. The defendant, conceiving she had a claim, as heir-at-law of H S, declined to take as devisee. The real heir-at-law then brought ejectment, obtained judgment by default, and sued out a writ of possession. To defeat his claim, the defendant then brought ejectment against the tenant (the plaintiff), laying the demise on the 2nd March 1814. The plaintiff continued to occupy after the expiration of the demise to her by H S; but she had never paid rent to the defendant:—Held, that, as the defendant, by bringing ejectment, had treated the tenant as a trespasser, she could not afterwards distrain for rent. Bridges v. Smyth, 7 Law J. C.P. 143, s. c. 5 Bing. 410, s. c. 2 M. & P. 740.

A landlord may, at his peril, make a distress for rent in arrear; although his right is in question in a suit depending between him and his tenant in respect of a previous seizure for rent previously due.

And, semble, that he may, upon a second distress for the rent subsequently due, seize the same goods which were seized on the former distress, and which were replevied; and the legality of which former distress is still in question. Wilton v. Wiffen, 8 Law J. K.B. 303.

(B) What may be taken.

Implements of trade may be distrained for rent. Roberts v. Jackson, Pes. A.C. 36.

Stocking-frames, delivered by a hosier to his workman, to work up his materials at the workman's house, are not privileged from distress for rent due from the workman to his landlord. Wood v. Clark, 9 Law J. Exch. 187, s. c. 1 C. & J. 484, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 314.

It was stated in a special verdict, that, by an indenture, A demised to B all that wharf next the river Thames, described by abutments, together with all ways, paths, passages, easements, profits, commodities, and appurtenances whatsoever, to the said wharf belonging; and that, by the indenture, the exclusive use of the land of the river Thames, opposite to and in front of the wharf, between high and low water-mark, as well when covered with water as dry, for the accommodation of the tenants of the wharf, was demised as appurtenant to the wharf; but that the land itself, between high and low water-mark, was not demised:—Held, that the lessor could not distrain, for rent in arrear, barges, the property of B, lying in the space between high and low water-mark, and attached to the wharf by ropes. Capel v. Buszard, 6 Bing. 150, s. c. 3 M. & P. 480, s. c. 3 Y. & J. 344.

(C) How disposed of.

The appraiser of a distress must be sworn before the constable of the parish where it is taken; the constable of the adjoining parish cannot interfere, though the proper constable is not to be found when wanted. Avenell v. Croker, 2 M. & M. 172. [Tenterden]

The constable who swears the appraisers of a distress, under the statute, 2 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 5. s. 1, must attend with the appraiser at the time of the appraisement, and must swear them before they make it. Kenny v. May, 2 M. & M. 56. [Tenterden]

A tenant, tendering his rent after distress taken, but before it is impounded or removed, may maintain trespass for a subsequent removal of the distress. Vertue v. Beasley, 2 M. & M. 21. [Parke]

(D) Distress for Damage feasant.

The plaintiff having taken the defendant's cattle damage feasant, and suffered them to escape, and to remain in the defendant's own field, whilst he went to the defendant to demand satisfaction for the damage done:—Held, that this was an abandonment of his right of freshly following. Knowles v. Blake, 7 Law J. C.P. 228, s. c. 5 Bing. 499, s. c. 2 M. & P. 214.

(E) Action for an excessive Distress.

Where a party distrains for more rent than is due, but takes only a single chattel, he is not liable to an action for distraining for more rent than is due, though the thing taken be of greater value than is necessary to cover the rent actually due, unless there were others of less, but sufficient value, to be found. Avenell v. Croker, 2 M. & M. 172. [Tenterden]

In an action on the case for an excessive distress, it appeared that the defendant had put a broker in possession, but that still the plaintiff had not been deprived of the controul of the property. The jury having returned a verdict for the plaintiff for 15*l.*, —the Court refused to set it aside. Baylis v. Usher, 9 Law J. C.P. 42, s. c. 7 Bing. 155, s. c. 4 M. & P. 790.

(F) Fraudulent Removals.

A landlord may maintain an action on the statute 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. s. 3, for double the value of goods fraudulently removed to prevent a distress; although they be worth less than 50*l.*, he is not confined to his remedy by application to two magistrates. Bromley v. Holden, 2 M. & M. 175. [Tenterden]

Where goods are fraudulently removed, to prevent a distress for arrears of rent, the landlord is not justified in breaking open the locked gate of the close where the goods are, without first calling to his assistance the constable, and complying with all the conditions in 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. s. 7. The retaking, upon a rescous of goods distrained for rent arrear (not upon fresh pursuit), must be a peaceable retaking; and the breaking open the gate of the close where the goods are, is a trespass. Rich v. Woolley, 7 Bing. 651, s. c. 5 M. & P. 663.

To entitle a landlord to follow and distrain goods, under the statute 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, there must be some evidence to shew that the removal was fraudulent, with intent to elude a distress, and also that sufficient was not left upon the demised premises to satisfy the landlord's claim. Parry v. Duncan, 9 Law J. C.P. 83, s. c. 7 Bing. 243, s. c. 5 M. & P. 19, s. c. 1 M. & M. 533.

DIVORCE.

(A) Grounds for.
- (a) Adultery.
- (b) Cruelty.

(B) When barred.
- (a) In general.
- (b) Condonation.
- (c) Collusion and Connivance.

(C) Pleading, Evidence, and Practice.

(A) Grounds for.

Sentence of separation, by reason of adultery and cruelty, pronounced, on proof of undue familiarities, clandestine communication, with frequent opportunities of guilt, and concealed correspondence by letters denoting great ardour of passion, if not allusions to actual guilt, (but no credible proof of a fact of adultery,) united with great violence of conduct and language, and an attempted blow. Bramwell v. Bramwell, 3 Hag. Ec. 618.

The Court cannot separate on improper conduct short of actual adultery. Hamerton v. Hamerton, 2 Hag. Ec. 14.

(b) Cruelty.

The husband's conduct is legal cruelty, if by cohabitation the wife is exposed to bodily hazard and intolerable hardship. On proof of such conduct, and the husband's adultery with three different women, a sentence of separation à mensâ et thoro, pronounced at the wife's prayer, and the husband condemned in her costs.

Words of abuse and reproach are not—but words of menace, intimating a malignant intention of doing bodily harm, and affecting the security of life, are legal cruelty.

The Court must not wait till threats are carried into execution—but must interpose when words raise a reasonable apprehension of violence, and excite such terror as to make life intolerable.

Spitting on a wife is a gross act of cruelty.

The husband taking a separate bed, is not pleadable as cruelty.

Obtaining the wife's separate property by imposition cannot, but compelling her by threats to go anywhere may, be pleaded as cruelty.

If words of menace raise a reasonable apprehension, it matters not whether they be addressed to the wife, or to a third person.

Cruelty may be relative, and depend on the age, habits, &c., of the party.

An intermediate separation so approximates two periods of cohabitation, that acts of cruelty, happening before the separation, are to be looked upon as if they had happened recently. D'Aguilar v. D'Aguilar, 1 Hag. Ec. 775, 882.

A husband's attempt to debauch his own women-servants is a strong act of cruelty.

One act of cruelty of an inflamed nature, and sufficiently gross to excite terror, entitle the wife to relief. Durant v. Durant, 1 Hag. Ec. 768.

To entitle a wife to separation by reason of cruelty, there must be ill treatment and personal injury, or the reasonable apprehension of personal injury.

Aggravations of cruelty may arise from the station of the parties; from the condition of the sufferer; from natural, or even acquired feelings.

If a wife, after legal cruelty, consents to a reconciliation, and to matrimonial cohabitation, former injuries would revive by subsequent misconduct of a slighter nature than would constitute original cruelty, though the reconciliation would be a bar, if no further ill treatment took place.

If legal cruelty be established, a subsequent reconciliation, and matrimonial intercourse, form a bar to a separation for such preceding cruelty; and the question then is, whether any subsequent acts take place, furnishing fresh grounds of legal complaint, or, at least, reviving former wrongs, and in connexion with those former wrongs, creating reasonable apprehension of renewal of ill treatment.

In answer to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the wife (having pleaded cruelty and adultery,) proved several acts of personal ill treatment, violent behaviour and language, from 1813 to 1817. A separation was then agreed upon; but, on a reconciliation, matrimonial cohabitation and intercourse were renewed. The Court, on appeal, holding that adultery was not proved; that cruelty, up to 1817, was proved; and that, though afterwards there was no personal violence, his conduct, exciting reasonable apprehension of it, revived the former cruelty—decreed a separation, and condemned the husband in the costs in both courts, except those incurred by certain charges of adultery. Westmeath v. Westmeath, 2 Hag. Ec. Sup. 61, 112.

Cruelty will revive condoned adultery, and less is necessary to revive than to found an original sentence. Durant v. Durant, 1 Hag. 765: s. p. Bramwell v. Bramwell, 3 Hag. 635.

Semble, mere lapse of time is not sufficient to bar the wife's remedy.

All persons (e. g. Jews,) who stand in the relation of husband and wife, in any way that the law allows, have a claim to relief, on the violation of any matrimonial duty.

It is not necessary for the wife to withdraw from cohabitation on the first or second instance of misconduct. It is legal, and meritorious to be patient as long as possible. Forbearance does not weaken her title to relief. Durant v. Durant, 1 Hag. Ec. 740, 768.

On proof of adultery, sentence may be barred:—first, by compensatio criminis; secondly, by condonation; thirdly, by active procurement, or passive toleration; and, possibly, by other conduct.

Passive sufferance of adultery, for a length of time, enures to a waiver of legal remedy, but is difficult of proof. Crewe v. Crewe, 3 Hag. Ec. 129, 133.

The wife's adultery being proved, and a similar charge against the husband failing, his relief is not barred by a slight want of caution on his part.

The wife having failed in a charge of adultery, and a recriminatory plea, on the husband's part, being proved; cruelty, and the introduction of his wife to a female of loose character, (the wife's guilt not being connected with such introduction,) form no bar to his prayer for divorce. Harris v. Harris, 2 Hag. 376.

The doctrine received in the ecclesiastical courts of England, from the civil and canon law, that a plea of recrimination, or compensatio criminum, is a valid plea in bar, is founded on the principle, that a man cannot complain of the breach of a contract which he has violated. Beeby v. Beeby, 1 Hag. Ec. 790.

A deed of separation, upon mutual agreement, on account of unhappy differences, though containing a covenant not to bring a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, is no bar to such a suit. Westmeath v. Westmeath, 2 Hag. Ec. Sup. 115.

Entering into a voluntary deed of separation, and bringing an action on that deed, do not bar a wife from proceeding for a divorce in the spiritual court, nor bear unfavourably on her case. Durant v. Durant, 1 Hag. Ec. 760.

Slighter acts will bar than will found an original suit.

A single act of adultery is sufficient to bar the husband's remedy. Astley v. Astley, 1 Hag. Ec. 721-2.

[See ante A, b.]

Condonation is conditional forgiveness, on a full knowledge of all antecedent guilt. Bramwell v. Bramwell, 3 Hag. Ec. 629.

All condonations, by operation of law, are expressly or impliedly conditional; for the effect is taken off by repetition of misconduct.

And circumstances may take off the effect of condonation which would not support an original cause. D'Aguilar v. D'Aguilar, 1 Hag. Ec. 781, 2.

On breach of the condition, the right to a remedy for the former injuries revives.

A conditional promise, made under force and violence, is no condonation, if the condition is not fulfilled.

The husband's attempts, when affected with venereal disease, to force his wife to his bed, is of a mixed nature; partly cruelty, and partly evidence of adultery, and would remove condonation of either. Durant v. Durant, 1 Hag. Ec. 761, 767.

To found legal condonation, as a bar to adultery, there must be a complete knowledge of all the adulterous connexion, and a condonation subsequent to such knowledge. Turton v. Turton, 3 Hag. Ec. 351.

Condonation is forgiveness legally releasing the injury, and may be expressed or implied; as, by the husband cohabiting with a delinquent wife; but the effect of cohabitation is less stringent on the wife, and condonation by implication is not held a strict bar against her; for it is not improper she should, for a time, shew a patient forbearance, and entertain hopes of her husband's reform.

Where the parties have separate beds, there must, in order to found condonation, be something of matrimonial intercourse presumed; it does not rest merely on the wife's not withdrawing herself.

In a suit for separation à mensâ et thoro, by reason of the wife's adultery, the having in a plea of recrimination, or compensatio criminum, proved a long series of misconduct, (adultery, solicitation of the servant's chastity, and venereal disease communicated to her,) for which she separated from him, long prior to the adultery committed by her, is entitled to her dismissal; nor will a return to live in the same house, after a formal separation on account of the husband's adultery, operate as a condonation, so as to extinguish her right to set up his guilt as a bar to his prayer. Beeby v. Beeby, 1 Hag. Ec. 789, 794.

The wife's unwilling acquiescence in a return to live in the same house, but without connubial cohabitation, does not amount to a complete forgiveness. D'Aguilar v. D'Aguilar, 1 Hag. Ec. 782.

On the execution of articles of separation, not followed by matrimonial intercourse, the wife's reluctant assent to the husband having a bed-room in her house, at the earnest entreaty of him and of mutual friends, and on his declaring, "that he should be merely under the roof by sufferance," is no continuation of a former condonation. Westmeath v. Westmeath, 2 Hag. Ec. Sup. 118.

Conjugal cohabitation after an act of adultery, avowed by the husband to the wife, may be condonation; but, if a wife overlooks one act of human infirmity, it is not a legal consequence, that she pardons all other acts. D'Aguilar v. D'Aguilar, 1 Hag. Ec. 986.

Condonation is not held so strictly against a wife as against a husband. D'Aguilar v. D'Aguilar, 1 Hag. Ec. 786; Durant v. Durant, ib. 456.

The wife having committed adultery on the first of three successive nights, and the husband aware, and having full proof of this, sleeping with her on the second, condones thereby the previous adultery, and cannot take advantage of further adultery on the third night. Timmings v. Timmings, 3 Hag. Ec. 83.

The force of condonation, as a bar, varies according to circumstances.

The condonation, by a husband, of a wife's adultery—still more, repeated reconciliations after repeated adulteries; create a bar of far greater effect, than does the condonation by a wife of repeated acts of cruelty.

In answer to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, brought by the husband, legal cruelty being established, but a reconciliation and matrimonial intercourse having afterwards taken place, the Court enjoined the wife to return to cohabitation, holding, that there was no proof of subsequent misconduct by the husband sufficiently removing the bar of condonation, and reviving the previous cruelty, to entitle the wife to a sentence of separation. Westmeath v. Westmeath, 2 Hag. Ec. Sup. 1, 113.

Collusion is an agreement between the parties, for one to commit, or appear to commit, a fact of adultery, so as to suffer the other to obtain a remedy at law, as for a real injury. The law permits no co-operation for such purpose, and refuses a remedy for adultery committed with such intent; but it is not proof of collusion, that, after the crime is committed, both parties are desirous of a separation.

The long duration of a criminal intercourse, and delay in applying to the Court, and the indirectness and want of stringency in the evidence, are strong presumptions against a preconcerted scheme to obtain a sentence by connivance.

A judgment by default against the paramour, and no defence on the part of the wife, are not proof of collusion. Crewe v. Crewe, 3 Hag. Ec. 130, 133.

The husband having proved the wife's adulterous connexion with one individual, five years after separation, of which connexion two children were born; the Court held, that the husband's knowledge of, and consent to, gross indelicacies, or even adultery with three other persons, during cohabitation, would not bar him. Hodges v. Hodges, 3 Hag. Ec. 118.

Condonation and connivance are essentially different in their nature, though they may have the same legal consequence.

In a suit for separation, for the husband's adultery with his wife's sister, proof that the wife, after knowledge of previous adultery, allowed, under peculiar circumstances, this sister to accompany them to India, and to live in the same house with them, will not bar the wife on the ground of connivance: her conduct, though imprudent, not being traced to a disregard of her own honour, nor to any motive necessarily criminal. Turton v. Turton, 3 Hag. Ec. 338, 340.

Connivance is a bar to a suit for separation by reason of adultery, on the principle, that volenti non fit injuria. Rogers v. Rogers, 3 Hag. Ec. 58.

Quære, whether connivance at adultery during cohabitation, is a bar to a suit for long subsequent adultery with a different person. Rogers v. Rogers, 3 Hag. Ec. 72.

To constitute connivance, active corruption is not necessary; passive acquiescence, with intention, and in the expectation, that guilt will follow, is sufficient; but, on the other hand, there must be consent—not mere negligence, inattention, confidence, or dulness of apprehension. Rogers v. Rogers, 3 Hag. Ec. 59.

Passive connivance is as much a bar as active conspiracy; but there must be an intention that guilt should ensue.

But it is not sufficient, that the man did not act as a wise, or prudent, or attentive man, nor that he, in fact, contributed to his wife's guilt: he must intentionally contribute thereto; there must be intentional permission, or corrupt facility.

But the Court, from connivance at improper familiarity, will infer corrupt intention as to the result.

The notoriously debauched character of the paramour; his exclusion from all respectable female society; the introduction of him, by the husband, to his wife; the encouragement of their intimacy; the allowing her to accept a supply of money from him; expostulations from her family at such intimacy; the refusal of the husband to attend to them; and improper familiarities and liberties in his presence, and without his remonstrance, are material facts in a plea of connivance. Moorsom v. Moorsom, 3 Hag. Ec. 87, 105.

Mere imprudence, and error in judgment, are not connivance: honesty of intentions, not wisdom of conduct, is to be considered.

Affectionate conduct to a wife for many years; no appearance, during that time, of a wish to withdraw from her society; and the absence of any reason to suppose that the husband knew or suspected her depravity, till very shortly before she left him, tend most strongly to disprove connivance at the turpitude of, or active co-operation in the prostitution of a wife. Hoar v. Hoar, 3 Hag. Ec. 137, 139.

A constant intercourse, continued for four years, between a wife and her paramour, not clandestine, but the common subject of conversation among servants and friends, raises a grave suspicion of the husband's knowledge and acquiescence. Crewe v. Crewe, 3 Hag. Ec. 125.

Where the wife made no defence to a suit for divorce by reason of her adultery, the Court dismissed the suit, on the ground, that the husband having connived at his wife's adultery with A, could not complain of an adultery nearly contemporary, with B. Lovering v. Lovering, 3 Hag. Ec. 85.

The adultery of the wife being proved, but she having, with her children, but without her husband, resided in a gentleman's house, (of which she was treated as the mistress, and where she was delivered of three children,) without the husband sufficiently accounting for his absence, or providing for her, or interfering with such residence, the Court dismissed her, on the ground, that the husband, by such conduct, had consented to the connexion and adultery. Michelson v. Michelson, 3 Hag. Ec. 147.

(C) Pleading, Evidence, and Practice.

When a libel pleaded facts — first, to establish the adultery of the wife; secondly, to shew that the husband had not forfeited his claim for relief by misconduct; the Court directed parts to be reformed, on the several grounds of too great minuteness, hearsay, and pleading the contents of a letter not exhibited, nor accounted for; and admitted the rest. Croft v. Croft, 3 Hag. Ec. 310.

Though the Court will not, on presumption, and in the absence of matter strongly inculpatory, impute connivance to the husband, it will not debar him from pleading that which makes the history consistent and natural. Croft v. Croft, 3 Hag. Ec. 312.

The conduct of the wife, during the absence of her husband, being so indecorous as to induce a lady, with whom she resided, to recommend her removal to her mother, is pleadable.

Where parties are living separate, the commencement of the acquaintance with the alleged paramour, and of the suspicions of the person under whose care the wife was, should be set forth circumstantially. Croft v. Croft, 3 Hag. Ec. 315.

Where the wife, engaged in an improper communication with the paramour, was compelled to retire, the whole transaction may be pleaded.

Where a letter is pleaded to be in the possession of the adverse party, the contents may be set forth at length, leaving the other party, if she pleases, to produce the letter.

A declaration of the paramour, in the wife's absence, that she had committed adultery previous to the adultery charged in the libel, is not admissible; but a declaration in her presence, and confirmed by her, is; and the Court cannot reject it, on the ground of its reflecting on third parties, nor that it does not establish adultery previous to the charges in the libel. Croft v. Croft, 3 Hag. Ec. 310, 318.

A libel, pleading specific acts of adultery and cruelty, can only be rejected, in toto, on one of two grounds:—first, that the plea, on the face of it, shews a case impossible of proof; secondly, that it evidently appears, from the facts pleaded, that the party complaining has barred herself.

When the husband's adultery is to be proved by pregnancy and acknowledgment of children, it is not necessary to plead particular acts.

Quære, whether condonation, unless as far as is admitted by the adverse case, can be set up without being pleaded:—Semble, that, in no case has it been held to estop a party, where not pleaded.

Venereal disease, long after marriage, is primâ facie evidence of adultery.

The wife's knowledge and forgiveness of adultery, is matter of defence, and to be proved distinctly and clearly.

Evidence, extracted upon cross-examination, (in order to shew condonation, compensatio criminum, or to discredit one adverse witness by another,) if relied on as the sole ground of defence, has far slighter effect than when a defensive, recriminatory, or exceptive plea is given in, and examined to.

In examining evidence and proofs, the Court must not take the charges insulated and detached, but the whole together; and must consider what has been the admitted conduct of the party under similar circumstances. Durant v. Durant, 1 Hag. Ec. 747, 768.

Minute acts should not be pleaded, but properly come out in evidence.

A long adulterous intercourse and cohabitation; the birth, maintenance, and acknowledgment of a child, are pleadable, if there is nothing that necessarily affects the wife with the knowledge thereof.

In a suit for divorce, by reason of the husband's adultery and cruelty, the Court will not inquire into his depriving the wife of her separate property; aliter as to her paraphernalia.

Upon the charge of keeping certain specified houses, to which he took divers loose women, specification of place is sufficient, without specification of time.

The mode in which, after a separation, a return to cohabitation was effected, is material to shew whether there was, or was not, condonation.

If the Mosaic law, as at present received, allows concubines, such a privilege could not be noticed without being specially pleaded. Quære, whether it could be noticed at all in the courts of this country.

The remoteness of facts deposed to, accounts for witnesses relating them with less precision and distinctness. All that the Court can require, is, to be satisfied that the evidence is substantially true.

To domestic conduct, friends, dependents, and servants, can alone speak: they must have some bias, and the Court must receive their evidence with some drawbacks. D'Aguilar v. D'Aguilar, 1 Hag. Ec. 776, 784.

In a suit for separation by reason of the wife's adultery, connivance on the part of the husband may be pleaded by the wife, consistently with a denial.

Indifference, ill behaviour, or cruelty, is not pleadable in answer to a charge of adultery, nor relevant to a plea of connivance.

As a plea of connivance must generally be circumstantial, and consist of many facts, trifling when taken separately, but altogether convincing, the Court must allow a latitude in such a defence.

Much delay having occurred in the wife's defence, a plea of minute facts to establish connivance having been admitted, and the cause now standing "to propound all facts," an allegation of the wife, not responsive, but pleading more minutely, but to the same effect as in the former plea, rejected in toto, the facts not being noviter pertenta.

The whole substantive case of a party should at once be brought before the Court; but where it is clearly shewn, that the facts could not have been sooner pleaded, additional articles may be given in.

Connivance of a passive and permissive kind, is to be proved by a train of conduct and circumstances. Moorsom v. Moorsom, 3 Hag. Ec. 91, 106.

An allegation, pleading facts to infer connivance, as a bar to the husband's prayer for a sentence of separation, by reason of his wife's adultery, rejected, because, as no single fact pleaded necessarily inferred a knowledge of the wife's guilt, nor a suspicion that an adulterous intercourse had been, or was about to be formed; and as the whole, taken together, did not warrant an imputation on the husband of consenting to, or intending, his wife's adultery, his conduct laid in the allegation, even if proved, would not amount to connivance; to constitute which, there must be intentional concurrence.

A plea of connivance does not necessarily admit adultery.

Connivance is generally proved by circumstantial evidence.

To support a plea of connivance, when no adultery during cohabitation is charged nor admitted, the clearest evidence of intention and consent would be required. Rogers v. Rogers, 3 Hag. Ec. 57, 72.

A party being before the Court in a suit for divorce by reason of cruelty, acts of adultery subsequent to the citation may be pleaded. Barrett v. Barrett, 1 Hag. Ec. 22.

Great facility in condonation of adultery with A; taking no notice of adultery with B (of which he could not be ignorant); conduct amounting to an invitation to adultery with C—not merely to giving free scope to the wife's licentiousness, in order to obtain conclusive evidence of guilt; marrimonial cohabitation, after being in possession of full legal proof of such adultery; are criminal connivance and collusion, barring the husband of relief for his wife's adultery: all happening within two years after marriage.

In a suit for separation by reason of the wife's adultery, the husband must prove his case, so that his own evidence shall not create a bar, by reason of connivance or compensatio criminum; for, of such evidence, the wife is entitled to the full benefit.

A facility of condonation of adultery, on the part of the husband, leads to the inference, that he does not duly estimate the injury, and will induce the Court to look with jealousy at his subsequent conduct.

Conduct amounting to an invitation to adultery, and not merely to giving scope to the wife's licentiousness, in order to obtain conclusive evidence of guilt, is legal prostitution.

Semble, that the husband, by pleading that the wife slept at his house on the night after the last act of adultery charged, (of which adultery he was at the time informed,) takes on himself the onus of shewing, that they did not sleep together on that night; though, generally speaking, the party relying on condonation, as a bar, should plead it. Timmings v. Timmings, 3 Hag. Ec. 76, 84.

In a suit for separation, by reason of cruelty, brought by the wife, an acquittal of her witnesses, (for a conspiracy, in counselling her to institute this suit,) upon an indictment laid by the husband, and his evidence thereon, in which he admitted and repeated certain accusations originally alleged in the libel as acts of cruelty, may be pleaded as a continuation, and admission on oath, of that cruelty. Bray v. Bray, 1 Hag. Ec. 163.

On a suggestion, that a charge of collusion and connivance, raised in argument on his own evidence, was a surprise on the husband, there being no counter-plea, or interrogatories, the Court refused to rescind the conclusion, in order that letters might be pleaded—holding, that the husband was bound to guard himself, originally, against such suggestions.

On proof of the wife's adultery, continued for four years, under circumstances which raised a strong suspicion that the husband could not have been ignorant, the Court, after much hesitation and difficulty, granted the sentence of separation, as it could not affect the husband with direct knowledge of the adultery, and as three witnesses had positively sworn, they believed the husband was ignorant.

Witnesses should be required to answer to their belief or impression, as to whether adultery had been committed or not, though the Court cannot rely on such opinion.

The 105th canon, requiring that divorce should not go on confession alone, the Court is almost bound to reject an affirmative issue, in a suit for separation for adultery.

Passive connivance, or toleration, arising from the husband's insensibility to his own honour, or unwillingness to seek redress, is a bar to relief, if there be proved a long course of criminal conduct, of which he was, or of which he must be presumed to be cognizant: he may wait for adequate proof, but no longer. Crewe v. Crewe, 3 Hag. Ec. 123, 131.

In a cause of divorce, articles to account for the husband's delay in instituting the suit are admissible, but need not be examined to, unless the defence renders it necessary, to justify his conduct.

If adultery, continued for many years, attended with pregnancy, and birth of a child, during the husband's absence from Great Britain, be pleaded, it is useless to prove more than a few facts:—such as the birth of a child, identity, and non-access. Richardson v. Richardson, 1 Hag. Ec. 6.

When no indecent familiarity, proximate act, or personal freedom, (except two kisses,) and no circumstances inferring adultery, are proved, letters from the alleged paramour, found in the wife's possession, but not necessarily implying the commission of adultery, will not support a sentence of separation by reason of her adultery; but if the evidence raises a suspicion, that an adulterous intercourse is carrying on between the parties accused, the Court may, upon affidavits, rescind the conclusion, and allow the husband to give in an allegation.

In a suit of separation, by reason of the wife's adultery, after the arguments of counsel are closed, and after the Court has delivered its opinion, that, though culpable and suspicious conduct had been, adultery had not been proved, it is a fit exercise of discretion to rescind the conclusion, for the purpose of admitting an allegation pleading further matter to establish the wife's guilt.

The law does not require direct evidence of the very act committed at a specific time and place; but the Court must be satisfied that actual adultery has been committed. Hamerton v. Hamerton, 2 Hag. Ec. 314.

Where the evidence did not amount to judicial proof of the wife's adultery, but her conduct had been so culpable as to raise strong suspicions of criminality, and induce the Court to rescind the conclusion to admit fresh evidence, proof that, during the progress of the suit, the alleged particeps criminis had frequently visited her alone, and remained late at night, will, coupled with the former evidence, found a sentence of separation. Hamerton v. Hamerton, 3 Hag. Ec. 1.

Semble, going to a brothel, and remaining alone for a considerable time in a room, with a common prostitute, is sufficient evidence from which to infer adultery.

A married man, going to a brothel, knowing it to be a house of that description, raises a suspicion of adultery necessary to be rebutted by the very best evidence.

In a suit for separation à mensâ et thoro, the wife's adultery being fully established, but she having, on a recriminatory allegation, proved facts antecedent to her adultery, from which the Court necessarily presumed the husband's adultery, this amounts to compensatio criminum, and the wife is entitled to be dismissed. Astley v. Astley, 1 Hag. Ec. 714, 720.

Where a criminal connexion is once shewn, its continuance is presumed where the parties live under the same roof.

Condonation may be meritorious: connivance necessarily involves criminality; and, therefore, the evidence to establish it should be the more grave and conclusive.

The Court, or the husband's counsel, may take the objection of the wife's connivance, where it clearly appears on the evidence adduced by her; but quære, whether such a defence can be set up on interrogatories alone: at all events, to support such a defence, so set up, the conduct and evidence to prove it must be most unequivocal, and incapable of explanation.

After publication, in a suit for separation for the husband's adultery, the Court will not, in the first instance, delay the hearing, in order that the wife may counterplead her letters annexed to the husband's interrogatories, from which connivance, or a par delictum (neither pleaded), is to be inferred; but, semble, that it will not ultimately allow her to be barred by reason of such letters, without affording her an opportunity of explaining them.

The Court will not, before the hearing, rescind the conclusion, in order to admit an allegation, counterpleading letters annexed to interrogatories; nor will it direct such letters to be disannulled; but, semble, that, if, at the hearing, the letters appear important, it will then allow the admissibility of the allegation to be debated. Turton v. Turton, 3 Hag. Ec. 343, 352.

Facts of adultery, newly come to the knowledge of the party, may be pleaded after publication. Webb v. Webb, 1 Hag. Ec. 349.

Cruelty cannot be pleaded by the wife in bar of a charge of adultery. Harris v. Harris, 2 Hag. Ec. 376.

Where the wife is charged with adultery, her conduct and declarations, on a confession of guilt by the alleged particeps criminis being communicated to her, are admissible evidence on behalf of the husband. Harris v. Harris, 2 Hag. Ec. 407.

On proof, either directly or presumptively, of the wife's adultery, great inattention on the part of the husband will not bar him. To establish such a defence, he must have been privy to her guilt, or have led her into the crime. Rix v. Rix, 3 Hag. Ec. 74.

To establish connivance in bar to a suit on account of the wife's adultery, it is not necessary to shew knowledge of, and privity to, the actual commission of adultery; such extreme negligence to the conduct of his wife, and such encouragement of acquaintance and familiar intimacy, as are likely to lead to an adulterous intercourse, are sufficient. Gilpin v. Gilpin, 3 Hag. Ec. 150.

On a suit for restitution, the defendant must be compelled to return, unless it be proved that the plaintiff's inherent right is forfeited; but, semble, less strict proof of cruelty or adultery is necessary, to answer to such a suit, than where the party making these charges is the original complainant. Bramwell v. Bramwell, 3 Hag. Ec. 619.

Unpleaded condonation can only avail as a bar so far as it is fully established by evidence.

The general presumption is, that a husband and wife living in the same house, live on terms of matrimonial cohabitation; but particular circumstances may repel that presumption.

It does not follow, that because condonation will bar the remedy of a party agent, it will destroy the defence of a party recriminating. Beeby v. Beeby, 1 Hag. Ec. 795, 7.

DOCKS.

The port of Kingston-upon-Hull is mentioned in acts of Parliament, charters, and other documents, in two senses: first, according to the popular understanding, as denoting a particular place; and secondly, in a larger acceptation, as comprising under one name a district of many places classed together for the purposes of the revenue, and of which Kingston-upon-Hull is the chief.

The statute 14 Geo. 3. c. 56. s. 42, which gives the Hull Dock Company a tonnage on ships coming into or going out of the harbour of Kingston-upon-Hull, and the company's basin or docks within the port of Kingston-upon-Hull, or unlading or lading any of their cargo within the said port, must be construed as using the term "port" in the popular sense; and not, therefore, as extending the burden of dock duties in places which, in point of local description, are without the port of Hull; as Goole, on the river Ouse. The Dock Company at Kingston-upon-Hull v. Browne, 2 B. & Ad. 43.

A dock company having a swing bridge on a public highway are bound, in the passing of vessels, to use all reasonable means (both as to the number of men employed, and the number of ships passed at a time) to prevent unnecessary delay; and if they do not do all which can be expected of reasonable men, and any one is obstructed in consequence, such obstruction will make them liable in damages for the injury sustained. Wiggins v. Boddington, 3 C. & P. 544. [Best]

DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA.

[Duffield v. Elwes, 1 Dow. & C. A.C. 1, Dig. Law J. 208.]

Quære—whether a donatio mortis causâ is avoided by the fact, that a will or codicil is subsequently made. Whether a remainder may be limited on a donatio mortis causâ. Whether the donatio mortis causâ, being of a mortgage debt, a gift of the same sum, with the same remainder over, in a subsequent codicil, is to be considered a satisfaction. Hambrooke v. Simmons, 4 Russ. 25.

DOWER.

Adultery committed by the wife after a separation by mutual consent, is a bar to her right to dower. Hetherington v. Graham, 7 Law J. C.P. 233, s. c. 6 Bing. 135, s. c. 3 M. & P. 399.

A, previous to his marriage with an infant who had no fortune, by an indenture, to which her father was a party, granted a rent-charge of 100*l.* a year to trustees, for her during her life, after his decease; to be in bar of dower, and issuing out of certain lands: at the time of the execution of the indenture, he had no power of charging any jointure on those lands; but it was, during his life, confirmed by the remainder-man, who, A not having any sons, became entitled in possession to the lands upon A's death:—Held, that the widow was barred of all claim to dower. Corbett v. Corbett, 7 Law J. Chanc. 9.

DRIVING.

Though the rule of a road is not to be adhered to, if, by departing from it, an injury can be avoided, yet, in cases where parties meet on the sudden, and an injury results, the party on the wrong side should be held answerable, unless it appear clearly that the party on the right had ample means and opportunity to prevent it. Chaplin v. Hawes, 3 C. & P. 554. [Best]

If the carriage of A strike against the cart of B, and a person who sees it demand the address of the owner of the carriage, the address given by a person in the carriage is admissible in evidence; but a statement, that any damage done will be paid for, is not so. Beamon v. Ellice, 4 C. & P. 585. [Taunton]

In an action for the negligent driving of the defendant's coach, the plaintiff gave evidence of the goods destroyed being in the possession of his servant. The witness who proved this was cross-examined, with a view of shewing the goods to be the property of P, and the defendant called witnesses to prove them the property of P:—Semble, that P may be called as a witness in reply, to prove that the goods were not his. Whittingham v. Blaxham, 4 C. & P. 597. [Patteson]

In an action for negligent driving, a plan, which is to be put into the hands of the witnesses, should merely shew the street, pavement, the turnings, corners, &c., and not the supposed position of the carriages; if it do so, the Judge will not allow it to be used. Beamon v. Ellice, 4 C. & P. 585. [Taunton]

In case for negligent driving against the plaintiff's horse, the plaintiff's servant, in whose charge the horse was, is incompetent for the plaintiff. Sherman v. Barnes, 2 M. & M. 69. [Tindal]

ECCLESIASTICAL COURT.

[Regulation of duties, salaries, and emoluments of officers, clerks, and ministers. 10 Geo. 4. c. 53, 7 Law J. Statutes, 120.]

Generally speaking, all ecclesiastical jurisdictions are limited in their authority to property locally situate within their district. Crosley v. the Archdeacon of Sudbury, 3 Hag. Ec. 199.

The proctor, being the dominus litis, is responsible to the Court for the purity of the proceedings. Mynn v. Robinson, 2 Hag. Ec. 195.

When a party regularly complains of gross extortion by his proctor, the Court may punish the proctor by suspension or otherwise. Peddle v. Evans, 1 Hag. Ec. 687.

The Court will exert all its powers to restrain proctors from undertaking causes on condition of sharing in the effects, or of any benefit beyond the payment of fair costs.

The Court inclines to discountenance an agreement on the part of a proctor to accept only disbursements from his client, an appellant; as it is the policy of the law to protect both respondents and appellants from useless litigation. Peddle v. Toller, 3 Hag. Ec. 291, 3.

On complaint against a proctor, of an extortionate charge (88*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*) for taking out probate in common form, the bill was referred to the Registrars, who reported the proper charge to be 52*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.* The Court suspended the proctor for three months, and condemned him in costs; it being the first time his conduct had been brought before the Court, and a medical certificate of his inability to attend to business when the bill was delivered, being produced. In the goods of Lady Finch, 3 Hag. Ec. 255.

On appeal in a criminal suit, an extension of the term probatory being prayed by the promoter, a delay of nine months, without making substantial progress in the cause, or examining a single witness, (after the suit had been already depending in the Court of Appeal two years,) is a sufficient ground to dismiss the defendant, and condemn the promoter in payment of a sum nomine expensarum. Jenkins v. Barrett, 1 Hag. Ec. 12.

EJECTMENT.

(A) Where maintainable.
(B) Between Landlord and Tenant.
(C) Declaration and Service.
(D) Notice to appear.
(E) Consent Rule and Recognizance.
(F) Pleading and Evidence.
(G) Judgment.
(H) Execution.
(I) Costs.

(A) Where maintainable.

[See Land Tax.]

Prior possession, however short, is a sufficient primâ facie title in ejectment against a mere wrong doer. Hughes v. Dyeball, 2 M. & M. 346, s. c. 3 C. & P. 610. [Tenterden]

One who is in possession under an agreement to purchase, is a tenant at will; and he cannot be ousted by ejectment, until the tenancy be determined by demand of possession or otherwise.

But any act of waste by the tenant—for instance, the grubbing up a hedge which separated two fields—determines the tenancy; and, the tenancy being determined, ejectment may be maintained without a demand of possession. Doe d. Mellersh v. Redman, 8 Law J. K.B. 154.

Conveyance, by lease, release, and fine, of land in the adverse occupation of another, conveys no estate to the relessee; and an ejectment, on the demise of such relessee, is not maintainable. Doe d. Masterman v. Maling, 9 Law J. C.P. 231.

Where lands were vested in trustees for the benefit of a parish church:—Held, that the parish officers for the time being might recover possession of them in ejectment upon a demise in their names, under the authority of the 59 Geo. 3. c. 22. s. 17. Doe d. Jackson v. Hiley, 8 Law J. M.C. 105, s. c. 10 B. & C. 885.

(B) Between Landlord and Tenant.

In a case of adverse possession, notice to quit is unnecessary. Doe d. Cheese v. Creed, Doe d. Davies v. Creed, 7 Law J. C.P. 138, s. c. 5 Bing. 227, s. c. 2 M. & P. 648.

Where the tenant in possession made one payment of rent to the person who was entitled to the freehold; and that person, about the same time, cut some timber upon the property; and nothing further was done until fifteen years afterwards, when his heir brought an ejectment:—Held, that this was not a mere entry, subject to the provisions of the statute, 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, s. 16; but a seisin and a possession, by which the relation of landlord and tenant subsisted.

A disclaimer by a tenant of his tenancy with his landlord may have a retrospective effect, so as to entitle the landlord to recover upon a demise laid in point of date before the disclaimer was pronounced. Thus, demand of rent by letter on the 18th of June; answer by letter on the 26th, that the tenancy had ceased for several years; ejectment, laying the day of the demise on the 1st of May:—Held, that the ejectment was well brought without a notice to quit. Doe d. Grubb v. Grubb, 8 Law J. K.B. 321, s. c. 10 B. & C. 816.

A tenant from year to year died, and a regular notice to quit was served on the widow, who remained in possession:—Held, that the landlord might recover in ejectment, unless it were shewn, that some other person, and not the widow, was executor or administrator of the tenant; and that it was not incumbent on the landlord to shew that the widow was either executrix or administratrix. Rees d. Mears v. Perrot, 4 C. & P. 230. [Littledale]

In ejectment, to recover demised premises, for non-payment of rent, under the usual proviso for re-entry on non-payment for twenty-one days, it appeared that the rent was payable quarterly, and that a demand of more than one quarter's rent was made on the 21st day, at one o'clock:—Held, that only one quarter's rent should have been demanded, and that at sunset. Doe d. Wheeldon v. Paul, 3 C. & P. 613. [Tenterden]

In ejectment by a mortgagee against the tenant of the mortgagor, it was proved, that, on a day subsequent to the day of the demise laid in the declaration, an agent of the mortgagee obtained from the occupier a sum that was due from him to the mortgagor for rent; part of which money was appropriated by the agent in discharge of interest due upon the mortgage:—Held, that this was such a recognition of the tenancy of the occupier as precluded the mortgagee from treating him as a trespasser. Doe d. Whitaker v. Hales, 9 Law J. C.P. 110, s. c. 7 Bing. 322, s. c. 5 M. & P. 132.

(C) Declaration and Service.

[Where the right of entry accrues in Hilary or Trinity Term, a declaration may be served within ten days after the tenancy expires, or the right accrues, with a notice to appear and plead in ten days, 1 W. 4. c. 70. s. 36, 8 Law J. Stat. 162.]

Where the first day in full term falls on a Sunday, the essoign is to be calculated from that day.

Where a declaration in ejectment was served on the essoign day by mistake, the Court directed the rule for judgment to be served on the tenants in possession, and granted the rule for judgment against the casual ejector absolute, unless cause was shewn in five days after such service. Doe d. Brent v. Roe, 1 C. & J. 483.

In services of ejectment, the Court looks more at the notice than at the title of the declaration, and will suffer the latter to be amended if the former is correct. Doe v. Courtney, 9 Law J. C.P. 225.

Where one of several houses sought to be recovered in an action of ejectment is empty, as to that the plaintiff must proceed as upon a vacant possession. Anon. 8 Law J. C.P. 111.

Service of a declaration and notice in ejectment upon a woman who represented herself to be the wife of the tenant in possession:—Held sufficient. Doe d. Walker v. Roe, 8 Law J. C.P. 110, s. c. 4 M. & P. 11.

Service of a declaration and notice in ejectment upon the son of the tenant, to whom the nature of the proceedings was explained:—Held, not sufficient, without shewing ground for presuming that they came to the hands of the father. Doe d. Bottomley v. Roe, 8 Law J. C.P. 110.

Service upon the son of the tenant in possession, and nailing a copy of the declaration and notice upon the premises:—Held, good service, where it was admitted that the party absented himself to avoid service. Doe v. Hart, 8 Law J. C.P. 269.

Service of a declaration in ejectment on a servant on the premises, is good service, if it appears that it came to the hands of the party. Doe d. Wide v. Roe, 8 Law J. C.P. 1.

A declaration in ejectment was served on the plaintiff's attorney, the tenant in possession having given a cognovit to confess judgment, authorizing the attorney to appear for him:—Held, good service. Doe d. Hart v. Roe, 8 Law J. C.P. 110.

(D) Notice to appear.

In ejectment, a notice to appear generally, where the declaration is served before the term, is a sufficient notice to appear within the next term. Doe v. Roe, 8 Law J. Exch. 81, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 280, s. c. 1 C. & J. 550.

(E) Consent Rule and Recognizance.

The Court will not permit a mortgagee to come in and defend as landlord under the 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, unless he clearly shew that his title may be affected by the result of the suit. Doe d. Pearson v. Roe, 8 Law J. C.P. 228, s. c. 6 Bing. 613, s. c. 4 M. & P. 437.

The recognizance, with two sureties, to pay damages and costs, required by the 1 Geo. 4. c. 87. s. 1, to be entered into by the tenant in possession upon his being admitted to defend, should not be entitled in the cause as it originally stood, but with the substitution of the name of the tenant for that of the nominal defendant. Roe d. Durant v. Moore, 8 Law J. C.P. 280, s. c. 6 Bing. 656; s. c. 4 M. & P. 531.

A defendant in ejectment cannot by a writ of error discharge his undertaking (under the 1 Geo. 4. c. 87, s. 1,) to give the plaintiff judgment of the term preceding the trial, and his recognizance (under s. 3,) not to commit waste, &c., without entering into the further recognizance, with two sureties, as required by the third section of that statute. Roe d. Durant v. Moore, 9 Law J. C.P. 38, s. c. 7 Bing. 124, s. c. 4 M. & P. 761.

(F) Pleading and Evidence.

The plaintiff in ejectment is bound to produce the rule to confess lease, entry, and ouster, as part of his case. Lamble v. Lamble, 2 M. & M. 257. [Park]

Where the heir-in-tail had, for ten years, received rent reserved in a lease for ninety-nine years, granted by his ancestor, tenant in tail:—Held, a confirmation of the lease. Doe d. Southouse v. Jenkins, 7 Law J. C.P. 182, s. c. 5 Bing. 469, s. c. 5 M. & P. 32.

Where a person has been in possession for more than twenty years without paying rent, or otherwise acknowledging title in any one else, the presumption is, that the possession has been adverse; and it lies upon the claimant, not only to shew his own title, but to shew how the possession commenced, in order to rebut the presumption of its being adverse. Shield v. Sir G. Noel, Bart., 8 Law J. K.B. 166.

Evidence, that, within twenty years, a person in possession surrendered up the possession pro forma, and took it again, being told at the same time that he was to hold only so long as the person to whom he gave up the possession pleased,—is evidence to go to the jury, that the whole of the possession, though for many more than twenty years, was permissive, and not adverse; although there be no evidence of payment, or demand of rent, or any other recognition of title. Doe d. Thompson v. Clark, 7 Law J. K.B. 122, s.c. 8 B.& C. 717.

Testator devised an estate to several persons, for their lives, successively, with power to grant leases, under certain restrictions. The first tenant for life grants a lease to a person who had no notice of the power, or that the lessor was tenant for life only. A subsequent tenant for life brings an ejectment against the lessee, on the ground that the lease was not made according to the power. The Court will not prevent the lessee from setting up an old outstanding term created by the testator. Goleborn v. Alcock, 2 Sim. 552.

Upon the trial of an ejectmest, the landlord (defendant,) proposed to call the tenants in possession of different parts of the property, upon whom ejectments had been served, to prove an adverse possession; but they were held to be incompetent; and the Court refused to enter into the question, whether they were competent to prove the possession of each other, because the distinction had not been pointed out at the trial—but intimated an opinion, that they were not competent for any purpose. Doe d. Lewis v. Preece, 1 C. & J. 515, s.c. 1 Tyrw. 410.

In ejectment, the lessor of the plaintiff proved possession in his father and himself for a period of twenty-two years. The defendant also proved a subsequent uninterrupted possession for eleven years: —Held, that in the absence of evidence of title in the defendant, the presumption was in favour of the first possessor. Doe d. Harding v. Cooke, 9 Law J. C.P. 118, s.c. 7 Bing. 346, s.c. 5 M. & P. 181.

In an ejectment, a person who has had possession of the property is not a competent witness for the defendant to prove that he (the witness,) has held it for more than twenty years: if the lessor of the plaintiff recovered, the witness would be liable to an action for mesne profits. Lewis v. Preece, 4 C. & P. 556. [Bosanquet]

An ejectment against a weekly tenant: the notice proved, was, to quit on Wednesday, the 4th of August. The witness, who was called to prove that Wednesday was the expiration of the current week of the tenancy, said that he guessed "the defendant came in about a Tuesday or a Wednesday, but had no recollection which:"—Held, insufficient. Finlayson v. Finlayson, 5 C. & P. 67. [Tindal]

In ejectment by a mortgagee, the mere fact of his having received interest on the mortgage down to a time later than the day of the demise in the declaration, does not amount to a recognition by him, that the mortgagor or his tenant was in lawful possession of the premises till the time when such interest was paid, and consequently is no defence to the ejectment. Doe d. Rogers v. Cadwallader, 2 B. & Ad. 473.

In ejectment, the plaintiff's witness stating that the premises had been held by the ancestor of the defendant, under a written agreement or lease:—Held, that the plaintiff was bound to produce that agreement. Fenn d. Thomas v. Griffith, 8 Law J. C.P. 218, s.c. 6 Bing. 533, s.c. 4 M. & P. 299.

Upon an affidavit that a person had stolen the lease whereon the ejectment was brought, and had either given it to the real defendants, or held it for their benefit, the Court discharged a peremptory undertaking, and gave plaintiff's lessor leave to give in evidence at the trial an examined copy of the enrolment—the defendants not having sworn that they had not seen the deed, or that they did not know where it was. Doe d. Pearson v. Ries, 9 Law J. C.P. 226, s.c. 7 Bing. 724.

In an action of ejectment by the reversioner, (on the expiration of a building lease,) to recover possession of a house, which adjoined one that the lessor of the plaintiff had sold to the defendant, and the description of which, in the surrender, (it being copyhold,) contained the words—"as now occupied by A B, or his under-tenants;" an underlease, (granted pending the existence of the original building-lease,) under which A B claimed the ground upon which both the houses were built, was received as evidence of the mode in which the property had been enjoyed. Doe d. Tims v. Jordan, 4 C. & P. 146. [Tindal]

(G) Judgment.

[Doe d. Dyeball v. Laurie, 2 M. & R. 184, Dig. Law J. 214.]

(H) Execution.

[On the trial of ejectments, the Judge may certify, that a writ of possession ought to issue immediately, 1 Will. 4. c. 70. s. 38, 8 Law J. Stat. 163.]

In cases of ejectment, the certificate of the Judge must, under the statute 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 70. s. 38, be for immediate possession, or the case must take its ordinary course; but if the Judge should think that some time ought to be allowed to the defendant, he will grant a certificate for immediate possession—the lessor of the plaintiff undertaking not to enforce it for a certain time. Packer v. Hilliard, 5 C. & P. 132. [Park]

If a lessor of the plaintiff is nonsuited for want of the defendant's confessing lease, entry, and ouster, the Judge will not grant a certificate under the statute 1 W. 4. c. 70. s. 30, to give the lessor of the plaintiff immediate possession, unless an affidavit, stating the circumstances of the case, be laid before him. Under that statute, the Judge has no discretion as to the time at which the lessor of the plaintiff shall have possession, as he must either grant a certificate to enable him to get immediate possession, or let the case take its regular course. Williamson v. Dawson, 4 C. & P. 589. [Taunton]

(I) Costs.

Where three ejectments were brought against a landlord and his two tenants, and the landlord obtained a rule for the consolidation of the three actions; and that the ejectment against one of the tenants (who was a pauper,) should abide the event of the ejectment against the other; and that action was tried, and the lessor of the plaintiff obtained judgment, and took possession of all the tenements; the Court compelled the landlord to pay the costs of that ejectment. Thrustout v. Shenton, 10 B. & C. 110.

ELECTION.

[See PARLIAMENT.]

[Coleman v. Jones, 3 Russ. 312, Dig. Law J. 215. And see Nayler v. Wetherell, tit. COVENANT—Construction.]

Where a party has a power of appointment over a fund in favour of his children, and he appoints to a child (a married woman) for life, and afterwards upon trust for that child's issue, and gives his own personal estate in the same manner, the child of the appointor cannot, where the Court declares the appointment bad as to the issue, as against her husband, be put to her election, nor can the husband be forced to elect. Carver v. Bowles, 9 Law J. Chanc. 19.

A testatrix, having 30,000*l.* of three per cent. stock, transferred 25,000*l.* of it to trustees, upon trust for herself for her life, and after her death for such persons as she should by deed or will appoint: she appointed 25,000*l.* of the stock among her children: shortly afterwards she made a will, by which she gave legacies of stock to the amount of 30,000*l.* to persons, who also took under the appointment, though, in fact, exclusive of the 25,000*l.*, she had only 5,000*l.* stock, and the rest of the property was of inconsiderable value:—Held, that her declarations to her solicitor, at the time of giving instructions to him for her will, that she then had 30,000*l.* stock, were admissible in evidence—

And, those declarations being received,—Held, that the parties were bound to elect between the will and the deed of appointment. Guillebaud v. Meares, 7 Law J. Chanc. 136.

A testator begins his will by directing that all his just debts be first paid; he then devises Blackacre to A, and Whiteacre to B; and charges Blackacre, and A, his heirs, executors, and administrators, with payment of an annuity, which was secured by the testator's bond; gives various legacies, and bequeaths the residue of his personal estate to A; and, by a codicil, he revokes the gift of the residue, and gives half of it to A, and the other half to B:—Held, that, as between A and B, the personalty was exonerated from the annuity, and A was bound to elect, either to renounce all benefits under the will, or to provide for the annuity. Welby v. Rockliffe, 8 Law J. Chanc. 142, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 571.

If a father makes a provision for a child by a settlement on her marriage, and afterwards a provision for the same child by will, it is primâ facie to be presumed, that he does not mean to give double portions.

If there be but slight differences in the two provisions, the two instruments afford intrinsic evidence against double provisions; if the differences be material, then the contrary: but, in either case, extrinsic evidence may be admitted; as, a writing by the testator, made in contemplation, or at the time, of making his will; but not a memorandum written by him some time afterwards.

What are slight differences must be decided in each case by each particular Judge.

In cases where the difficulty of discovering intention is created by the testator, and there is any residuary estate, the costs must be paid out of it: in failure of residuary estate, the Court will not give costs to either party.

Executors, who are also the residuary legatees, are not entitled to their costs, it being to their interest to file the bill. Weall v. Rice, 9 Law J. Chanc. 116.

Construction of a will as to election. Baily v. Lloyd, 7 Law J. Chanc. 98.

A testator, seised of heritable lands in Scotland, devises all his estates whatsoever and wheresoever upon certain trusts: such a devise does not raise a case of election against the heir taking benefits under the will.

A testator, by a codicil, reciting that he had purchased certain estates since the date of his will, devised them upon the trusts of his will, and directed that if it should happen that any hereditaments purchased by him at any time or times should happen to be conveyed after the date and publishing thereof, then that his heir-at-law, or other real representatives, and every other person in whom the same should be vested, should, forthwith upon his decease, convey and assure the same to his trustees upon the trusts of his will: afterwards, he purchased other estates:—Held, that a case of election was not raised against the heir, as to the subsequently-purchased estates. Johnson v. Telford, 8 Law J. Chanc. 94, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 244.

A devise and bequest of "all my estate and effects, both real and personal, which I shall die possessed of," extends to lands purchased by the testator after the date of his will; and therefore the heir, taking benefits under the will, must elect. Churchman v. Ireland, 1 Russ. & M. 250.

To make out a case in equity of compulsory election, the party to be bound thereby must be shewn to be fully cognizant of the nature and extent of his rights in respect of each subject-matter of the choice so cast upon him, and to have actually elected as testified by his acts. Morgan v. Edwards, 13 Price, 732.

A, being tenant for life of a leasehold for years, with remainder to B, after devising one estate to B in tail, bequeathed to him the leasehold during his life, with remainders over, and gave him also the residue of his real and personal property. B took possession of the residuary estate; suffered a recovery of the lands devised to him in tail; acted as the absolute owner of the leasehold estate, and outlived the term for which the lease was granted, having previously acquired a new interest in the demised premises:—Held, that B elected to take under the will, and was bound to give effect to the devise of the leasehold in favour of the remainder-man. Giddings v. Giddings, 3 Russ. 241.

General F. Dundas, domiciled in Scotland, and possessed of a real estate in England, and of heritable and moveable property in Scotland, died, leaving a trust disposition of the whole of his subjects heritable and moveable, in favour of trustees, in which they are directed to turn the whole into money, and divide the proceeds equally among his four children; and the deed is executed in the Scottish form, attested by two witnesses. This not being sufficient to convey the English real estate, although it was clear that it was the intention of the disponer to convey it along with the rest of his property to the trustees, the eldest son and heir-at-law insisted, that it was a nullity as to the English estate, and that he was entitled to take that as heir-at-law to his father, and also to take his fourth share of the Scottish property.

Held, by the House of Lords, affirming an unanimous decision of the Judges of the Second Division of the Court of Session, that the heir-at-law was put to his approbate or reprobate (election), and must waive all objections, and allow the trust disposition to have full effect as to the whole property, according to the intent of the disponer, or take nothing under the disposition. Dundas v. Dundas, 2 Dow. & C. A.C. 349.

ELEGIT.

A creditor obtained judgment against his debtor. Subsequently, the debtor took freehold property by indentures of lease and release. The conveyance was in the usual form with uses to bar dower, and with a life estate, and a power of appointment to the purchaser. The purchaser afterwards exercised his power of appointment in favour of another person. Subsequently to all this, the judgment creditor sued out an elegit, and obtained possession through the sheriff's inquisition:—Held, that, although the judgment attached in the first instance upon the life estate of the debtor, that life estate became defeated by the subsequent exercise of the power of appointment; and that the judgment creditor could not maintain the possession against the person in whose favour the power of appointment was executed. Doe d. Wigan v. Jones, 8 Law J. K.B. 214, s. c. 10 B. & C. 457.

Where two elegits are issued on two several judgments of the same term, though by different plaintiffs, and inquisitions are taken thereon at the same time, the sheriff must deliver under each writ, a moiety of the whole lands, whereof the defendant was seised at the time of the issuing of the elegits. Doe d. Cheese v. Creed, Doe d. Davies v. Creed, 7 Law J. C.P. 138, s. c. 5 Bing. 327, s. c. 2 M. & P. 540.

Where a creditor sets up title under an elegit, he must by his pleading aver seisin in the debtor. The mere setting out the inquisition, in which seisin is averred, will not be sufficient.

But the inquisition must be set out, as well as the averment of seisin. (Per Holroyd.)

Where both parties to a suit claimed under the same person, the plaintiff being in possession under a demise, and the defendant being a creditor by a subsequent judgment, elegit and inquisition; the title of the former was preferred, although there had been a prior demise to another person;—it being held, that the judgment creditor, claiming through the debtor, was estopped by his acts; and that as the plaintiff under the demise had a good title against the debtor, and against all but the prior lessee, he was entitled to maintain trespass against the judgment creditor, for disturbing his possession. Chatfield v. Parker, 7 Law J. K.B. 13, s. c. 8 B. & C. 543, s. c. 2 M. & R. 540.

D, having an estate for life in lands, situate in England and Ireland, assigned them, together with his furniture, &c., by several indentures, to trustees, for a term of ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, in trust, out of the rents and profits, after satisfaction of a jointure, prior to the life estate, and the interest of a mortgage, and certain annuities created by the appellant, to pay to the appellant an annuity of 5,000*l.*, and to his creditors by bond, judgment, and simple contract, (parties to the deed of assignment,) interest at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. upon their respective debts; and to apply the surplus from time to time in the gradual extinction of the capital of the debts.

The creditors generally executed the deed of trust and assignment, by which they covenanted not to sue the appellant. But P and B, creditors of D, by simple contract, having obtained judgment for their debts, first in England and afterwards in Ireland, sued out a writ of fieri facias, directed to the sheriff of the county of R, in Ireland, who seized the goods of D, but refused to sell them, in consequence of a claim made by the trustees to whom they had been assigned by D. Whereupon P and B, in 1820, filed a bill in Chancery in Ireland, on behalf of themselves and other creditors of D, which stated these facts; and, setting forth, in part, the deed of trust and assignment as it appeared in the registry; but, alleging that they were ignorant of the trusts, prayed that the defendants might set forth the deed, and that the creditors might have power to elect to take the benefit of the deed, or otherwise, that it might be declared fraudulent and void as to them; and that, in the meantime, a receiver of the rents might be appointed, and that they might be applied in payment of the debts. After the bill was filed, two of the trustees died, and two new trustees were appointed. D and the surviving trustee put in their answers.

In 1824, P and B filed a supplemental bill against D and the surviving trustees, stating the deed of assignment and trust; that under it D was entitled to a rent-charge, issuing out of the lands held in trust by the surviving trustee; and that they had sued out an elegit against D, for the sum of 1,827*l.*, directed to the sheriff of R, who returned, that D or his trustee was seised of a freehold rent, issuing out of lands in the county of R, one moiety of which he had delivered to P and B, to hold, &c., till they had levied the damages marked on the writ. They claimed by the bill to be entitled either to a moiety of the lands or of the rent-charge, or to have satisfaction of their judgment out of the annuity payable to B under the trusts of the deed. Upon these grounds, they prayed by their bill a receiver either of a moiety of the lands comprised in the sheriff's return to the writ, to the extent of one moiety of the 5,000*l.* per annum, or of the lands comprised in the deeds of assignment and trust; and, after satisfaction of the charges having priority according to the trusts of the deed, that a moiety or a competent part of the 5,000*l.* per annum might be applied in payment of their demand, and that the trustee might be restrained from paying the annuity to D till the demand was satisfied.

After the filing of the bill, two orders were made;—one for the appointment of a receiver—the other restraining the trustee from paying the annuity to D, to the amount of 1,260*l.* The trustee, by his answer, suggested that his co-trustees and the creditors of D were necessary parties to the suit. D, by his answer, insisted upon the validity of the deed, and the priority of the trusts (including his own annuity,) over the judgment of P and B. As soon as the answers were filed, applications were made to the Master of the Rolls on the part of D, to discharge the receiver and rescind the injunction; and, on the part of P and B, to continue the receiver and injunction till the hearing, which was granted, and the motion of D was refused; and this decision was affirmed on appeal to the Lord Chancellor of Ireland.

Held, affirming the judgments of the Courts below, that, under the circumstances above stated, the orders appointing a receiver, and restraining the surviving trustee from paying the annuity to D, were properly made—that it was not necessary for this purpose, that the prior incumbrancers, nor the creditors, should be parties to the suit:—Held, also, that the defects in the sheriff's return to the elegit were immaterial, as no return is necessary, and the suing out an elegit is sufficient to ground the equity. Held, further, that one elegit is sufficient, although the rent was payable out of the lands in three counties. Lord Dillon v. Plaskett, 2 Bligh, N.S. 239, s.c. 1 Dow. & C. A.C. 390.

EMBEZZLEMENT.

A was employed to lead a stallion; and he was to charge 30*s.* a mare, and not take less than 20*s.* He received a sum of 6*s.* for the covering of a mare, which he did not account for:—Held, no embezzlement, as this sum was not received "by virtue of his employment." Rex v. Snowley, 4 C. & P. 390. ## EQUITY.

[See PRACTICE.]

Where the plaintiff's case is defective in the substantial object of the suit, he cannot have relief in equity on a point immaterial to the main issue. Kendall v. Beckett, 9 Law J. Chanc. 24.

A court of equity will not entertain a bill of discovery in aid of an action to recover money, alleged to have been obtained from the plaintiff by the fraud of the defendants, where the transaction in which the fraud was practised was a contract for the purchase of securities purporting to be granted by a foreign government not recognized by our own. Taylor v. Barclay, 7 Law J. Chanc. 65, s.c. 2 Sim. 213.

A bill for an account was filed in 1718; a decree was made in 1720; the account was pending in the Master's office until 1734, when it was referred to arbitration. The award was made in 1738, by which a sum of 5,369*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.* was awarded to the plaintiff, and the award was made a decree of the Court, which was affirmed upon appeal to Parliament in 1739.

In 1741, the plaintiff, to enforce the payment of the sum awarded and decreed, filed a new bill, in the nature of a bill of amendment and revive, against the representative of the defendant in the former suit, charging that a certain mortgage held by him was part of the assets, and praying that it might be applied in payment of the demand. The defendant to the last suit, by his answer, admitted the mortgage. In 1742, the plaintiff filed an amended bill; in 1747, he filed another amended bill, praying in default of personal estate a foreclosure of the mortgage, and that the principal and interest might be applied in satisfaction of his demand, stating, among other things, that he had obtained a sequestration against the lands of G B, the defendant in the first suit, who had died before it could be executed, having by his will charged his lands with the payment of his debts. The object of this bill was to obtain payment of the sum awarded from the assets of G B; part of which assets, as the bill charged, consisted of a mortgage upon an estate called Tysquin, and that G B and his representative had been in possession under the mortgage, and had received out of the rents and profits sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's demand.

In the years 1748, 1751, and 1754, upon the death of parties, bills of revivor and amended bills were filed. From this time no proceedings were taken until the year 1771, when a bill was filed by the representative of the original plaintiff against the representative of the original defendant, stating impediments to the prosecution of the suit, and praying an account of the rents received from the lands mortgaged. In 1772, the defendant filed an answer, refusing the discovery; and, in 1773, upon exceptions, he filed a further answer, still refusing the discovery, which was reported insufficient.

From this time no further proceedings were taken in the cause until the year 1785, when the representative of the plaintiff in the last suit, and of the original plaintiff, filed a bill of revivor and an amended bill against the representative of the defendant in the last suit, and against J B, the heir of the alleged mortgagee, stating impediments to the prosecution of the suit from the litigation in which his testatrix had been involved; and that a deed had been made by collusion between the representative of the mortgagee and J B, the heir of the mortgagor, by which the former conveyed the lands to the latter, in consideration of an annuity; charging that the deed was a fraud upon the plaintiff, and a devastavit of the assets, and praying an account of the real and personal estate of the first representative of the original mortgagee, who had charged his debts on his real estate, and devised it and bequeathed his personalty to the defendants, his representatives.

In 1787 the defendants, the representatives, by their answer, admitted that the deed as charged by the bill was fraudulent, and contended that the plaintiff should first have recourse against the lands mortgaged. From 1787 to 1795 no step was taken in the cause. Between the years 1795 and 1804, nine bills of revivor and amended bills were filed. By a decree in 1808, accounts were directed to be taken of the personal and real assets of the original defendant and his first representative. In 1810, the Master reported, that 28,657*l.* was due to the plaintiffs; that the assets of the original defendant consisted partly of a mortgage of the lands of T, which came into the hands of his representative, who had received of the rents and profits sufficient to answer the demand.

Upon exception to this report, the Master, by a decree upon further directions, was ordered to inquire under what title the representative of the original defendant entered into the lands of T. Upon which reference the Master reported, that he entered as mortgagee. Exceptions being taken to this report, upon the ground, (among others,) that, notwithstanding the existence of apparent securities, and various accounts between the parties on the foot of an apparent mortgage, there was evidence before the Master, that the deeds were, in reality, only deeds of trust, to secure the estate against the claims of adverse creditors; and farther, that there were existing judgments, being charges upon the lands prior to the plaintiff's claim; and that the representative of the original defendant entered upon the lands, not by virtue of the mortgage, but under the limitations of a marriage settlement. By a further decree, upon further directions, the exceptions upon these points were allowed, and the account was directed to be taken excluding the alleged mortgage; and the bill against J B was dismissed.

Held, on appeal, that the decree was right.

Whether delays, such as appear to have occurred, and under such circumstances as in the case reported, ought to operate as a bar to a demand in a court of equity—quære.

Whether, under the circumstances stated in the case, J B, the heir of the supposed mortgagor, and relessee of the lands in question, was a necessary party to the appeal—quære. Kelly v. Bateman, 2 Bligh, N.S. 327.

(A) Where a Writ of Error lies.

[Powell v. Lennett, 1 Dow. & C. A.C. 56, Dig. Law J. 217.]

The statute 17 Car. 2. c. 8, which enacts, that, in all personal actions, the death of either party, between the verdict and the judgment, shall not be alleged for error, does not apply to a case of nonsuit. Farrance v. Nill, 4 M. & P. 113.

(B) Proceedings.

[Taylor v. Williams, 1 Dow. & C. A.C. 19, Dig. Law J. 218; Dyeball v. Doe d. Lauria, 2 M. & R. 184, Dig. Law J. 218.]

In error, on a judgment given by an inferior court on exceptions, the Court of Error is confined to the points raised by the exceptions, and cannot travel dehors. Fausset v. Carpenter, 2 Dow. & C. A.C. 232.

Notwithstanding the statute 1 Will. 4. c. 70, the Court will not stay execution issued after a writ of error on a judgment of nonsuit. Keeling v. Austin, 7 Bing. 601, s. c. 5 M. & P. 599.

Where, from conversations with the defendant's attorney before judgment, it appeared that delay was the object, but nothing had been said about a writ of error; and afterwards a writ of error was brought; the Court thought this was not enough to warrant a rule to shew cause why the plaintiff should not be at liberty to sue out execution, notwithstanding the writ of error. Hall v. Taylor, 8 Law J. K.B. 180.

(C) Bail.

In an action against a corporation, the fact of a party being one of the burgesses, is no objection to his qualification as bail in error. Henley v. the Mayor and Burgesses of Lyme Regis, 7 Law J. C.P. 261, s. c. 6 Bing. 195, s. c. 3 M. & P. 450.

Where, on a writ of error, sham bail are put in, the whole proceeding may be treated as a nullity. Fuller v. Coombe, 9 Law J. C.P. 42, s. c. 4 M. & P. 792.

In a writ of error, until the transcript of the record is carried over and filed, the names of the parties are not reversed; therefore a notice of justification of bail in error should contain the names of the plaintiff and defendant as in the original writ. Smith's Bail, 7 Law J. C.P. 233, s. c. 3 M. & P. 242.

Bail in error having been given by plaintiff below, and the judgment below affirmed on error, and a new writ of error brought to the House of Lords; the Court of Common Pleas ordered the recognizance to be cancelled, though the plaintiff was a foreigner and insolvent, and no security had been given for costs. Duvergier v. Fellows, 9 Law J. C.P. 160, s. c. 7 Bing. 463, s. c. 5 M. & P. 403.

(D) Costs.

Where, after demurrer to a replication in formedon, the demandant obtained judgment, and upon the trial of several issues in fact, a verdict being found in favour of the defendant, the latter had judgment that he recover his seisin against the tenant; and upon writ of error brought, the common errors being assigned, the judgment was affirmed:—Held, that the demandant was entitled to double costs, under the statute 13 Car. 2. stat. 2. c. 2. s. 10. Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 10 B. & C. 563.

Where a general judgment is given for a defendant, and costs taxed generally, it is no objection upon error, that some of the defendant's pleas are bad, and that costs appear to have been allowed to him, as well for the bad as for the good pleas.

A defendant in error, who was also defendant in the original action, is entitled, upon judgment affirmed, to costs in error, under the 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 11; although the judgment in the court below has not been upon demurrer. Ricketts v. Lewis, 8 Law J. K.B. 324, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 197.

ESCAPE.

The deputy of an inferior court, authorized to issue bailable process, has no power to appoint a deputy who is not previously known or approved of by the principal, to assist in discharging the duties of the office.

And accordingly, an affidavit of debt, sworn before a person so appointed by the deputy, was held not to warrant the arrest; although the principal had given the deputy a general authority to obtain assistance to discharge the duties of the office. The principal must, in such a case, exercise his own discretion in the appointment of a deputy. Hughes v. Jones, 9 Law J. K.B. 5, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 388.

Where a writ upon mesne process commands a sheriff to arrest a defendant, semble, that it is not incumbent on the sheriff to be satisfied that an affidavit of debt has been duly made and filed, according to the 12 Geo. 1. c. 29.

But, in an action against the sheriff for an escape upon mesne process, semble, that it is incumbent on the plaintiff to prove that such an affidavit has been so made and filed.

An averment in the declaration in such an action, that the writ was "duly indorsed for bail," is a sufficient averment that all that was necessary to warrant the indorsement had been done.

An averment in such a declaration, that the person named as defendant in the writ, "was indebted to the plaintiff i a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of 50*l*.," held to be a sufficient averment that he was indebted to the plaintiff in a sum exceeding 10*l*., as required by the statute, although the sum was laid under a videlicet. Nightingale v. Wilcox, 8 Law J. K.B. 23, s. c. 10 B. & C. 202, s. c. 5 M. & R. 169.

In an action for an escape, on final process, the defendant may shew, on the general issue, that the escape was by the fraud and covin of the party really interested in the judgment. Or, if he plead, that it was by fraud and covin of a person unto whom and to whose use and benefit the judgment was assigned, this is sufficiently proved by shewing that the judgment was assigned to the use and benefit of that person, though the assignment was, in form, made to another. Hiscocks v. Jones, 2 M. & M. 269. [Bayley]

ESTATE.

[See Parliament, and Power.]

Semble, that an estate for life, executed by the Statute of Uses, cannot unite with a legal remainder by the rules of the common law. Playford v. Hoare. 3 Y. & J. 175.

Where, by virtue of a custom, certain persons called free-miners were at liberty to apply to the graveller of the hundred of St. Briavel's, to allot them a particular spot of land for a coalpit; and when the spot was agreed upon, the graveller cut a turf, and having cut a stick, so many notches were cut in it as there were to be partners in the intended work, and also one for the King, and one for the graveller; and the stick was fastened down with pegs on the spot where the turf had been pared off, and the turf laid down again—after which the spot was considered appropriated; when coal was found, a money-payment was made to the King, in lieu of his share of the coal:—a share in a coalpit so appropriated was held to be freehold. Doe d. Thomson v. Pearce, Pea. A.C. 242. [Wood]

ESTOPPEL.

[See Landlord and Tenant, and Trover.]

A deed of release, executed by A, reciting that A is seised of certain lands in fee, operates by way of estoppel against him, and all claiming under him.

Quære—Whether a person having a title by estoppel, by means of a deed containing a covenant for further assurance is entitled to the assistance of a court of equity, to have a positive title given to him. Bensley v. Burdon, 8 Law J. Chanc. 85.

A person who had but an equitable interest professed to convey by lease and release, by way of mortgage to A. In the recital it was stated, that he was legally "or equitably" entitled; and in the covenant for title he covenanted that he was lawfully "or equitably" seised in fee. And his equitable title was to the fee. He afterwards acquired the legal estate; and he then conveyed by way of mortgage for valuable consideration to B, who had no notice of the prior mortgage. B obtained possession; and upon ejectment by A, it was held, that, although A and B claimed under the same person, B was not estopped from setting up the legal estate against the conveyance to A, as the terms of the recital and covenant to A were satisfied by the conveyance to him. Right d. Jeffery v. Bucknell, 8 Law J. K.B. 304, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 278.

(C) Judicial Proceedings.

In an action to recover back money paid by a banker on a cheque, and afterwards allowed to his customer, on a suggestion that the cheque had been forged—the question in such action being, whether the cheque, in fact, was a genuine instrument or not—the notes of the magistrate's clerk, of statements made by the customer on a charge against the person supposed to have forged the cheque, are receivable in evidence, though his deposition was afterwards regularly signed pursuant to the statute. Williams v. Woodward, 4 C. & P. 346. [Tindal]

The deposition of a witness, taken in a judicial proceeding against the party there charged, is not admissible in another proceeding against that party, on the ground that he was present, and had the opportunity of cross-examining. Melen v. Andrews, 1 M. & M. 336.

Examination of defendant before Commissioners of Bankruptcy, (proved to be correct,) evidence, although not signed. Boddenham v. Lewis, Pea. A.C. 245. [Wood]

(D) Public Instruments.

A document from the office of the Duchy of Cornwall, purporting to be a caption of seisin on the use of the Duke, by persons assigned by his letters patent to receive seisin, is receivable in evidence as a public instrument. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & R. 156.

A book kept among the records of a manor containing entries of all fines assessed; the steward keeping another book of the fines actually paid:—Held, that the former book was not admissible in evidence to prove the custom as to fines payable to the lord. Dean and Chapter of Ely v. Caldecott, 9 Law J. C.P. 171, s. c. 7 Bing. 433, s. c. 5 M. & P. 272.

A book kept in the chapter-house of the Dean and Chapter of Sarum, purporting to contain copies of leases granted by the Dean and Chapter, is, as a public book, evidence of those leases for the purpose of reputation, without proof of possession under the leases. Coombs v. Coether and Wheeler, 1 M. & M. 398. [Tindal]

The question being, whether the appointment of a curate belonged to the vicar of the parish or to a corporation, entries in old books of the corporation were not received as evidence against the vicar, to shew that the corporation had from time to time appointed the curate. The Attorney General v. the Corporation of Warwick, 4 Russ. 222.

An entry in a book deposited in the registry of a bishop, is evidence of the admission of a curate at the bishop's visitation; and the admission having been stated to have taken place in 1591, juxta consuetudinem:—Held, that it should have been left to the jury to say, whether it was an ecclesiastical or common law custom; and, as it was not done, the Court directed a new trial. Arnold v. the Bishop of Bath and Wells, 7 Law J. C.P. 120, s. c. 5 Bing. 316, s. c. 2 M. & P. 559.

An entry in the books of a corporation, dated 1617, held not evidence for them upon a question as to their right to toll; the entry not being one to which the public had a right of access. Brett v. Beales, 8 Law J. K.B. 141, s. c. 10 B. & C. 508.

Where an entry of baptism appeared, in the parish register, to be in the handwriting of a person who was not the clergyman at the time to which the entry referred, though he became so afterwards, such entry was held to be inadmissible in evidence to prove the baptism.

Nor were certain memoranda, made by the parish clerk at the time of the baptism, corresponding with the entry made by the subsequent clergyman, held to be admissible in evidence themselves, or to give an explanation sufficient to warrant the admission in evidence of the register. Doe d. Warren v. Bray, 7 Law J. K.B. 161, s. c. 8 B. & C. 813.

Upon the trial of an issue in prohibition, whether the usurpation of office in a quo warranto information mentioned, was committed out of the jurisdiction of the county palatine, and within that of the city, of Chester; a document from the remembrancer's office of the Court of Exchequer was produced, purporting to be a decree made (after hearing of a complaint against the citizens of Chester, and their answer,) by the Lord High Treasurer of England, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Under Treasurer, and the Chief Baron, with the advice and assent of a Queen's Serjeant, and the Queen's Attorney and Solicitor General, and others of the same Court; —Held, that this document was not admissible in evidence as a decree, because it was not a decree of the Court of Exchequer, nor of any other court known to the law at the time when it purported to have been made; nor as an award, because there appeared no voluntary submission of parties; nor as evidence of reputation, because the parties making the decree had no knowledge of the subject, except that which they derived in the course of the proceeding. Rogers v. Wood, 2 B. & Ad. 245.

A date of a letter varying from the post-mark, it was objected, that the post-mark could only be proved to be genuine by calling the person from the post-office who impressed the letter; on which the Judge offered to stay the cause till the arrival of such clerk. But the jury found that the post-mark was genuine without his being called. The Court refused to disturb the verdict. Abbey v. Lill, 7 Law J. C.P. 96, s. c. 5 Bing. 299, s. c. 2 M. & P. 534.

A brought an action against the sheriff for a false return of nulla bona to a fi. fa. issued against the goods of B. B had filed a bill of discovery against A, on which there had been a decree or order, that A should bring into the Court of Chancery all letters written by B, or any other, to him, respecting the original debt. A, under this decree or order, brought in various letters:—Held, that none of them could be read in evidence on the part of the defendant in the present action, without first putting in the bill and answer. Hewitt v. Piggott, 5 C. & P. 75. The entry of a clerk deceased, in the book of a notary public, is evidence. Sutton v. Gregory, Pea. A.C. 180. [Lawrence]

Where a bond was conditional that a banker's clerk should faithfully account to his employers for all sums received by him on their account, and should faithfully conduct himself in that employment:—Held, that a book containing entries made by him in the course of that employment, of sums received by him from the customers, was admissible in evidence to shew the fact of those sums having been so received; although some of the persons who made the payments to the clerk were living. Whitmarsh v. Gouge, 7 Law J. K.B. 57, s. c. 8 B. & C. 556, s. c. 3 M. & R. 42.

Entry made in a book by two partners deceased, in the usual course of their business, good evidence. Rowcroft v. Bassett, Pea. A.C. 200. [Kenyon]

The entries of a person still living against his interest, are not evidence between other parties;—though it be shewn that he is abroad, having absconded from a criminal charge, and altogether out of the power of a party to produce him as a witness. Stephen v. Gwenap, 2 M. & M. 120. [Alderson]

A clerk in a merchant's counting-house may be called as a witness, to explain the meaning of a particular entry in the books of the office, made by a fellow clerk since deceased. Hood v. Reeve, 3 C. & P. 531. [Best]

It is no objection to the admissibility of a book, containing an account in which a deceased receiver charges himself with money paid to him, that, on the opposite side of the account, the receiver discharges himself to the same extent; or that the account (being in his handwriting,) is not signed by him; or that the name of the party on whose account the money is received does not appear in the book, it being shewn aliunde, that the person making the entry did not receive the money on his account. Rose v. Brenton, 3 M. & R. 268.

The question being whether rent paid by the plaintiff to one John Brown had been received by him on his own account, or as agent of the defendant, it was proposed by the defendant, to give in evidence certain accounts which had been rendered to him by Brown, in which he charged himself, as the defendant's agent, with the receipt of those rents. Brown was living at the time of the trial. The accounts were held to be inadmissible. Sparge v. Brown, 8 Law J. K.B. 67, s. c. 9 B. & C. 953, s. c. 4 M. & R. 638.

The establishment of an act of bankruptcy depended materially on the fact that the arrest of H C, on a certain day, took place at Paddington. The sheriff's officer who arrested him was dead, but a return made by him to the under-sheriff at the time, stating that he had arrested H C in South Molton Street, on the occasion in question, was received in evidence to prove that the arrest was not made at Paddington. The Court were of opinion that such document was not, as to the place of arrest, admissible (as an entry or return of a party, since deceased, in the course of his duty, and charging himself); and they granted a new trial to afford an opportunity for the question to be put on the record. Chambers v. Bernasconi, 9 Law J. Exch. 125, s. c. 1 C. & J. 451, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 335.

Where the question was, whether a deceased person who had celebrated a marriage was a clergyman, authorized to celebrate it: papers appearing to be letters of the archbishop, ordaining him, and dated more than thirty years before, produced from among his papers by his widow—Held, to be admissible in evidence, without proof that the seal they bore was the seal of the archbishop. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Bathwick, 9 Law J. M.C. 103, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 639.

Handwriting cannot be proved by a person who has seen letters from time to time franked by the defendant, but never corresponded with him or seen him write.

Quere—How far opinion of a handwriting being genuine or forged, is evidence. Carey v. Pitt, Pea. A.C. 130. [Kenyon]

A witness called to prove handwriting, should form his judgment from the handwriting, not from extrinsic circumstances. Mendes da Costa v. Pym, Peo. A.C. 144. [Kenyon]

The rule, that comparison of handwriting is not evidence, does not extend so far as to prevent the Court or jury from instituting a comparison between two documents, of which primâ facie evidence had been given. Griffith v. Williams, 1 C. & J. 47.

If the witness called for the plaintiff, in his cross-examination, admit that a letter was written by him with the authority of the plaintiff, but deny that a second letter is of his handwriting—the defendant's counsel will not be allowed to shew both letters to another witness called for the plaintiff, and ask him whether he does not believe that the second letter was written by the same person who wrote the first. Clermont v. Tullidge, 4 C. & P. 1. [Tenterden]

Upon a question of settlement by apprenticeship, the indenture was produced, apparently executed by all parties; and the name of "George Jones" affixed to the attestation, as the attesting witness; but without any description. It was proved, that diligent search had been made in the place where the indenture was executed, but no person of that name could be there found; and that inquiry had also been made of the parties to the indenture, but no information as to the witness could be obtained from them:—but that between two and three miles from the place, there was a George Jones, who had been applied to, and who said he knew nothing at all about the matter. He was not produced.

Upon this evidence, the Sessions refused to receive the parties themselves to prove the execution of the indenture; being of opinion that enough had not been done to prove the handwriting of the attesting witness. The Court of King's Bench held the Sessions to have decided rightly. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Mucclestone, 7 Law J. K.B. 165, s.c. Ib. M.C. 96.

(F) Depositions.

If, in a case of felony, a witness for the prosecution is too ill to attend the Assizes, this is a good ground for postponing the trial, but will not authorize the reading the deposition of the witness taken before the magistrate. Rex v. Savage, 5 C. & P. 143. [Patteson]

A was charged with forgery, and B was examined on oath before the magistrate as a witness against A; after this B was himself charged with a different forgery:—Held, that the deposition of B was evidence against him on his trial for forgery, notwithstanding that it was taken on oath. Rex v. William Haworth, 4 C. & P. 254. [Parke]

(G) Reputation.

Reputation of lands being part of a manor, and copyhold, good evidence. Doe d. Jones v. Richards, Peo. A.C. 180. [Lawrence]

Upon a question whether a piece of land was in parish A or parish B, old leases describing it to be in parish A, were held to be admissible as evidence of reputation, although it was the interest of the parties to the leases so to describe the land, by reason of there being a subsisting modus in parish A, and not in parish B.

Upon the same question, old rates, by which the occupiers of the land were assessed for rates in the parish of A, held to be admissible, even if the fact of payment of the rates had not been proved. But, supposing it were necessary—

Crosses made in the rate-book kept by the deceased overseer, indicating that the particular assessments, which were crossed, had been paid, held to be admissible in evidence to shew that the payments had been made. Plaxton v. Dare, 8 Law J. K.B. 98, s.c. 10 B. & C. 17, s.c. 5 M. & R. 1.

(H) Declarations.

[See Contract.]

Evidence of the declaration of a deceased parent as to the place of birth, or place of baptism, of the child, is inadmissible. Rider v. Malbon, 8 Law J. M.C. 127.

In case for negligence, the declarations of one defendant who has suffered judgment by default, are not admissible in evidence against the others, to shew the circumstances of the injury, although they are independently shewn to be concerned in it. Daniels v. Potter, 2 M. & M. 501, s.c. 4 C. & P. 262. [Tindal]

A prisoner, when before the committing magistrate, was sworn by mistake, he being supposed to be a witness; as soon as the mistake was discovered, the deposition, which was begun, was destroyed, and the prisoner cautioned; after this, he made a statement:—Held, that such statement was receivable in evidence. Rex v. Webb, 4 C. & P. 564. [Garrow]

If a prosecutor gives in evidence a declaration made by a prisoner, it becomes evidence for the prisoner, as well as against him; but, like all other evidence, the jury may give credit to one part of it, and not to another. Rex v. Higgins, 3 C. & P. 603. [Parke]

If a prosecutor give in evidence a declaration made by a prisoner, exculpatory of himself, the jury are not bound to take this to be true, merely because the prosecutor gives it in evidence; but they ought to consider how far it is consistent with the rest of the evidence, and whether they believe it to be really true. Rex v. Steptoe, 4 C. & P. 397. [Park and Garrow]

A declaration in articulo mortis, made by a child only four years old, is not admissible in evidence on the trial of an indictment for the murder of such child; because a child of such tender years could not have had that idea of a future state which is necessary to make such a declaration admissible. 3 C. & P. 598. [Park]

On an indictment for robbery, the declaration in articulo mortis of the party robbed, is not admissible in evidence. Rex v. Robert Lloyd, 4 C. & P. 233. [Bolland]

To render a declaration of a deceased person admissible, on the trial of an indictment for manslaughter, it must have been made by him under an impression of almost immediate dissolution; and it is not enough that the deceased should have thought that he should ultimately never recover.

Before a declaration of a deceased person is re-

[illegible] to a declaration in extremis mortis, the Judge will [illegible] all that the deceased said respecting the danger in which he conceived himself to be; and it would, some time, be for his Lordship to decide whether the prisoner must have had that impression on his mind when he made the declaration admissible. Rex v. Van Butchell, 3 C. & P. 629. [Bullock]

A woman who was told by the surgeon, that she would never recover, said, that she "hoped he would do what he could for her, for the sake of her family." He again told her, that there was no chance of her recovery.—Held, that this showed such a degree of hope in her mind, as to render a statement she then made inadmissible as a declaration in extremis mortis. Rex v. Crockett, 4 C. & P. [illegible] [Bosanquet]

(I) Admissions.

The statements in a special plea, on which judgment has been given for the plaintiff on demurrer, cannot be used at the trial of the cause as an admission for the plaintiff by the defendant; but the case must be tried in the general issue, without any reference to the special plea at all. Fleming v. Crosby, [illegible] [Lyndhurst]

(K) Confessions.

[illegible] making a promise, that it will be better for him to do so, will exclude a confession made by the person, although that person was not a [illegible] or witness, or the [illegible] [Bosanquet]

A girl was charged with administering poison, with intent to murder. The surgeon said to her, "[illegible] and some medicine of this, and you had better tell all you know." After this, she made a confession to the surgeon.—Held, that the statement was not admissible in evidence. Rex v. Kingham, [illegible] [Parke]

The prisoner at a vessel said to one of his sailors, suspected of having stolen a watch, "That unfortunate watch has been found, and if you do not tell me who your partner was, I will commit you to prison as soon as we get to Newcastle: you are a common thief, and the gaolers is painted in your face." Held, that a confession made by the sailor after this threat was not receivable in evidence on the trial for stealing. Rex v. Parratt, 4 C. & P. 570. [Alderson]

A prisoner was in the custody of A, a constable; B, another constable, coming into the room, A left it, and the prisoner immediately made a confession to B. Held, that if the prisoner was in custody as an accused party, that A must be called to prove that he had held out no inducement to the prisoner to confess, before the confession made to B is receivable in evidence; but if it appear that the prisoner was not then in custody on any charge, but merely detained as an unwilling witness, it will not be necessary to call A.

If a prisoner makes a confession to a constable, who takes down what he says, and the prisoner signs it, this paper will be read by the officer of the Court. Rex v. Smithies, 4 C. & P. 548. [Patteson]

A person charged with murder made a confession before the coroner. It appeared, that before he made this confession, B, who was both a clergyman and a magistrate, had had an interview with him:—Held, that the prosecutors were not bound to call B before they put in the confession, but that it would be fair for them to do so; and that, if the prosecutors did not call B, the prisoner might call him before the confession was read, to prove that some inducement was held out.

A, a prisoner charged with murder, was visited by B, who was both a magistrate and a clergyman. B told him, that if he was not the person who struck the fatal blow, and he would tell all he knew, he (B) would use his endeavours and influence to prevent anything happening to him; and that if he (A) did not make a disclosure, some one else would probably do so. After this, B wrote to the Secretary of State, who returned an answer, that mercy could not be extended to A; which answer was communicated by B to A. After this, A sent for the coroner, and wished to make a statement. The coroner told him, that if he did so, it would be used as evidence against him. The prisoner made a confession:—Held, that this confession was admissible.

If a prisoner, charged with murder, say in his confession, which is read in evidence against him, that he was present at the murder, but took no part in the commission of it, this is evidence for him, as well as against him; but the Judge will not direct an acquittal, as the jury may believe one part of the confession, and disbelieve another; however, if it is meant to be charged that the prisoner did more than is stated in the confession, there ought to be some evidence to shew that. Rex v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221. [Littledale]

On the trial of a prisoner who has made, before a magistrate, a voluntary confession of his guilt, previous to the conclusion of the evidence against him, which confession is taken down in writing, and signed by the prisoner, and attested by the magistrate's clerk; the proper course is, for the clerk to give evidence of the prisoner's statements, refreshing his memory by the written paper. Rex v. Bell, 5 C. & P. 162. [Gaselee]

(L) Confidential Communications.

A communication made to an attorney or counsel is not privileged, unless made with a view to a judicial proceeding, either commenced or apprehended. Broad v. Pitt, 2 M. & M. 233. [Bosanquet]

The answer to an interrogatory, confined to the point on which the party's solicitor was produced, is admissible, though he gained his information as solicitor. The King's Proctor v. Deines, 3 Hag. Ec. 235.

A letter, written by an opposing creditor, to the Chief Commissioner of the Insolvent Debtors Court, previous to the hearing of an insolvent's case, is not a privileged communication. Gould v. Hulme, 3 C. & P. 625. [Tindal]

(M) Presumption.

A possession short of twenty years is insufficient to warrant a presumption of livery of seisin under a feoffment; although the possession may have been in accordance with the fact of there having been livery of seisin. Doe d. Wilkins v. Marquis

f Cleveland, 8 Law J. K.B. 74, s. c. 9 B. & C. 864, .c. 4 M. & R. 666.

In 1711 a mortgage, for a term of years, was nade to A. In 1712 a mortgage in fee of the estate ras made to S, in trust for A. In 1714 the term ras assigned to C, in trust for A, to attend, &c.; nd then the equity of redemption, in fee, was conveyed to A. In 1717 A, reciting that he was seised a fee, subject to a lease for ninety-nine years, made y a prior owner, grants and confirms that lease. ubsequent owners, in their wills and deeds, used erms adapted to pass the legal estate, granted leases or long terms, and exercised other acts of ownerhip:—A reconveyance of the legal fee was presumed. Noel v. Bewley, 3 Sim. 103.

Where a decree was directed by an act of Parliament in the reign of Hen. 8. to be enrolled in Chancery, and parties interested under it had ever ince treated it as a binding decree, and the Courts ad so recognized it in repeated instances, it must e presumed to have been duly enrolled according o the act, though no enrolment of it could be ound. Macdougall v. Purrier, 2 Dow. & C. 135.

Twenty years affords a presumption of payment on judgment. Curties v. Fitzpatrick, Pen. A.C. 92.

To a bond of upwards of twenty years' standing, ras pleaded, inter alia, payment, and a release. To ebut the presumption of payment, an affidavit made y defendant, before a Master in Chancery, was roduced, in which he (being the son-in-law of the bligee) swore, that having applied to the obligee urther to assist him, the latter refused, saying that e had already had his share of the estate; that he aight do as he pleased with what he had, as he ever should call on him for it. Although the presumption of payment was thereby rebutted, it was nevertheless evidence also of the bond having been ancelled or otherwise legally discharged. Washington v. Brymer, Pen. A.C. 200.

(N) Secondary and Parol Evidence.

[See Forgery and Contract.]

Where notice to produce a letter has been served, he attorney for the opposite party may be asked whether he has that letter, in order to let in secondary evidence of it, if not produced. Bevan v. Waters, 1 M. & M. 235. [Best]

Notice to produce a written demand of a thing for which an action of trover is brought, unnecessary. Hammond v. Plank, Pen. A.C. 90.

Where a search for a document was made among he papers in the custody of an executrix of a person who had acted as executor of another person:—Held, that this was sufficient for the purpose of considering the person who had so acted, to have been, in law, the executor, although the probate was not produced. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Witherly, 8 Law J. K.B. 46, s.c. Ib. M.C. 43, s.c. 4 M. & R. 724.

The Court will not take judicial notice of an entry n the sheriff's book. Russell v. Dickson, 8 Law J. C.P. 146, s. c. 6 Bing. 442, s. c. 4 M. & P. 196.

A copy, examined by the witness, of a court roll s admissible in evidence, without the production of he original. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & R. 297.

Where a Court prints and circulates copies of its rules, for the guidance of its officers, the production of one of these printed copies is good evidence of he rules which the officers are to act on, though the original rules are kept under the seal of the Court, and the copy is not shewn to have been examined with the original. Dance v. Robson, 1 M. & M. 294.

In the absence of proof that the registers of Episcopal Chapels at Edinburgh are by the law of Scotland documents of an authentic and public nature, copies thereof rejected as inadmissible by the law of England. Conway v. Beazley, 3 Hag. Ec. 651.

A book containing the copy of a letter had, by consent of the parties to a Chancery suit, been inspected at the office of the attorney of the party who had the possession of it, instead of being deposited with the Master; and on that occasion a copy of the entry in the book was taken by the party who inspected. On a trial at law between parties in the same interest,—Held, that upon notice to produce this book, evidence of the copy so taken was admissible; without reading the answer in the suit in which it was produced, and which answer referred to it, and was the cause of its inspection. Long v. Champion, 9 Law J. K.B. 248, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 284.

A claim under a lost deed allowed, on the production of an authenticated copy of it, coupled with its being recited and recognized in other deeds and instruments, and its being memorialized in the register for the West Riding of Yorkshire, where the lands alleged to be comprised in the lost deed were situate, and the long acquiescence of parties interested in disputing the claim. Tunstall v. Trappes, (Margaret Tunstall's case,) 3 Sim. 388.

The facts of occupation and payment of rent, will be sufficient to raise a presumption, that the person who so occupied and paid was the tenant; and, for the purpose of raising merely this presumption, those facts may be ascertained by parol, although the tenancy was under a written agreement, which is not produced.

But if it be sought to carry this presumption any further, or to alter it, by shewing either the terms of such a tenancy, or that the person who so appeared to be tenant, was tenant with others, the written agreement must be produced. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Rawden, 7 Law J. K.B. 84, s. c. 8 B. & C. 708.

Upon a question of settlement since the 59 Geo. 3. c. 50, the term of the tenancy, as well as the fact of tenancy, become material; and therefore, where the tenancy is the subject of a written agreement between the parties, and the agreement is in existence, parol evidence of the tenancy is inadmissible. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Merthyr Tidvil, 8 Law J. M.C. 114, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 29.

By written agreement between a man and a woman, the latter was engaged as servant to the former, at wages. Before the making of the agreement she and her master had carried on an improper intercourse. That intercourse was continued during the service, but she acted in other respects as, and performed the work of, a servant. Upon a question as to the settlement of the woman,—Held, that evidence was admissible, notwithstanding the written contract of service, to shew that such contract was merely colourable, and that the real contract was for the improper intercourse. Rex v. the Inhabitants of North Wingfield, 9 Law J. M.C. 57, s.c. 1 B. & Ad. 712.

The respondents, on appeal, proved that a deceased rated inhabitant had stated several times to the pauper, that the appellant parish had taken a bond from A B, touching the support of a child of the pauper's wife; and that he (the rated inhabitant) had the bond in his possession. This person did not appear to have ever been a parish officer. Notice had been given to the appellants to produce the bond; but it did not appear that any search had been made among the papers of the deceased, nor were his representatives examined:—Held, that parol evidence of the contents of the bond was not admissible. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Hinckley, 9 Law J. M.C. 75.

A witness who produces a document for the purpose of shewing a particular clause, may be asked whether he has not inspected documents of the same nature, in which the clause is not found, although such documents are not produced. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & R. 303.

It is to be presumed, that what is stated on oath, before a magistrate, is taken down in writing; and, therefore, parol evidence of such a statement is not receivable, unless it be first shewn that it was not so taken down. Phillips v. Wimburn, 4 C. & P. 273. [Tindal]

If the examination of a prisoner, taken in writing, is inadmissible by reason of irregularity, parol evidence of what he said at the time of the examination may be received. Rex v. Reed, 1 M. & M. 403. [Tindal]

A prisoner being under an examination before a magistrate, on a charge of felony, a statement was made in his presence, by the solicitor for the prosecution, which the witness called to prove it, said he believed had been taken down in writing:—Held, that under these circumstances parol evidence of the statement was not admissible on the trial of such prisoner. Rex v. Hollingshead, 4 C. & P. 242. [Vaughan]

EXCISE.

[See Revenue.]

[One or more of the Commissioners of Excise enabled to act for the dispatch of business. 10 Geo. 4. c. 32, 7 Law J. Stat. 73.

Certain oaths and affirmations made in the Excise department, abolished by 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 4, 9 Law J. Stat. 5.]

In an action against excise officers for a seizure, the notice of action must be proved in the first instance, before any other evidence is given. The plaintiffs slept at different houses, away from their places of business; but a servant slept on the premises of the latter. Semble, that the place of business may properly be described in the declaration as a dwelling-house of the plaintiffs. Quære, whether the notice of action properly describes the plaintiffs as of the place of business, the statute requiring it to state their abode. Johnson v. Lord, 1 M. & M. 444. [Tenterden]

EXECUTION.

[See 1 Will. 4. c. 7, 9 Law J. Stat. 10.]

Practice as to certificates under the statute 1 Will. 4. c. 7. s. 2. Barford v. Nelson, 5 C. & P. 8. [Patteson]

The Court will not certify, under stat. 1 Will. 4. c. 7. s. 8, that execution ought to issue immediately in an action of debt on simple contract. Fisher v. Davies, 2 M. & M. 93. [Tenterden]

If a man employing an officer attends with the officer, who seizes in his presence the goods of a third person, under an execution which he has sued out, he makes himself responsible for the officer's acts; and, semble, that in such a case, where he is present, and interferes, he ought to point out to the officer which goods are to be taken, and which not. Also, if in such a case an unjustifiable assault be committed by the officer, the party authorising the seizure will not be answerable for it, unless it be shewn in some way to have been committed by his direction. Meredith v. Flarman, 5 C. & P. 98. [Lyndhurst]

Where a writ of fieri facias has been executed by seizure, the plaintiff cannot take any further step until that writ is returnable.

Accordingly, where, in the long vacation, a fi. fa. was executed by seizure of a small quantity of goods, which the sheriff sold; and thereupon, but before the return day, made a return to the writ; and the plaintiff then issued a ca. sa. for the residue, reciting the fi. fa. and return:—this issuing of the ca. sa. before the return day of the fi. fa. held to be irregular. Lewes v. Codrington, 9 Law J. K.B. 72.

By a turnpike act, the trustees were directed to sue and be sued in the name of the clerk:—Held, that this did not authorize a personal execution against the clerk. Wormwell v. Hailstone, 8 Law J. C.P. 264, s. c. 6 Bing. 668, s. c. 4 M. & P. 512.

An action by A against B pending,—B gave a cognovit, confessing nominally 3,000*l.*, and agreeing that, in default of payment of 259*l.* on the 7th of May, judgment might be entered for 3,000*l.*, and execution taken out for 259*l.*, which would leave 1,650*l.* due. Default having been made, A entered up judgment, issued ca. sa. for the whole sum due, and took B. in execution thereon. On application to a Judge, order made to presently discharge B on terms, one of which was, that no action for the excessive imprisonment should be brought: that order not acted upon; B remained in prison till act of bankruptcy complete, and commission issued; which was disposed of by his making a general assignment. B sued A for excessive execution.

Semble—that (save as to the effect of the Judge's order) such action was maintainable; (sed quære)—and (Mr. Justice Parke contrà) that in this case, notwithstanding the Judge's order, it was maintainable.

(A) Appointment.

Directing certain persons to pay debts, funeral expenses, and expenses of probate, is an appointment of such persons executors. In the goods of Henry Sampson Fry, 1 Hag. Ec. 80.

A person appointed limited executor in a will, may be appointed general executor in a codicil by implication, and without express words. In the goods of Deliciæ Aird, 1 Hag. Ec. 336.

(B) Rights and Interests.

[Livesey v. Livesey, 3 Russ. 287; Dig. Law J. 233.]

An executor who has renounced, may, at any time before administration has passed the seal, retract. M'Donnell v. Prendergast, 3 Hag. Ec. 212.

An administrator having claimed his debt before the Master, that is sufficient to entitle him to retain it. Winter v. Hicks, 1 Tam. 475.

If the maker of a promissory note be appointed one of the executors of the person to whom it is payable, the right of action upon the note is discharged. Freakly v. Fox, 7 Law J. K.B. 148, s.c. 9 B. & C. 130, s.c. 4 M. & R. 18.

On a marriage, the father of the wife purchased 1,000*l.* consols, and the same was vested in trustees to pay the dividends to the wife for her life; and then trusts were declared for the children of the marriage, under which the Court had decreed, in a former suit, that the only child of the marriage, a daughter, took a vested interest. This daughter married J M, and died in the lifetime of the mother, leaving J M her surviving. J M did not take out administration to the effects of his deceased wife, and afterwards died:—Held, that his executors were entitled to the 1,000*l.* consols, and that the representatives of the wife were not entitled. One of J M's executors, who was a defendant, having colluded with the other defendant, the Court gave costs against both of them. Platt v. M'Dougall, 1 Tam. 390.

An agent, named executor, is not entitled to charge commission on business done subsequently to the testator's death. Sheriff v. Axe, 4 Russ. 33.

W, a solicitor, having been appointed, and acting as an executor in the administration of the affairs of the estate, brought and defended many suits, in which he employed himself as the attorney. Upon a bill filed by the residuary legatees against the executor, it was referred to the Master, to inquire whether any money due to the estate had been lost by the negligence of W; and whether the suits had been properly commenced, prosecuted, and defended; and that he should tax the costs for business done by W, as an attorney in those suits, without prejudice to the question whether W, being an executor, was, as an attorney, to be allowed such costs, except so far as he had disbursed money. Upon this decree the Master reported, that some of the suits had been properly commenced, but negligently conducted; so that the recovery of the property in question in those suits had been probably endangered; and he made no allowance of costs to the executor; but submitted to the Court, whether the claim for costs should not be suspended until the debts should be recovered, &c. Exceptions taken to this part of the report were, by the decree, on further directions, overruled; and, on appeal, this part of the decree was affirmed.

By the decree, upon further directions, it was also ordered, that interest should be charged upon all balances in the hands of the executor, at the end of every year; and that interest should be charged against the residuary legatees upon all advances made to them by the executor, from the time of the advances. Upon appeal, this order was varied, by declaring that the Master should be directed, in taking the accounts, to make a rest, and state the balance, at the end of each year, and to charge the executor with interest on such balance; and to apply such interest, as might be so found due from him in each year, in the first place towards his future payments, before any application should be made of the balance of principal money in his hands. Carmichael v. Willson, 4 Bligh, N.S. 145.

(C) Powers and Duties.

An inventory and account may be demanded of an executor by a residuary legatee, who has given a release. Kenny v. Jackson, 1 Hag. Ec. 105.

The Court will not, at the instance of the assignee of an insolvent, and on a suggestion that the insolvent had not received his distributive share, call upon the widow and administratrix of the father of the insolvent for an inventory and account, after a long acquiescence of the insolvent and his assignee; and when it is shewn that a valuation and inventory of the deceased's effects were made shortly after his death, and facts are proved, from which it may be fairly presumed that the insolvent had received considerably more than his full share.

This Court can only require, that all the deceased died possessed of should be included in the inventory; it cannot call for an account of the subsequent profits of his business. Pitt v. Woodman, 1 Hag. Ec. 247—250.

Semble, that executors are justified in completing such contracts begun to be performed by the testator, as have not a mere relation to and dependence upon his personal talent or exertion, but can be performed by others: and that they would be liable in damages out of the assets, if they did not so complete. Marshall v. Safford, 9 Law J. Exch. 105, s.c. 1 C. & J. 403, s.c. 1 Tyrw. 348.

(D) Liabilities.

An executor who has assets sufficient for that purpose, is liable, upon an implied promise, to pay for a funeral, suitable to the degree of his testator, furnished by the directions of a third person. Rogers v. Price, 3 Y. & J. 28.

Where an estate proved to be insolvent, no more than 20*l.* was allowed to the executor, as against a creditor, for the funeral of the deceased, whose station in life was that of a captain in the army, although the executor, under a belief that the estate was fully solvent, had expended 79*l.* Hancock v. Podmore, 8 Law J. K.B. 403, s.c. 1 B. & Ad. 260.

If an executor, acting bonâ fide, and under a conviction that the assets are amply sufficient for the payment of the testator's debts, permits specific legatees to retain or possess themselves of the articles bequeathed to them, he will be answerable for the value of those articles, with interest at 4*l.* per cent., if there should ultimately be a deficiency of assets, although the deficiency should be occasioned by subsequent events, which he had no reason to anticipate: and the Court will direct an account to be taken of the value of the property so possessed by the legatees, and interest to be computed, unless it is certain that the assets will ultimately be sufficient to pay all the creditors. Spode v. Smith, 3 Russ. 511.

Executors depositing monies belonging to the estate, with the same persons as the testator intrusted with his monies in his lifetime, although they are not bankers, are not liable for a loss sustained by their bankruptcy. Lord Dorchester v. the Earl of Effingham, 1 Tam. 279.

An executor, who is employed by his co-executor, as his agent, to sell an estate, which, under the will of the testator, the co-executor alone had power to sell, and who hands over the price of the estate to his co-executor, is not accountable for the misapplication of that price by the co-executor, because he had no legal right to retain it, although by the will of the testator, the price of the estate, when sold, was to be considered as part of his personal estate. Davis v. Spurling, 1 Russ. & M. 64, s.c. 1 Tam. 199.

A testator directed his executors to invest money, within six months after his decease. This was not done for many years. In the meantime, part of the money was lost, by the bankruptcy of a banker, in whose hands it was lodged. The surviving executor directed the money to be properly laid out, but it was not done; and, the banker having failed, the Court ordered him to pay interest upon the balances from time to time in the hands of himself and his co-executors, and to repay the money lost by the bankruptcy. Newton v. Reid, 9 Law J. Chanc. 273.

Executor charged with interest on dividends of stock received by him, and kept at his banker's with his own money, for a number of years, instead of being invested, to accumulate. Goodchild v. Fenton, 3 Y. & J. 481.

B having died indebted to G, for work and labour done, his executors signed the following memorandum on the back of G's account: "Mr. G having consented to wait for the payment of the within account, we, as the executors of B, engage to pay Mr. G interest for the same, at 5*l.* per cent., until the same is settled:"—Held, that the executors were personally liable to pay the debt and interest. Bradley v. Heath, 3 Sim. 543.

If letters of administration be granted to an infant, under which he receives and disposes of assets of the intestate, an account cannot be directed in respect of his receipts during his infancy. Hindmarsh v. Southgate, 3 Russ. 324.

(E) Assets.

A suit cannot be instituted for an account of assets of a testator, possessed by an executor in Honduras, unless the will is proved here, or a sufficient reason assigned why it is not proved here. Lewis v. Gentle, 7 Law J. Chanc. 43.

In a suit instituted for the administration of the assets of a testator, who in his will described himself as "of Halifax in Nova Scotia," certain lapsed shares of the residue were, at the hearing, on further directions, ordered to be distributed according to the Statute of Distributions, there being no suggestion in the record, that the administration ought not to be according to the law of England. Afterwards, a petition of rehearing was presented, stating that the testator died domiciled in Nova Scotia, and praying that the distribution might be according to the law of that country: but the petition was dismissed. Nevinson v. Stables, 4 Russ. 210.

A testator dies in England, domiciled here, and dies seised of lands in a foreign country, which, by the law of that country, and also by the will, are charged with his debts:—the assets being insufficient for the payment of his simple contract debts, the produce of those lands must be applied among the simple contract creditors, according to the priorities recognized by the law of the country where the lands are situate. Hanson v. Walker, 7 Law J. Chanc. 135.

A creditor of a person who died intestate in India, took out letters of administration to the deceased, in that country. He then came to England, and obtained letters of administration from the Prerogative Court. Afterwards, one of the intestate's next of kin procured that administration to be revoked, and administration to be granted to himself:—Held, that the Indian administrator was compellable to account to him for assets possessed in India, as well as in this country, in a suit instituted by him as personal representative only of the intestate, and to which the other next of kin, who were resident in India, were not parties. Sandilands v. Innes, 3 Sim. 263.

The plaintiff joined the testator as surety in a bond, which he paid after the death of the testator, taking an assignment of the bond:—he is only a simple contract creditor of the testator. Jones v. Davids, 4 Russ. 277.

A, by his will, bequeathed to S, his partner in trade, certain leasehold premises where the trade was carried on, for the residue of the term and interest of the testator therein. These premises, together with other premises at H, were subject to mortgages for monies which had been raised and charged upon them by the testator, who had also given his bond for the debt.

Upon a bill filed by pecuniary legatees, against the executors, to carry the trusts of the will into execution, and a decree for taking the accounts of the estate, it appears that S, who was one of the executors, had paid off the sums due upon the mortgage of the premises at T and H, out of the personal estate, which was insufficient to satisfy all the debts and pecuniary legacies. This payment was allowed by the Master, in his report. The report, in this respect, was confirmed by order, upon further directions; and upon appeal the decision was affirmed. Davies v. Bush, 4 Bligh, N.S. 305.

A person who had taken the benefit of the act for the relief of insolvent debtors, first in 1814, and a second time in 1820, died in 1826, leaving assets more than sufficient for the payment of all the debts which he had contracted subsequently to his second insolvency:—Held, that the assets ought to be applied in payment, first, of those subsequent debts; and, secondly, of the debts scheduled under the second insolvency; and, thirdly, of the debts scheduled under the first insolvency: that a court of equity has jurisdiction so to administer the fund: and that the right of the creditor to such relief was not affected by the Statute of Limitations. Barton v. Tattersall, 1 Russ. & M. 237, s.c. 1 Tam. 378.

A testatrix, who died in 1782, gave an annuity to A B, and devised her real estates to M and his sons, in strict settlement, and bequeathed her personal estate to M absolutely. Down to 1821, the annuity was paid by the persons in possession of the real estates, and no fund for payment thereof was ever set apart out of the testatrix's personal estate, although that estate was administered in a suit instituted by her legatees, to which A B was a party, and in which the annuity was erroneously considered as not primarily charged upon the testatrix's personal estate. M bequeathed his personal estate to L, and died. L afterwards died, and one of the defendants was her executrix:—Held, that A B had no claim upon L's estate, in respect of his annuity. Brown v. Claxton, 3 Sim. 225.

A monition against an administrator pendente lite, will be granted at the end of a suit, to compel him to transfer, to the person entitled, everything in his possession acquired in that character. In the goods of Dame Susanna Graves, 1 Hag. Ec. 313.

(F) EXECUTOR DE SON TORT.

Although an executor de son tort can do no act, which may work to his own benefit, he may administer the assets in a lawful course. Thus, if sued upon a simple contract debt of the deceased, he may, between declaration and plea, pay a bond-debt, and plead that payment, in answer to the action for the simple contract debt. Oxenham v. Clapp, 9 Law J. K.B. 229, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 309.

(G) ACTIONS AND SUITS BY AND AGAINST.

[Simons v. Milman, 2 Sim. 241, Dig. Law J. 237.]

Debt lies against an executor on a contract made by him, or a cause of action accruing after the death of his testator. Riddell v. Sutton, 7 Law J. C.P. 60, s. c. 5 Bing. 200, s. c. 2 M. & P. 345.

Where a person contracted to erect a building, finding materials, and died after getting the materials ready and bringing them to the spot, but before he did any other act towards the performance; and his executors finished the work, and sued the party with whom the contract was made, upon counts for work and labour done, and materials provided, &c. by the testator, and promises to him, also a count for work and labour by the executors as executors, and promises to them:—Held, that they could recover. Marshall v. Broadhurst, 9 Law J. Exch. 105, s. c. 1 C. & J. 403, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 348.

An administrator, who has been compelled to pay an annuity for which his intestate was liable, may recover on a plea of ne unques administravit, against a party who had covenanted to indemnify the testator against such payment, though such claim of indemnity has not been taken into account in the amount of the stamp on the letters of administration. Carr v. Roberts, 2 M. & M. 45. [Tenterden]

By an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, as executrix, reciting that disputes and differences had arisen and were depending between them respecting certain unsettled accounts, it was agreed that, for the finally settling such disputes, the said matters in dispute should be referred to the final award and determination of two arbitrators. There was no reservation by the executrix as to assets; and the arbitrators awarded that she should pay the plaintiff a certain sum. In an action of debt on the award—Held, that a plea of plene administravit was no answer to the action. Riddell v. Sutton, 7 Law J. C.P. 60, s. c. 5 Bing. 200, s. c. 2 M. & P. 345.

On a plea by several executors, that they have fully administered, if some are shewn to have assets in their hands, and the others not, the latter are entitled to a verdict. Parsons v. Hancock and others, executors and executrix, 1 M. & M. 330.

In a suit for administration of assets of a deceased person, who had been discharged many years before under the Insolvent Act, the Court will not order the Master to admit proof by any creditor of a larger sum than that mentioned to be due to him in the schedule filed in the Insolvent Court. Barton v. Tattersall, 6 Law J. Chanc. 199.

In a creditors' suit for administering the estate of an intestate, and to make the real estate assets—slight evidence of trading will be a sufficient inducement to the Court to direct an inquiry, whether the intestate was a trader at the time of his death. Chalk v. Huband, 9 Law J. Chanc. 229.

The title of three, claiming as executors, is well evidenced by the probate granted to one only, of the will appointing them all. Walters v. Pfeil, 1 M. & M. 362.

A person who will be entitled to a distributive share of the intestate's property, is an incompetent witness for the administrator in an action brought against him as such. Allington v. Bearcroft, Pea. A.C. 212.

On a plea of plene administravit to an action against an administratrix, an unsatisfied creditor of the intestate is a competent witness for the defendant. Davies v. Davies, administratrix, &c., 1 M. & M. 345.

[See TRUSTEE.]

A legatee, performing the duty of an executor in proving a paper, is entitled to his costs out of the estate. Williams v. Goude d. Bennet, 1 Hag. Ec. 610.

Whether an executor, being a solicitor, and acting as such in the administration of the estate, by bringing or defending suits or otherwise, is entitled to an allowance for costs, in respect of his professional labour, beyond costs out of pocket; and if so, whether as between solicitor and client. Carmichael v. Willson, 4 Bligh, N. S. 145.

The administrator entitled to his costs out of the produce of the sale of a real estate, his intestate having been a trader. Winter v. Hicks, 1 Tam. 475.

An executor, conducting suits as solicitor for the legatees under the will of his testator, not allowed his costs in the first instance, where it appeared that he had conducted the suits in a negligent and tardy manner. Willson v. Carmichael, 2 Dow. & C. A.C. 51.

Where a bill sought either to charge the surviving executors of a testator, personally, with a demand, or to have the debt paid out of the assets of the testator; and the Court decided that the surviving executors were personally liable:—Held, that the representatives of a deceased executor were entitled to have the bill dismissed against them, with costs. Bradly v. Heath, 3 Sim. 560.

Where, upon a bill filed by a simple contract creditor, the only specialty creditor is restrained by injunction from proceeding in his action at law, and it turns out, upon the Master's report, that the assets were insufficient to pay the specialty creditors, the executor will have his costs out of the assets, but not the plaintiff.

In such a case the specialty creditor, though not a party to the suit, may appear at the hearing on further directions, without presenting a petition, if the case which he has to make depends only upon what appears in the Master's report. Young v. Keenan, 1 Russ. & M. 635.

A simple contract creditor, who files a bill for the administration of assets, will not be allowed his costs, if the estate is not sufficient for the payment of specialty debts. Rawlinson v. Tucker, 1 Russ. & M. 635.

Where an executor pleads non assumpsit by his testator, and also plene administravit, and the plaintiff joins issue upon both pleas, and the issue upon non assumpsit is found for the plaintiff, and that upon plene administravit for the executor, the latter is entitled to his general costs in the cause, upon the rule that there is one plea which answers the action.

But where to such pleas the plaintiff takes issue upon the plea non assumpsit, and admits the truth of the plea of plene administravit, taking judgment of assets quando acciderint, and the issue upon the plea of non assumpsit is found for the plaintiff, he is entitled to the general costs against the executor, upon the principle that he forced the plaintiff on to trial, by a plea which he could not support. Marshall v. Shaw, 7 Law J. K.B. 325, s.c. 9 B. & C. 655, s.c. 4 M. & R. 607.

Semble, that an executrix, (the widow,) who, after taking probate and acting for many months under a will by which she takes a smaller interest than by a former will, causes the latter will to be opposed by questioning the deceased's capacity, and then proceeds to propound such will, is liable to be condemned personally in the costs of a substituted residuary legatee who propounds and establishes the will, and such return being tantamount to renouncing, would justify the Court in revoking the probate, and decreeing the administration with the will annexed to such residuary legatee. Williams v. Williams & Fenner, 1 Hag. Ec. 610.

The executor will of a person of fluctuating capacity, totally abandoning the principles of a former disposition, made before the deceased's faculties were impaired, and long adhered to,) propounded against; and the executor, the person principally benefited, who, among other things indicative of fraud, had himself given instructions, and whose son, a minor, alone spoke to the execution, condemned in costs. Dodge v. Meech, 1 Hag. Ec. 632.

Where the plaintiff, executor, joins counts, laying the cause of action to himself, as executor, with counts laying the cause of action to his testator, and upon the trial the plaintiff is nonsuited—he is liable to costs under the 23rd Hen. 8. c. 15. Dowlingin v. Harrison, 7 Law J. K.B. 318, s.c. 9 B. & C. 666, s.c. 4 M. & R. 622.

An executor joining counts, laying the cause of action in some to his testator, in others to himself, is liable to costs if nonsuited.

A count stating a debt due to the testator, and that, the debt remaining due, the defendant promised the plaintiff as executor to pay, is a count which will render the plaintiff executor liable to costs on a nonsuit. Slater v. Lawson, 9 Law J.K.B. 128, s.c. 1 B. & Ad. 396.

An administrator, suing upon an account stated with himself as administrator, of and concerning money due from the defendant to the testator, is liable to the defendant for costs, after trial, and verdict for the defendant. Johnson v. Foster, 8 Law J. K.B. 378, s.c. 1 B. & Ad. 6.

Declaration by executor stated, that the defendant being indebted to the testator at the time of his death, in consideration thereof, promised the plaintiff, as executor, to pay him the amount. The Statute of Limitations was pleaded:—Held, that the plaintiff being nonsuited, was liable to costs, though he did not declare upon an account stated. Slater v. Lawson, 1 B. & Ad. 393.

EXTENT.

A privity between the Crown and the receiver of government duties exists; though the receiver is merely the agent of the party who has given security to the Crown, and is in immediate communication with its officers, and no communication has ever existed between the government and the agent. Therefore, an extent in chief against the country agent of an insurance office was held good, though he kept no distinct account of duties. Rex v. Wrangham, 9 Law J. Exch. 124, s.c. 1 C. & J. 408, s.c. 1 Tyrw. 383.

The affidavit on which a fiat for an extent in chief against the surety of his principal in a bond to the Crown is obtained, must show a distinct breach of the bond, or the fiat will be quashed on motion, and the extent and subsequent proceedings set aside.

In the present case, the affidavit was, with reference to the bond, held not to be sufficient for the purpose of authorizing the fiat. (Graham, B. dissentiente.) Rex v. Marsh, 13 Price, 826.

A sale under an extent is not vitiated as against a purchaser, by the agent of the Crown making a bona fide bidding for himself. Rex v. Marsh, 1 C. & J. 406.

Fixtures demised with a paper-mill, and used by the tenant in the manufacture of paper, are not liable to be seized under an extent for duties upon the paper, owing by the tenant to the Crown, as utensils for the making of paper, in the custody of the tenant, under the statute 34 Geo. 3. c. 20. s. 27. Attorney General v. Gibbs, 3 Y. & J. 333.

A person employed in the service of the Crown as deputy commissary general to the forces abroad, and assistant commissary in the islands of Guernsey and Alderney, and employed in the negotiation of Bank of England notes, received from the Paymaster General of the Forces, and of bills of exchange, received from the Treasury on account of the public service, having also received specie on the same account,—is accountable with the Crown, and is, as such accountant, within the statute of the 13th of Eliz. c. 4. s. 1; and his lands, of which he was seized at any time during the period of his account, ability, are bound by his engagement with the public, and subjected to the prerogative process for security and payment of the balance ultimately declared against him.

Where an extent to find debts had been issued against such a person, and an inquisition taken thereon, such proceeding held to be no objection to a second extent and inquisition, by the same Revenue Board, against the same property, on a prior claim.

To found and support such proceedings, a statement that the party owed to the King a sum of money, claimed to be due from him to the Crown, as the balance of his account, delivered in upon oath to the Commissioners for auditing the public accounts, in his capacity of, &c. is a sufficient averment and finding of a debt due to the King.

A person claiming to be an incumbrancer on lands seized by the Crown under an extent and inquisition against a Crown debtor, is not entitled to notice of the holding of a further inquisition under another extent against the same person, on a similar charge of prior date, although on the first inquisition the jury had returned him an incumbrancer on the estate found to belong to the debtor.

The Court refused an application on the part of the incumbrancer, for an order that he might have notice of the holding any further inquisition. Rex v. Rawlings, ex parte Wilkinson, 12 Price, 834.

EXTORTION.

A collector of post-horse duty demanded of A, a sum of money, alleging that A had let out horses for hire without payment of the duty. A denied that he had done so, and gave the collector a promissory note for 5*l.*, the amount of which, after it became due, was paid by A to the collector, who handed it over to his principal, the farmer of the post-horse duties:—Held, that this was extortion in the collector, and that his having paid the money over to his principal made no difference. Rex v. Higgins, 4 C. & P. 247.

FACTORY.

Amendment of law relating to the employment of children in cotton mills and factories, 10 Geo. 4. c. 51, 7 Law J. Stat. 119.

Regulations as to employment and working of apprentices and other young persons in cotton factories and cotton mills, 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 39, 9 Law J. Stat. 77.

FACULTY.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

A went to the house of B, to demand a debt, which B said he could not pay. Angry words passed, and B told A to leave his house: this, A refused to do, unless he was paid. Upon this, B went for a police officer, and had A locked up in the watch-house:—Held, that if A was making a disturbance, B would have been justified in turning him out of his house; but that he was not justified in imprisoning him. Green v. Bartram, 4 C. & P. 308.

If three persons be told, on entering a theatre, that there is room, when in fact there is not, their proper course is to leave the theatre, and demand the return of their money; and such persons are not justified in getting into a private box in the theatre; and, if they do, the proprietor may remove them, using no more force than is necessary; and if, on going out of the theatre, one of them strike a servant of the proprietors in the presence of a constable, such constable will be justified in taking all the three persons into custody, if the jury shall be satisfied that they were acting with common purpose. Lewis v. Arnold, 4 C. & P. 354. [Tindal]

An action for false imprisonment can be maintained against a sheriff for arresting a person who is wrongly named in the process, though he be the person against whom it is issued.

But the sheriff is entitled, and is bound to arrest the person, if he be as well known by the name in the process as by his real name.

A person named Samuel, declared against the sheriff for false imprisonment; the defendant justified under a writ against the plaintiff by the name of John, averring that the plaintiff was as well known by one name as the other;—the plaintiff thereupon replied,—traversing that he was so known; but adding, by way of new assignment, that he brought his action for a false imprisonment different from that justified, being a false imprisonment after the sheriff had notice, and was satisfied that the plaintiff was not so known;—the defendant thereupon pleaded to the new assignment a justification as before, under a writ against the plaintiff by the name of John, averring that he was as well known by one name as the other; to which the plaintiff demurred:—Held, that the part of the new assignment which went to the averring notice, &c. to the sheriff was immaterial, and that the plea to the new assignment, which passed it by, and was confined to the question, whether the plaintiff was so known, was a good plea. Carridge v. Lautour, 7 Law J. K.B. 33.

A, a hawker, went to the house of B, to sell his goods, and, a dog of B coming out of the house, A knocked out one of its eyes, for which B's wife caused A to be apprehended:—Held, that it was for the jury to say, whether A had struck the dog for his own preservation, and fairly to protect himself; or whether it was a wilful and malicious trespass on his part. Hanway v. Boulthee, 4 C. & P. 350, s. c. 2 M. & M. 15. [Tindal]

The person giving another in charge for a felony, and assisting a constable in the arrest, is not entitled to an acquittal on the general issue in trespass brought against him, together with the constable. Hough v. Marchand and Edwards, 1 M. & M. 510. [Tenterden]

After arrest, A applied to a Judge at chambers, to be discharged out of custody; and it being represented, that by A's continuing in prison, he would commit an act of bankruptcy, the Judge, on the 4th December 1827, made the following order:—

"Upon hearing counsel for the plaintiff and defendant, I order that the defendant be discharged out of the custody of the sheriff of the county of Cambridge, as to this action, upon giving a fresh warrant of attorney for the sum of 3,000*l.*, with a defeasance on payment of 259*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.*, and the costs, on the 4th day of January next; and the further sum of 1,650*l.*, with the interest due thereon, on the 4th of August next, with liberty to issue execution for the smaller sum, if not duly paid—and afterwards for the larger sum, if default be made in the payment of the said sum of 1,650*l.* and interest, on the said 4th of August next; and upon giving such warrant of attorney, the present judgment be set aside, and that the mortgage do remain as a security, the defendant hereby undertaking not to bring any action for the imprisonment." A did not avail himself of the order.

Held, (by Parke, J.) that this order embodied an absolute agreement of the parties, founded upon good consideration, that A should be forthwith discharged out of custody, and that he should bring no action for false imprisonment; and, therefore, that such an action was not maintainable. Wentworth v. Bullen, 9 B. & C. 840.

FALSE PRETENCES.

Where goods are obtained by false pretences under a contract to pay at a given time, whether the seller, upon discovering the false pretences, can maintain an action of trover for the goods against the buyer before the time of credit has expired—quære.

But it is clear that under such circumstances he cannot maintain an action for goods sold and delivered, before the time of credit has expired; because the form of the action admits the whole transaction to be matter of contract, and that the property passed to the buyer. Ferguson v. Carrington, 7 Law J. K.B. 139, s. c. 9 B. & C. 59.

FALSE REPRESENTATION.

In an action on the case for false and fraudulent representations as to the character of an agent, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 800*l.*, but added, that they considered that there was no actual fraud on the part of the defendant, and that he had no fraudulent intention, although what he had done constituted a fraud in the legal acceptation of the term:—The Court refused to disturb the verdict. Foster v. Charles, 9 Law J. C.P. 32, s. c. 7 Bing. 164, s. c. 4 M. & P. 761.

In case, for a false representation of the solvency of A B, whereby the plaintiffs trusted him with goods; their declarations at the time, that they trusted him in consequence of the representation, are admissible in evidence for them.

An action commenced before 1st January 1829, but tried after that day, on such a representation, made by parol before the statute 9 Geo. 4. c. 14, is maintainable. Fellowes v. Williamson, 1 M. & M. 306. [Tenterden]

FELONY.

[See FORFEITURE and MACHINERY.]

FEOFFMENT.

Where a feoffment had indorsed upon it, a memorandum, stating that livery of seisin had taken place, and this was subscribed by a person as an attesting witness:—Held, that this person should have been called to prove the livery of seisin. Doe d. Wilkins v. Marquis of Cleveland, 8 Law J. K.B. 74, s. c. 9 B. & C. 864, s. c. 4 M. & R. 666.

FINE OF LANDS.

(A) LEVYING, ACKNOWLEDGMENT, AND PASSING.
(B) EFFECTS.
(C) AMENDMENT.

(A) LEVYING, ACKNOWLEDGMENT, AND PASSING.

The Court will not decree that which seems impossible; and it is more than doubtful whether the old law now prevails, by which a man was compellable to procure his wife to levy a fine. Frederick v. Coxwell, 3 Y. & J. 514.

Where a fine is covenanted to be levied to certain uses, it is competent to the parties, whilst it is directory, to vary the uses, but the uses must be varied by all the parties, and be an instrument of as high a degree as the former; and the fine ought to be levied to the same conusee; and, therefore, where a fine covenanted to be levied to certain uses was omitted to be levied, and several years afterwards a fine was levied by the same conusee, pursuant to a deed declaring other uses, and to a different conusee:—Held, that the fine operated to the uses of the latter deed, and not to the former. Houghton v. Tate, 3 Y. & J. 486.

The rule of court requires acknowledgments of fines in Scotland to be taken before advocates or writers to the signet; but, where the value of the property intended to pass was very trifling, and the deforciants very numerous, and all living at a great distance from any advocates or writers, the Court allowed a fine to pass which had been acknowledged before "gentlemen"—two, attornies of the sheriff's court, the third, a justice of peace and notary. Hack, plaintiff, M'Gregor and nine others, deforciants, 8 Law J. C.P. 108, s. c. 6 Bing. 353, s. c. 4 M. & P. 9.

Entries of fines levied, and an ancient deed, (not relating to the lands in question,) wherein was contained a covenant for further assurance, provided the party should not have to travel from the city of Bristol, unless to the castle of St. B for the purpose of levying a fine; evidence of reputation that St. B was a court having jurisdiction to take the acknowledgment of fines. Goodtitle d. Bruine v. Dew, Pea. A.C. 204. [Tenterden]

The Court refused to allow a fine to pass, where the words "taken and received," were substituted in the caption for "taken and acknowledged." Anon. 9 Law J. C.P. 230.

Where one of two vouchees had become insane after he had executed the deed to lead the uses, but before the passing of the fine, and so remained,—The Court refused to allow the fine to pass as to the lunatic, but directed that it should be taken as to the other vouchee alone. Ex parte Crooke, 7 Law J. C.P. 46, s. c. 5 Bing. 176, s. c. 2 M. & P. 264.

Where more than twelve months had elapsed after the taking of the acknowledgment of the conusors, and one of them had died, the Court would not allow a fine to pass, unless it were shewn that the heir-at-law, or person beneficially interested, assented to the application. Ball, conusor; Stevens, conusee, 3 M. & P. 742.

Where one of the deforciants died after the acknowledgment, but before the perfecting of the fine, and upwards of twelve months had elapsed, the Court refused to allow the fine to pass, but left the parties to levy another. Paul and another, plaintiffs; Stevens and wife, deforciants, 8 Law J. C.P. 77.

Where, through the negligence of the attorney's clerk, a fine had been delayed beyond the proper time—the Court refused to allow it to be perfected. Hooper, plaintiff; Green, deforciant, 8 Law J. C.P. 269, s. c. 4 M. & P. 521.

The Court permitted a fine to pass as of Trinity term, 1807, on payment of the King's silver, upon an affidavit, that every previous step necessary to the perfecting the fine had been duly taken, but that the clerk to the solicitor had omitted to pay the King's silver, having absconded with the money, a fact of which the parties remained ignorant until within a few days of the present term. Ash and wife and Watts, conusors; Gye, conusee, 8 Law J. C.P. 63, s. c. 6 Bing. 275, s. c. 3 M. & P. 602.

(B) Effects.

A husband purchases an equity of redemption, with money advanced by his wife's sister of the half blood, and immediately afterwards settles it, subject to an annuity to the sister, on the wife in tail: after her death, the wife levies a fine on the lands:—Held, that the fine was valid and operative, and that the land did not come within the 11 Hen. 7. c. 20. Watkins v. Lewis, 8 Law J. Chanc. 115, s. c. 1 Tam. 147, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 377.

A fine passed by a person who has a contingent remainder in fee, effectually passes his interest; because, although, until the contingency happen, it operates by estoppel only, yet, when the contingency has happened, it then operates upon the estate, as if the fine had passed after the happening of the contingency. Doe d. Christmas v. Oliver, 8 Law J. K.B. 137, s. c. 10 B. & C. 181.

The issue of tenant in tail (pending the lives of tenant for life and tenant in tail), made a conveyance and levied a fine with warranty, without proclamations. The estate tail afterwards fell upon the cognizor:—Held, that by force of the warranty, the estate tail was discontinued, and the issue of the cognizor was barred of his right of entry, on the cognizor's death. Doe d. Thomas v. Jones, 9 Law J. Exch. 179, s. c. 1 C. & J. 528, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 506.

Where a party is not in actual possession, and his right is disputed; and subsequently he is paid rent for the period during which his right was in dispute,—that subsequent acknowledgment of his right does not relate back so as to give effect to a fine levied by him, between the time of the dispute and the time of the receiving of the rent. Doe d. Lidgbird v. Wilding, 7 Law J. K.B. 119, s. c. 8 B. & C. 606, s. c. 3 M. & R. 114.

Where a younger son, who had lived with his father some years before his death, and managed his concerns, and had the superintendence of his property, entered on his fee-simple at his decease, and continued for several years in possession—claiming as heir to his father, on the ground of the illegitimacy of an elder son, and levied a fine:—Held, that the entry, possession, and fine did not bar the right of the eldest son to recover possession by ejectment, without an actual entry to avoid the fine. Doe d. Davis v. Davis, 12 Price, 756.

In a deed to lead the uses of a fine to be levied, the property was described as "all those several messuages, dwelling-houses, tenements, warehouses, shops, back houses, and all and singular erections and buildings whatsoever erected and built upon the said piece of ground." The fine was of thirty messuages, "forty cottages, and four acres of land." There were two or three cottages, and forty-nine dwelling-houses on the premises:—Held, that the fine was sufficient. Doe d. Young v. Sotheron, 9 Law J. K.B. 286, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 628.

(C) Amendment.

The Court refused to allow a fine to be amended, where the affidavit of the commissioners taking the acknowledgment did not pursue the precise form provided by the rule of court of Easter term, 8 Geo. 4. Anon. 8 Law J. C.P. 197.

The Court permitted a fine to be amended by the insertion of parishes not named in the deed to lead the uses, the deed containing the general words, "or elsewhere in the county of S," and the closes in question being named in a schedule annexed. Anon. 8 Law J. C.P. 173.

The Court ordered the indentures of a fine to be made to correspond with the concord, by the insertion of certain limitations of legal estates, which the chirographer had omitted, thinking them unnecessary. Butt, plaintiff; Noel and wife, deforciants, 9 Law J. C.P. 118, s. c. 7 Bing. 338, s. c. 5 M. & P. 159.

FISHERY.

[1 Will. 4. c. 54, 8 Law J. Stat. 114.
[Amendment of acts for the encouragement of the Irish fisheries, 10 Geo. 4. c. 33, 7 Law J. Stat. 73.]

The defendant engaged the plaintiff as second mate of a vessel in the South Sea whale fishery; and the plaintiff was to have a forty-fifth share of the net produce. On the return of the ship, the defendant paid the plaintiff a sum of money, which he stated to be the forty-fifth share, after the customary deductions. No accounts were produced. The defendant afterwards discovered that several deductions had been made that were not authorized by the custom of the trade. Inquiries directed, whether the deductions made were authorized by the custom of the trade:—Held, that the bill having been filed by the plaintiff on behalf of himself and dified; and also was convicted in 10*l.*, on the sessed Tax Act, for so using a gun, not having a tificate. A issued warrants of distress, which re returned nulla bona; and he thereupon com- ted B for three months on the 5*l.* conviction. the 12th of September, he committed B again three months, on the 10*l.* conviction, without viously taking any other step to levy the penalty. An action was brought by B against A, for the ter imprisonment.

The conviction stated the offence to have been nmitted in the parish of S; but did not state that was in the district of P, for which A was therein ted to act as commissioner.

1. Quære—Whether the statute, in so giving the m, restricted the jurisdiction of the commissioner, the cognizance of offences, to those committed thin the district for which he acted, and which s denoted in the form of conviction.

2. Quære—Whether the conviction was bad for t shewing that the locus in quo the offence was nmitted, was within such district.

3. Semble—That it was quashable, unless the con- nitant public knowledge of A's appointment nomi- tim for the whole county by statute, could be im- rted into the conviction.

4. Semble—That, if such knowledge could be so pported, still, if the convicting jurisdiction of the nmissioner was limited, as mentioned in the first ery, the conviction was quashable, for not stating at the locus in quo was within that limit; unless at fact was necessarily implied in the words "duly nvicted"—which, quære.

5. Quære—Whether, until quashed upon appeal, stood valid for the magistrate's justification in his fence to the action.

6. Quære—Whether, for the purpose of such de- nce, the objection was cured by evidence, that the cus in quo stated in the conviction was, in fact, ithin the limited district therein stated.

7. Quære—Whether, in such a case, supposing e conviction to be quashable upon appeal, the aintiff ought to be nonsuited, or to have a verdict r two-pence damages.

8. Quære—Whether the words "duly convicted," the enacted form, comprehended the preliminary eps to the conviction, viz. the information, the mmons, and the appearance, so as to preclude the cessity of the magistrate adducing evidence of ose facts in his defence.

9. Quære—Whether, after the interval between e conviction and the second commitment, on the th of September, the magistrate, not having ad- dicated that imprisonment immediately on the turn of nulla bona in May, could issue such war- nt of commitment without fresh evidence of nulla ona at the time of and as a specific ground for such cond commitment.

10. Quære—Whether that objection was answered y evidence at the trial, that there were, in fact, no fects in September. Dingsgale v. Clarke, Esq. 8 aw J. M.C. 137.

On an indictment under the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. . 29. s. 26, for killing a deer after a previous sum- mary conviction, a conviction by two Justices, of he previous offence, was put in:—Held, that such conviction was good. This conviction, in stating he offence, did not state the place at which it was committed; but the Justices, in awarding the dis- tribution of the penalty, awarded it to the overseers of D in the said county, "where the said offence was committed":—Held sufficient. Rex v. Weale, 5 C. & P. 135 [Park]

The buying of pheasants is, in all cases, prohi- bited by the statute 58 Geo. 3. c. 75; and conse- quently a contract for the sale of live pheasants, though for the purpose of breeding, is void. Helps v. Glenister, 7 Law J. K.B. 117, s. c. 8 B. & C. 553, s. c. 3 M. & R. 12.

In an indictment under the 9th Geo. 4. c. 69. s. 9. it was charged, that the defendants did, by night, unlawfully enter divers closes and inclosed lands, in the parish of W, in the occupation of E C; and, upon objection, that the description was not suffi- ciently certain, by reason that the names of the closes were not given, and that the indictment was accumulative, inasmuch as the being in either close was an offence:—Held, that the indictment, in this respect, was sufficient.

Semble, that, in such an indictment, the expression, "by night," is sufficient; and that the matter in section 12, which gives the definition of right, is matter of evidence, and not of statement.

But where the indictment charged that the defen- dants, "on the 17th day of December, &c., at &c., together did, by night, unlawfully enter, &c., and were then and there in the said closes and lands, armed" &c.:—Held, that the indictment was de- fective; inasmuch as the first member of the sen- tence did not describe the defendants to be armed; and that the second member did not state that the defendants were armed by night; both facts being necessary; and the expression "then and there" being considered as insufficient to connect the two members, so as necessarily to include the night, as the expression, in its ordinary reference, would point merely to the day and the place. Davies v. The King, 8 Law J. M.C. 49, s. c. 10 B. & C. 89, s. c. 5 M. & R. 78.

GAMING.

[Taylor v. Willans, 1 D. & C. A.C. 19, Dig. Law J. 252.]

The stat. 9 Anne, c. 14. makes void the securi- ties given for money lent at the time of play; but the money may nevertheless be recovered, in an ac- tion of assumpsit for money lent. Leapridge v. King, Pes. A.C. 32. [Kenyon]

If a jury be satisfied, upon all the facts, that several persons have been engaged in foul play, and have shared in the fruits of it, they are all liable to an action for money had and received, at the suit of the loser, although some of them may not have been actually present at the time of the play going on, by which the money was won. Dufour v. Ack- land, 9 Law J. K.B. 3.

A gambling debt secured by warrant of attorney, upon which judgment was entered up. The plain- tiff sold the debt to a third person, to whom the de- fendant, in answer to an inquiry by the buyer, said that he owed the money, and the debt would be paid; upon the faith of this, the buyer completed his purchase. Under these circumstances, the Court refused to set aside the judgment, except upon equitable terms in favour of the buyer. Davison v. Franklin, 8 Law J. K.B. 376, s.c. 1 B. & Ad. 142.

GAOLS.

[Reports respecting Gaols in Scotland, directed by 10 Geo. 4. c. 44, 7 Law J. Stat. 123.]

GRANTS.

[See PEER.]

If the King makes a grant which cannot take effect according to its terms, it must be taken that he is deceived in his grant, and consequently, the grant is void. Where, therefore, an estate has been previously conveyed by lease, if the lease be not recited in the grant, the King has granted that which he cannot carry into effect. Alcock v. Cooke, 7 Law J. C.P. 126, s.c. 5 Bing. 340, s.c. 2 M. & P. 625.

In general, a grant which contains an exception, may be construed as intended to pass all which is not within the exception. But an exception cannot be so construed, as to enlarge the terms of the grant itself. Accordingly, the Crown, not being in general bound to pay toll or lighthouse dues, granted letters patent for erecting and maintaining a lighthouse, and for granting certain lighthouse dues payable from all ships which passed, "except ships of war belonging to the Crown":—Held, that as the grant alone, without the exception, would not have entitled the subject to demand the dues in respect of any ship of the Crown, the exception, which appeared to apply only to ships of war, could not so enlarge the terms of the grant itself as to render liable a ship belonging to the Crown, though not a ship of war. Smithett v. Blythe, 9 Law J. K.B. 39, s.c. 1 B. & Ad. 509.

W B about fifty years ago went, on the invitation of W P, whose daughter he had married, to live in the house of W P. The house was held by W P for a term determinable upon lives. W P died thirty-eight year ago intestate, leaving a widow, several sons, and a daughter, the wife of W B. No letters of administration to W P were ever taken out; but W B continued in possession of a part of the premises which he had in the lifetime of W P parted off; the sons taking possession of the other parts; and he and the sons paid the rent in shares; but the shares not bearing the same proportion to that of their shares of the father's property, in case there had been a legal distribution. One of the sons afterwards went away; and W P took possession of his portion, and paid his share of the rent:—Held, first, that this possession was not adverse; secondly, that no grant to W B could be presumed, as there had been no letters of administration, and there was no person who could legally make a grant. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Okeford Fitzpaine, 9 Law J. K.B. 32, M.C. 12, s.c. 1 B. & Ad. 914.

GUARANTIE.

(A) CONSTRUCTION.
(B) NOTE OR MEMORANDUM WITHIN THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS.
(C) RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.
(D) PLEADINGS AND EVIDENCE.

(A) CONSTRUCTION.

[Pemberton v. Oakes, 4 Russ. 154, Dig. Law J. 233.]

The defendant gave the plaintiff a guarantie for five sacks of flour, to be delivered to a third person. This person complaining of the quality of the flour, a second parcel of five sacks was sent to him by the plaintiff; and, three days afterwards, three sacks and a half, the unconsumed portion of the first five, were returned to the plaintiff:—Held, that the second delivery was not a delivery under the guarantie. Kay v. Groves, 7 Law J. C.P. 9, s.c. 4 C. & P. 72, s.c. 6 Bing. 276, s.c. 3 M. & P. 634.

The defendant agreed to be answerable to the plaintiff, in a certain amount, for gold supplied to I S for the purposes of his trade. In the course of their dealings the plaintiff discounted bills for I S, giving him the amount partly in cash and partly in gold:—Held, that this was not a dealing within the meaning of the guarantie. Evans v. Whyle, 7 Law J. C.P. 205, s.c. 5 Bing. 485, s.c. 3 M. & P. 130, s.c. 1 M. & M. 468.

"I do hereby agree to guarantee the payment of goods to be delivered in umbrellas and parasols to J and E A S, according to the custom of their trading with you, in the sum of 200*l.*":—Held, a continuing guarantie. Hargrease v. Smee, 8 Law J. C.P. 46, s.c. 6 Bing. 244, s.c. 3 M. & P. 573.

The plaintiff gave the defendant promissory notes, and his cognovit for 500*l.* in full for all claims which the defendant as assignee of J I had against him. The defendant gave to the plaintiff a guarantie, by which, in consideration of the money so secured to be paid as aforesaid, he indemnified the plaintiff against all liabilities which he was under on account of J I:—Held, that the consideration for this guarantie was the security, and not the payment of the money expressed in the notes and the cognovit; and that, in an action on the guarantie, it was not necessary to aver that the money had been actually paid. Ikin v. Brook, 8 Law J. K.B. 379, s.c. 1 B. & Ad. 124.

(B) NOTE OR MEMORANDUM WITHIN THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

The plaintiff being about to take one J C into his service, the defendant gave him the following guarantie, viz.—"I do hereby agree to bind myself to be security to you for Mr. J C, late in the employ of Mr. P, for whatever (while in your employ) you may intrust him with, to the amount of 50*l.*; in case of any default, to make the same good:"—Held, that, by fair implication, this agreement disclosed a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise.

Newberry v. Armstrong, 8 Law J. C.P. 4, s. c. 6 Bing. 101, s. c. 3 M. & P. 509, s. c. 4 C. & P. 59.

Undertaking in these words—"R v. A—We jointly and severally submit, undertake and agree to pay to C the debt and full costs in this action, provided, on or before the 1st of January next, 19*l.* be not paid to the said C as the attorney for the plaintiff," (signed by defendant and surety):—Held, that no consideration appeared, so as make it a sufficient agreement to pay the debt of another, to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Cole v. Dyer, 9 Law J. Exch. 109, s. c. 1 C. & J. 161, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 304.

(C) Rights and Liabilities.

Where a guarantie was for "the payment of any debt which A may contract to any amount not exceeding 400*l.*"—and A failed, being indebted 625*l.* in respect of which the creditor received 8*s.* 7*d.* in the pound from his estate:—Held, that the surety was only liable for the remaining 11*s.* 5*d.* in the pound on the 400*l.* Bardwell v. Lydall, 9 Law J. C.P. 148, s. c. 7 Bing. 489, s. c. 5 M. & P. 327.

A person indemnified cannot charge the person indemnifying with the costs of defending an action for a debt clearly due, unless authorized by him to defend. Gillett v. Rippon, 1 M. & M. 406. [Tenterden]

A promise made by one co-surety to another, to indemnify him in consideration of his joining him as a surety, is not a promise within the Statute of Frauds, so as to require a written undertaking.

Nor, semble, is any promise to indemnify a person in consideration of his becoming surety, a promise within the statute. Thomas v. Cooke, 7 Law J. K.B. 9, s. c. 8 B. & C. 728.

The plaintiff being sued by his vicar for tithes, and having defended the suit for some time at the instance of the other occupiers of land in the parish, was about to relinquish the defence, when the defendant promised to indemnify him from the costs incurred and to be incurred, if he would allow the cause to proceed:—Held, that this was not an agreement for the debt, default, &c. of another, within the Statute of Frauds. Adams v. Dansey, 8 Law J. C.P. 165, s. c. 6 Bing. 506, s. c. 4 M. & P. 245.

(D) Pleadings and Evidence.

The plaintiff declared, that, in consideration that he would defend any action that might be brought against him, on account of certain money which he had delivered to the defendant, the latter promised to indemnify the plaintiff from the consequences of the action; that an action was brought, and that judgment was recovered therein against the plaintiff for 42*l.* 15*s.*, and a ca. sa. issued, under which the plaintiff was taken into custody, and paid that sum in order to procure his discharge. The defendant took out a summons to stay proceedings upon payment of 42*l.* 15*s.* and costs. At the trial, the ca. sa. was not produced, but evidence was given of the arrest and discharge of the defendant. The jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff for 42*l.* 15*s.*, and also a further sum of 23*l.* 15*s.* by way of damages for the imprisonment.—The Court ordered the verdict to be reduced by the latter sum, and held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the former, either under the special count, or under the count for money paid. Williamson v. Henley, 8 Law J. C.P. 82, s. c. 6 Bing. 299, 3 M. & P. 731.

Letter of guarantie to plaintiff, by defendant, that P C shall "faithfully and honestly discharge any duty assigned to or trust reposed in him." Plaintiff, upon receiving this, employs P C as his agent. Sufficient consideration appears on the face of the guarantie to bind the defendant. Plaintiff, in an action against the surety, shews that he employed the agent first at B, and afterwards at L; and that the agent, when removed to L, was indebted to him in a considerable balance; and produces accounts which bear on the face of them, that various sums remitted by the agent from L, were so remitted as the proceeds of sale made at L:—Held, that the Judge was not bound to direct the jury, as matter of law, that they must consider the remittances from L to be made in discharge of the balance due at B, so as to relieve the surety from his liability; but that he was right in leaving the question to the jury on the whole matter in evidence. Lysaght v. Walker, 2 Dow. & C. A.C. 211.

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

A gift by a ward to her guardian, shortly after her attaining her majority, will be set aside by a court of equity. Faulkner v. Salmon, 9 Law J. Chanc. 155.

The Court will make an order for appointing a guardian and allowing maintenance, upon petition, without bill, where the infant's income does not exceed 300*l.* a year. Ex parte Lakin, in re Lakin, 4 Russ. 307.

Semble—that the guardian of a minor instituting a suit cannot be condemned in the costs incurred, after a proxy has been exhibited, for the party then become of full age. Green v. Proctor and Newry, 1 Hag. Ec. 337.

HABEAS CORPUS.

A prisoner in custody for high treason cannot be brought into court by hab. corp. ad test. Langston v. Cotton, Peo. A.C. 21. [Kenyon]

If, upon a return to a habeas corpus cum causâ, the proceedings in the inferior court shew matter against the defendant, part of which is within, and part not within its jurisdiction, the Court above will not, on that account alone, refuse a procedendo; but will leave the defendant to his remedy, by writ of error, in case the inferior court should proceed to judgment upon the matter which is not within their jurisdiction. Clarke v. Denton, 8 Law J. K.B. 333, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 92.

[Hayes v. Hayes, 4 Russ. 311; Dig. Law J. 258.]

[illegible] statute of 3 & 4 W. and M. c. 14, where, [illegible] action of debt on specialty against the heir, [illegible] per descent, and plaintiff replies assets [illegible] before action; if the issue is found for [illegible] the jury are to inquire of the value of [illegible] descended. The jury having found for the [illegible] without inquiring of the value of the land [illegible], the verdict was held imperfect, and a [illegible] ordered. Brown v. Shaber, 9 Law J. [illegible] 120, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 400, s. c. 1 C. & J. 383.

[illegible] of freehold estates, and of customary [illegible], which were not devisable, made a voluntary surrender of the latter to B in fee, in trust, as [illegible] for A; and, after his death, for the purpose of his will: but B executed no declaration [illegible]. A made a general devise of all his real [illegible] and, after A's death, B was admitted [illegible] as a trustee for the devisees, and [illegible] a customary heir. Wilson v. Dent, 3 Sim. 82.

Where a [illegible], or any part of it, of an inheritable [illegible] remains unpaid, and is made, by the [illegible], a burden on the estate till paid, the [illegible] that part of it which remains unpaid, and [illegible] a burden on the estate, does not go to the [illegible] or administrator, but remains heritable, [illegible] to the heir-at-law. Mackenzie v. Anderson, 2 Jurr. N. S. A. C. 60.

The heir-at-law entitled to his costs from the [illegible], who may be reimbursed out of the fund in [illegible] without prejudice to the costs of the administration. Wilsey v. Hicks, 1 Tam. 475.

An heir-at-law, questioning the sanity of his ancestor, [illegible] to an issue devisavit vel non; and, if he fails in the issue, will not be compelled to pay costs, if the circumstances justified him in trying the issue, but costs will not be allowed to him. Shaw v. Jeffrey, 3 Y. & J. 278.

If an heir-at-law, alleging insanity in a devisor, fails in his suit against the devisees, and he fail in the issue devisavit vel non, he shall pay the costs of the issue, but not the costs of the suit, unless he might have asserted his claim by ejectment; and then his suit will be deemed vexatious, and he will be ordered to pay the costs of it. Scaife v. Scaife, 4 Russ. 309.

(A) Constitution and Dedication.

Upon the trial of an issue directed to try whether, for forty-six years prior to 1822, there existed a public foot road from G to C, it was proved that, rom the year 1755 to 1789, the road was used by he public without interruption; and that stiles had, n 1789, been placed in the fences, by the owners f the land over which the road passed. From the ear 1797 there were frequent interruptions, down o the date of the trial. The Judge, at the trial, irected the jury, that the interruptions proved ere not sufficient to defeat the right in the public o the footway in question; which right must, in he evidence, be presumed to have been established, y having been used for forty years and upwards rom the date of the interruption, as stated in the ssue. Upon a bill of exceptions to this direction,—eld, that on proof of thirty-four years uninterrupt-d exercise of the right, it was competent for the ury to presume, and that they might in point of aw be directed to presume, an enjoyment corre-ponding with the manner in which the road had een enjoyed during the thirty-four years, esta-lishing, according to the law of Scotland, a pre-criptive right of way. Harvie v. Rogers, 3 Bligh, n.s. 440.

(B) Surveyors.

Where a parish consisted of two townships, for ach of which, as long as living witnesses could rove, there had been separate surveyors of high-ways, separate rates for the repairs, and separate ccounts, at the examination of which both sets f the inhabitants attended; but on such occasions here had been an appointment of two surveyors for he parish at large, in order to save expense:—Held, that this was evidence of immemorial exist-nce of separate townships, and that separate sur-eyors should be appointed.

Semble—that in such a case, an indictment would ie against either, separately, for non-repair of its wn road. Rex v. the Inhabitants of King's Newton, 9 Law J. M.C. 54, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 826.

Semble—That a surveyor of highways cannot maintain an action against the late surveyor for the alance remaining in his hands; the proper remedy eing by proceeding for the penalty under 13 Geo. 3. . 78. s. 48.

But, even if such an action is at all maintainable, t cannot be brought until the accounts have been ettled and allowed, or disallowed, in the manner ointed out by the above act. Heudebourck v. Lang-on, 8 Law J. M.C. 134, s. c. 10 B. & C. 546.

An action against a surveyor of the highways for idening the road, and thereby taking away a part f the land of the person whose land adjoined, must e brought within three months from the time of he act done, according to the 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. s. 81; nd the mere continuing of the land separated from he rest of the owner's land, is not an act for which e can maintain an action against the surveyor, fter the expiration of three months from the ori-inal separation. Wordsworth v. Harley, 9 Law J. M.C. 50, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 391.

(C) Commissioners and Trustees.

Where, upon the diversion of a turnpike road, fter the new road had been completed, but before he old road was stopped up, the trustees, by the ermission of B, broke down his fence to make a passage from the new road to the close of A, but did not put up a gate or fence to protect the latter close:—Held, that the trustees were wrong-doers, and that B was responsible for their acts. Winter v. Charter, 3 Y. & J. 308.

By the general Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 65, it is provided, that no trustee of any turnpike road shall enjoy any office or place of profit under any act in execution of which he shall have been appointed; and that, if any such trustee shall hold any such office, without having first resigned his office of trustee, he shall forfeit 100*l*., and shall be incapable of acting as a trustee of any turnpike road.

A trustee under a local act was appointed treasurer, and continued to hold both offices. There was no salary attached to the latter. The trustee executed the office by deputy; the deputy being an attorney, who received and paid all the money, and who mixed the money and used it in common with his own. He occasionally assisted his clients with loans of money. There was always a balance in the hands of the deputy in favour of the trust; but the trustee himself did not derive any benefit from the office.

In an action against the trustee, under the above statute, the Court were of opinion, that if the office in question were an office of profit, it was immaterial whether the trustee himself derived the profit or not; and that the question, whether the office was an office of profit, was a question for a jury. The jury having found that the office was an office of profit, and that profit was made of it, the defendant was held liable. Delane v. Hillcoat, 8 Law J. K.B. 4, ib. M.C. 41, s. c. 9 B. & C. 310, s. c. 4 M. & R. 175.

(D) Reparation.

The inhabitants of a parish are not bound to the repair of a way used by the public and repaired by the parish for more than twenty years, if there be no owner who could dedicate the way to the public, and the repairs by the parish be shewn to have been begun and continued under a mistaken notion of the liability of the inhabitants to repair. The inhabitants are bound by such repairs, if made with full knowledge of the facts, and with the intention of taking upon themselves the public duty.

Semble—that roads set out under an inclosure act do not, by presumption of law, belong to the adjoining owners. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Edmonton, 2 M. & M. 24. [Tenterden]

Whether a parish is liable to repair a road which has been dedicated by the owner of the soil to the public, and has been used by the public generally, except by the inhabitants of the parish in which it is situated, and who have not adopted it—quære.

Where a local act provided that the parish should not be liable to the repair of any highway not repaired by the parish before the passing of that act, until it had been first surveyed by two surveyors, one to be chosen by the parish vestry,—and it appeared that a road had been set out by certain individuals for the purpose of forming a street, but the street had been but partially formed, and the chief part of the buildings was only in progress,—the Court, in the exercise of its discretion, refused to grant a mandamus to the vestry, commanding them to appoint a surveyor on their part; to survey the road. Rex v. the Vestry of the Parish of Paddington, 8 Law J. M.C. 4, s. c. 9 B. & C. 456.

Where a road has been made under a turnpike act, which act is afterwards repealed, the road ceases to be a public highway; and the public are not bound to repair it. Rex v. Mellor, 8 Law J. M.C. 109, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 32.

An indictment for non-repair of a road or bridge on a liability ratione tenuræ, cannot be sustained where it appears that the tenement on which the liability is charged originated within time of legal memory. On such an indictment, parishioners are admissible witnesses for the prosecution. Rex v. Hayman, 1 M. & M. 401. [Tindal]

The lessee for years, or other person receiving the benefit of tithes, is liable, in respect of them, to the highway rates, although he compound with the tithe-payers for the amount, and the tithe is not, in fact, severed. Chanter v. Glubb, 9 B. & C. 479, s. c. 4 M. & R. 334.

Whether a public carriage highway can be only partially diverted, leaving it still open to the public as a footway—quære.

The order of Justices, diverting a public highway, must shew, on the face of it, not only that the proposed substituted highway is commodious, but also that the public right of passage over it will be as permanent as that which they have over the old highway.

Accordingly, where such a substituted highway was, in part, over a turnpike road, made under a local act, the provisions of which did not distinctly appear to be permanent,—the Court held the order of the Justices to be bad. Rex v. Winter, 7 Law J. M.C. 15, s. c. 8 B. & C. 785.

Where it is proposed to divert a road, and the land through which the old road runs, as well as that through which the proposed new road is to run, belongs to the same person, whether the order of the Justices under the 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. ss. 16, 17, and 21, and 55 Geo. 3. c. 68, may direct an exchange of the old for the new road, or whether it must direct a sale of the old road—quære.

Where it is proposed to divert a road, communicating at different points with several other roads —semble, that each point forms a road, and that there should be separate orders for each point of the road.

Where an order for diverting a road directed that it should be stopped up, but did not shew on the face of it, that the proposed new road was fit for the reception of travellers, the order was held to be bad.

Where such an order did not state that the Justices had viewed the course of the proposed new road, the order was held to be bad. Rex v. the Justices of Kent, 8 Law J. M.C. 73, s. c. 9 B. & C. 477.

By the general Highway Act, 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. s. 64, the Court before which any indictment for non-repair of a road is tried, may award costs to the prosecutor if the defence appear to have been frivolous, or to the defendant if it appear that the prosecution was vexatious. This section applies only to cases tried in the ordinary course; and where, on an indictment removed by the defendant by certiorari, the Court above had ordered a new trial, and the prosecutor's costs of both trials to abide the event,—it was held, that this special rule took away the authority of the Judge to certify in favour of the defendant. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Salwick, 2 B. & Ad. 136.

An issue upon an alleged custom to take shingle from the sea beach to amend the highways of the parish, is not such a matter relating to the rates and cesses of the parish, within the meaning of the 54 Geo. 3. c. 170. s. 9, as to render inhabitants who are liable to the highway rate competent witnesses by means of the statute in favour of the alleged custom. Oxenden v. Palmer, 9 Law J. K.B. 238, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 236.

(E) Stopping up, changing, and diverting.

[See Wilkinson v. Bagshaw, Pea. A.C. 165.]

An order of justices for diverting a highway, and stopping up a part of it, described the highway by termini, and by reference to a plan. The part to be stopped up was described as so many yards of the said highway, lying between certain letters on the plan, and coloured blue. Notice was published (pursuant to the statute 55 Geo. 3. c. 68.) of the order having been made, but the notice had no plan annexed, and merely described the road by termini, and the part to be stopped up as so many yards of such road:—Held, (Littledale J. dubitante,) that the order explained by a plan annexed, was good; but, (per totam Curiam,) that the notice was insufficient. Rex v. Horner, 2 B. & Ad. 150.

Where an order is made under the 55 Geo. 3. c. 68. s. 2, not for diverting or turning, but for entirely stopping up a footway, as unnecessary,—it is not requisite to direct that the footway so stopped up should be sold. Rex v. Glover, 9 Law J. M.C. 58, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 482.

Where it is proposed to stop up a road under the authority of the general Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, and the site of the new road is taken by the trustees in exchange for that of the old, it is not necessary that there should be any formal conveyance made to the trustees of the site of the new road. Pott and Allnutt v. Pott, 8 Law J. M.C. 151, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 302.

HORSE-RACE.

The clerk of the course at a race cannot bring actions for unpaid stakes. Nor can he set off a claim of an unpaid stake, due from the plaintiff on one race, against a stake of another race, won by the plaintiff's horse. Charlton v. Hill, 5 C. & P. 147. [Patteson]

HUNDRED.

Under the Black Act, 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, where a barn which was the property of the landlord, and the corn contained therein the property of the tenant, was maliciously set fire to and burnt; the hundred were held liable to the extent of 200*l.*, to both parties injured. Notice given by a servant of the tenant, as such servant, is sufficient, in order to support an action by the landlord also. Adderley v. Hundred of Offlow, North, Pea. A.C. 206.

A person who was not the occupier, but was entitled to the reversion, of premises feloniously set on fire, held entitled to recover damages against the hundred under 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. And semble, that the occupier might also maintain an action; each party recovering not more than 200*l*.

Where the fire took place on Saturday, and the notice directed by the above act was given on Monday:—Held, that the notice was properly given within "two days" after the damage, as required by the statute.

Where the person entitled to the reversion had no servant in the care of the premises on his behalf:—Held, that he was the proper person to give in the examination required by the above act, although he was not on the spot at the time of the fire.

Where the person who gives in such an examination has, at the time, a suspicion of a particular individual, but does not know who is the person who committed the offence, it is not necessary for him to state in his examination, his suspicion of that individual. Pellew v. Hundred of Wonford, 7 Law J. K.B. 148, ib. M.C. 84; s. c. 9 B. & C. 134; s. c. 1 M. & R. 130.

Where the owner of property destroyed by malicious fire, gives in his examination on oath, under statute 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, it is not necessary, in order to enable the owner to recover against the hundred, that any other person should do so.

The provision, that the servants having the care of the premises shall do so, only applies to cases where the owner is away, and has no personal superintendence of the premises; not in cases where he merely happens to be absent at the instant the fire happens. Rolfe v. the Inhabitants of Elthorne, 2 M. & M. 185. [Tenterden]

It is not a "beginning to demolish" a house, within the meaning of the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30. s. 8, unless the jury be satisfied that the ultimate object of the rioters was to demolish the house, and that, if they had carried their intention into full effect, they would, in point of fact, have demolished it. Rex v. Matthew Thomas, 4 C. & P. 237. [Littledale]

The party robbed, a competent witness in an action against the hundred. Porter v. the Hundred of Regland, Pea. A.C. 203. [Chambre]

[See LUNATIC.]

INCEST.

In a criminal suit for incest, instituted under circumstances indicative of vindictive feeling, sleeping in the same room (conduct which the parties proceeded against had been allowed, without objection or complaint, to continue for thirteen years,) though attended by other facts, inducing a strong presumption of guilt, is not sufficient proof of the offence; and the Court, unless most stringent and conclusive evidence be produced, will dismiss the parties, but give no costs. Griffith v. Reed, 1 Hag. Ec. 195.

INCLOSURE.

A person had an expectant life-estate in a tenement to which there was a right of common. An inclosure act passed, giving the usual powers to the commissioners to make allotments; declaring that persons should claim before them within a limited time; and that their award should be final. By one of the clauses, it was provided, that the allotments should remain to the same uses and purposes as the tenements. The person having the expectant life-interest made claim before the commissioners in his own name, and they allotted to him, in respect of the tenement, according to his right and interest:—Held, that his claim must be taken to apply only to his interest; and that those who were entitled at his death to the tenement, were also entitled to the allotment, although they made no claim before the commissioners; the claim being considered as made on behalf of, and the allotment as made to, all persons interested, according to their several interests. Doe d. Sweeting v. Wellard, 7 Law J. K.B. 79, s. c. 9 B. & C. 789, s. c. 4 M. & R. 736.

An inclosure act gave the commissioners a power to exchange, directing the exchange to be ascertained, specified, and declared in their award; the consent to the exchange to be by the parties in writing. The award professed to give effect to an exchange, describing part of the subject-matter of the exchange, as "an old inclosure" within the manor; but giving no further description; and the award did not state that this was effected in pursuance of consent, according to the terms of the exchange clause:—Held, that a person who offered for sale an allottment made under this exchange, could not make out a good title. Wingfield v. Tharp, 8 Law J. K.B. 318, s. c. 10 B. & C. 785.

Under an inclosure act an allotment was made to J R in respect of certain lands. After the allotment, but before the award of the commissioners, the lands in question were conveyed by J R to trustees for the payment of debts and incumbrances:—Held, that the allotment, though not mentioned in the conveyance, passed with the lands in respect of which the allotment was made. Doe d. Dixon v. Willis, 7 Law J. C.P. 170; s. c. 5 Bing. 441, s. c. 3 M. & P. 24.

By an inclosure act, the commissioners were empowered to award to the owners of commonable messuages or cottages a new right of common in lieu of their ancient right; their award to be final, unless the parties objecting should within three months cause an action to be brought upon a feigned issue:—Held, that the time so limited being suffered to elapse, the new right created by the award could not afterwards be called in question. Phillips v. Maile, 9 Law J. C.P. 9, s. c. 7 Bing. 133, s. c. 4 M. & P. 770.

Where parties had been in possession under allotments in pursuance of an inclosure act for upwards of twelve years, without any occupation road being set out for those allotments, the Court refused to grant a mandamus to the commissioners to set out a road, although the award had not been made; the Court being of opinion that the application was too late. Rex v. the Commissioners under the Cockermouth Inclosure Act, 9 Law. J. K.B. 38; s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 378.

The clause in inclosure acts, which directs the commissioners annually to pass their accounts, is directory only; and the circumstance of their having neglected their duty in this respect, does not render void their warrant of distress, for a part of by-gone sums unaccounted for. The remedy against them, is to be sought by appeal, or by application to the Court for a mandamus commanding them to pass their accounts. Smith v. Jones, 8 Law J. K.B. 402, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 328.

By a local Inclosure Act it was provided, "That whenever the office of a commissioner should become vacant, the lord of the manor, with the major part, in value, of the proprietors of lands and common rights in the parish (such value to be ascertained according to their respective assessments in the last rate made for the relief of the poor in the said parish,) present at a public meeting, should elect another." And by another clause, "That out of the lands to be allotted, the commissioners should allot a part, in their judgment sufficient, when sold, to defray the expenses of carrying the act into effect; and if it should prove insufficient, the deficiency should be made up by the persons interested in the lands to be inclosed, and should be paid in such proportion, and at such times, as the commissioners should direct." And by another clause it was enacted, "That the commissioners should, once a year, lay their accounts before a Justice of the Peace, and get them allowed by him; and that no charge or item in such account should be binding on the parties concerned, or valid in law, unless the same should have been duly allowed by such justice;" and an appeal was given against the accounts or rates to be made by the commissioners.

The office of commissioner having become vacant, a new one was elected by the lord of the manor, and the major part, in value, of the proprietors of lands, at a public meeting. No one there disputed that he had such majority; but no reference was made to the poor rates:—Held, that nevertheless the appointment was valid.

The commissioners having set apart and sold a portion of the lands to be allotted, in order to defray expenses, found that there was a deficiency, and made a rate upon the parties interested, in order to provide for that deficiency. One of these parties having refused to pay:—Held, that the commissioners might bring ejectment under the 29th section of the General Inclosure Act, 41 Geo. 3. c. 109, to recover the land allotted to him, in respect of which the rate was imposed.

The commissioners, instead of laying their accounts before a Justice annually, had done so only twice in fourteen years, and had not done so for several years before the rate was made; but there never was an appeal against the accounts or the rate:—Held, that the commissioners had power to make such rate, notwithstanding their neglect in passing their accounts. Doe v. Bodenham, 9 B. & C. 495.

INDEMNITY.

A gave B authority to distrain on the goods of C, and gave him an indemnity against all costs and charges, that he might be at "on that account." B made the distress, and his men being told by the son of C, that a certain cask contained spent liquor of no value, they took the cask to pieces, and let the liquor run off. It was in fact cochineal dye belonging to D; for the wasting of it D recovered damages against B, in an action of trover:—Held, that B could not recover the amount of those damages from A, in an action on an indemnity, and that such an indemnity would only apply to cases where a distress was illegal, because the landlord had no right to put in such distress. Draper v. Thompson, 4 C. & P. 84. [Tindal]

INDICTMENT.

[See SHEEP-STEALING.]

Counsel are not allowed to argue at length at Nisi Prius, the invalidity of an indictment, for the purpose of inducing the Court to refuse to try it. Rex v. Abraham, 2 M. & M. 7. [Tenterden]

A person whose land is occasionally liable to injury by the overflow of river water, has no right, in his mode of protecting himself against that injury, to produce injury or damage to his neighbours in respect of the course of the same water. Rex v. Trafford, 9 Law J. K.B. 72, s. c. 14 M.C. 66, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 374.

Semble, that a count for robbery, and for an assault with intent to rob, ought not to be joined in the same indictment. If they are joined, the prosecutor must elect on which the case is to go to the jury. Rex v. Gough, 2 M. & M. 71. [Park]

Where an indictment states facts which constitute an offence in point of law, the unnecessary addition of other facts will not vitiate the indictment, although the jury expressly negative those unnecessary facts. Accordingly, by stat. 9 Geo. 4. c. 41. s. 30, it was provided, that if any person knowingly, and with intention to deceive, gave a certain certificate therein mentioned, he should be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. In the concluding part of the same section, it was provided, that if any physician, surgeon, or apothecary, should sign any such certificate without having visited and personally examined the individual to whom it related, he should be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. In an indictment against a surgeon upon the latter branch of this section, it was, in addition to the necessary facts, unnecessarily stated, that the defendant gave the certificate with intention to deceive. The jury found the defendant guilty, but negatived the alleged intention to deceive. Held, that this was a good indictment, and judgment was given upon the conviction. The principle above laid down, applies equally to cases where the offence charged is an offence at common law, as where it is created by statute. Rex v. William Jones, 9 Law J. M.C. 98, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 611.

If a parish be partly situate in the county of W, and partly in the county of S, it is sufficient, in an indictment for larceny, to state the offence to have been committed "at the parish of H, in the county of W." Rex v. Perkins, 4 C. & P. 363. [Park]

Where, under a statutable offence, time is material, the time stated in the indictment must, in arrest of judgment, be taken to be the true time, without substantive averment. Thus, where a statute made it penal to exhibit lights to persons at sea, within a particular half of the year, an allegation that the party exhibited lights on a particular day in a particular month, within that half year, is sufficient. Rex v. Brown, 2 M. & M. 163. [Littledale]

An indictment for stealing a bank note did not conclude contra formam statuti:—Held, by the fifteen Judges, that it was bad. Rex v. Pearson, 5 C. & P. 121.

A box belonging to a benefit society, was stolen from a room in a public house. Two of the stewards had keys of this box; and, by the rules of the society, the landlord ought to have had a key, but in fact he had not:—Held, that the prisoner might be convicted on a count, laying the property in the landlord alone. Rex v. Wymer, 4 C. & P. 391. [J. Parke]

An indictment for the publication of the following paper—"Will you, farmers and parsons, pay us better for our labour?—If you won't, we will put you in bodily fear.—Swing."

The indictment charged the intention to be, to disturb the peace; and it charged a publication generally, without saying to farmers, clergymen, or labourers:—Held, sufficient. Rex v. Savill, 9 Law J. M.C. 118.

A prisoner indicted for stealing two heifers, said, "I drove away two heifers from the World's End Dolver," (i. e. Fen). The prosecutor's farm was called by that name, but he could not swear that there was not any other of the same name in the neighbourhood:—Held, insufficient to warrant a conviction. Rex v. Tuffs, 5 C. & P. 167. [Lyndhurst]

A prisoner was indicted for night poaching; and it was proposed to shew, that on the occasion in question, one of the prosecutor's game-keepers had lost his coat, and that it was found in the prisoner's house. There was another indictment against the prisoner for stealing the coat:—Held, that this evidence was inadmissible, unless the prosecutor consented to an acquittal on the indictment for the larceny. Rex v. Westwood, 4 C. & P. 547. [Patteson]

On an indictment for felony, a matter, which was the subject of another indictment for felony, was material to be given in evidence, as it formed a part of the facts of the case. The Judge received the evidence, and did not direct the second prosecution to be abandoned. Rex v. Salisbury, 5 C. & P. 155. [Patteson]

Semble, that if a person be tried at the assizes, on an indictment removed by certiorari, the Judge would, under very special circumstances, receive affidavits in mitigation, before he proceeded to pass sentence, under the stat. 1 Will. 4. c. 70. s. 9, but not in ordinary cases. Rex v. Cox, 4 C. & P. 538. [Patteson]

After conviction for a misdemeanor, the defendant, upon writ of error, objected that the verdict, at the time it was given, was not entered of record: Held to be no objection; first, because the verdict could not be entered on the record until after it had been given; secondly, that there was no necessity to enter it on record immediately after it had been given, the minute of the officer being sufficient for the temporary purpose, until the record was formally made up.

It was also objected, that there was but one of the Justices named in the commission present at the time of the giving of the verdict, the presence of two being necessary by the commission:—Held, that the defendant could not take this objection upon writ of error, in contradiction to the record as returned to the court of error. Held also, that both the above objections upon assignment of error were well answered by the common joinder in error, in nulle est erratum, which, although in point of law in the nature of a demurrer, is only an admission of such facts as it is competent for the other party in point of law to assign as error. Rex v. Richard Carlile, 9 Law J. K.B. 250, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 362.

(C) Maintenance.
(D) Actions and Suits by and against.

(A) Rights and Incapacities.

[See 1 Will. 4. c. 65, 8 Law J. Stat. 134.]

A copyholder covenants to surrender to trustees in trust to sell, and dies before surrender, leaving an infant heir; the covenantees agree to sell the estate, and afterwards file a bill for a specific performance:—Held, that the heir is not an infant trustee within 6 Geo. 4. c. 74, and therefore cannot be ordered to surrender immediately; and the bill was dismissed with costs. King v. Turner, 2 Sim. 549.

A master advanced money to his female servant, who was under age, for her to purchase a silk dress and other articles not necessary for her:—Held, that these advances formed no defence to an action for her wages.

Payments made to an infant, on account of wages due to her, for her to purchase necessaries, are valid payments.

Money paid by a master for coach fares for the mother of his servant, who was under age, cannot be deducted from the wages of the servant.

The statement of an account by an infant, is not binding on the infant. Hedgley and Wife v. Holt, 4 C. & P. 104. [Bayley]

Though an infant who has entered into a contract, cannot be compelled to complete it, yet he cannot maintain an action to recover back a deposit. Wilson v. Hearse, Pes. A.C. 196. [Kenyon]

An infant cannot sustain a suit for the specific performance of a contract, because the remedy is not mutual. Flight v. Bolland, 4 Russ. 298.

The testamentary guardians of an infant sold part of his estates, for the purpose of redeeming the land-tax, under the provisions of the act, 38 Geo. 3. c. 60, by which, in cases of sales of estates of infants, for the purposes of that act, it is provided, that the purchase monies shall be paid into the Bank of England, in the manner therein directed. The purchaser of part of the property paid his purchase-money to the agent of the vendors, who was also agent to the purchaser, and the conveyance was executed. The agent did not pay the money into the bank, but misapplied it. The purchaser entered into possession, and continued in such possession for many years, paying, however, the land-tax. The heir-at-law, upon his attaining his age of twenty-one years, settled accounts with his guardians, and afterwards continued to employ the same agent, with whom he, some years afterwards, settled an account, and for the balance, including the purchase-money, took from such agent a security, which however proved valueless. Nearly twenty years after attaining his age, the heir brought an ejectment against the purchaser, to restrain which, and to obtain a confirmation of the contract, the purchaser filed his bill. The Court dismissed the bill, but without costs. Hicks v. Morant, 3 Y. & J. 286.

If a child, more than seven and under fourteen years of age, is indicted for felony, it will be left to the jury to say, whether the offence was committed by the prisoner, and if so, whether, at the time of offence, the prisoner had a guilty knowledge that he or she was doing wrong. The presumption of law is, that a child of that age has not such guilty knowledge, unless the contrary be proved by the evidence. Rex v. Elizabeth Owen, 4 C. & P. 236. [Littledale]

(B) Liabilities.

If a husband educates his wife's child by a former husband, he cannot recover compensation from such child when it comes of age. Pelly v. Rawlings, Pea. A.C. 226.

Money advanced to place out an infant apprentice, not recoverable on a promise by infant to repay, as not being for necessaries. Smith v. Gibson, Pea. A.C. 52. [Kenyon]

If a tradesman trusts an infant, he does it at his peril, and he cannot recover if it turns out that the party has been properly supplied by his friends. Story v. Pery, 4 C. & P. 526. [Tenterden]

(C) Maintenance.

Construction of clauses in a settlement and will, relative to allowances for the maintenance of younger children. Hunloke v. Gell, 1 Russ. & M. 515.

Testator directed the interest of his residue to be paid to his wife, for the maintenance of herself and her children, until the death of her father, when it was to cease, and to be accumulated for the children, (the testator having understood that his wife's father had made ample provision by his will, for the testator's wife and children,) and the testator directed his residue and the accumulations, to be transferred to his children, when the youngest attained twenty-one, with benefit of survivorship, on their dying under twenty-one and without issue, but if having issue, then the issue to take the deceased parent's share, with a bequest over, in case all the children died under twenty-one, and without issue. Testator died in the lifetime of his wife's father, who died shortly afterwards, without having made any provision for the wife or children. The Court refused to allow maintenance out of the residue, to the testator's infant children, although the legatees over consented to the application. Kime v. Wolfild, 3 Sim. 533.

Maintenance will not be allowed, without a bill filed, to an infant entitled to real estate, which is of a yearly value exceeding 100*l*. In the matter of Sir William Molesworth, 4 Russ. 308, n. [See 1 Jac. & Walk. 151, where the principal cases on this subject are cited.]

Order for a reference as to maintenance out of an infant's freehold estate, made upon petition without suit. Ex parte Starkie, 3 Sim. 339.

Dividends, to which infants were entitled, ordered, without a reference, to be paid to their father for their maintenance; the parties being poor, and the property of small amount. Payne v. Low, 1 Rus. & M. 223.

Order made upon petition, that part of a small sum of stock bequeathed to an infant, should be sold, and the proceeds applied in paying a debt incurred for necessaries on his account, and that the residue of the stock should be transferred into court, and the dividends paid to his mother towards his maintenance. Ex parte Swift, 1 Russ. & M. 375.

Order made, upon petition, that executors should be at liberty to apply certain small sums, part of the capital of the residuary share bequeathed by a father to his infant children, towards their maintenance, education, and advancement, though the shares did not vest till the children came of age. Ex parte Chambers, 1 Russ. & M. 577.

The father of infants had maintained and educated them since the death of their mother, when they became entitled to a sum of money in this court. The father petitioned for a reference to the Master, on the subject of maintenance and education of the children, and for an allowance, as well for the time past as in future; but the Court refused to make any reference to the Master, with respect to the maintenance of the infants in the time past, but made the usual reference with respect to their future maintenance out of the funds, in case the father was not himself of ability to maintain them. Simon v. Barber, 1 Tam. 22.

(D) Actions and Suits by and against.

Where a tradesman, who had purchased goods to stock his shop as a grocer, pleaded infancy to the action for goods sold, and the plaintiff replied that the goods were necessaries; it was held, upon proof in support of the replication, that the defendant supplied his family out of the shop, that the articles were necessaries; and that the evidence was sufficient to support a verdict for the plaintiff for a part of the amount of his demand. Tubbervile v. Whitehouse, 12 Price, 692.

INFERIOR COURT.

[See Requests, Court of.]

Semble, that an action in an inferior court, for a penalty of 5*l*., under a bye-law, is not an action within the 21 Jac. 1. c. 23, so as to prevent the removal of the cause to a superior court. At all events, the Court will not interfere by procedendo; but will leave the plaintiff to go on in the inferior court at his peril. Clark v. Le Crew, 7 Law J. K.B. 186, s. c. 9 B. & C. 52.

INFORMATION.

(A) In general.
(B) Where granted.
(C) Form and Evidence.
(D) Practice.

(A) In general.

An information for the recovery of penalties is not a criminal, but a panal proceeding, in the nature of a civil action. Rex v. Sidden, 9 Law J. Exch. 6.

(B) WHERE GRANTED.

The Court will grant a rule for a criminal information, on the sole testimony of a particeps-criminis (uncontradicted), where the offence is against the public interests, as bribery in the election of an alderman, who will, by virtue of his office, be a justice of peace. Rex v. Steward and others, 2 B. & Ad. 12, c. s. as Rex v. Turner, 9 Law J. K.B. 143.

(C) FORM AND EVIDENCE.

An information for harbouring goods, liable to the payment of duty, is not supported by evidence of harbouring goods which, by reason of the packages in which the goods are imported, are prohibited. Attorney General v. Key, 1 C. & J. 159, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 92.

An information on the 6 Geo. 4. c. 108. s. 35, for offering a bribe to a custom-house officer, to induce him to neglect his duty, stated the officer's name to be Thomas Dabbs; at the trial his name was proved to be Thomas Tyrrell Dabbs; but it was also proved that he was better known, and particularly as such officer, by the name of Thomas Dabbs:—Held, no variance.

An information described certain goods unshipped without payment of duties as bugles;—a question arising, whether such goods were in fact bugles or beads, it was proved, that articles of that description were known in trade as bugles—were imported and exported as such—as such paid a higher rate of duty at the custom-house on importation, and were in fact also spoken of by the defendant as such:—Held, that the averment in the information was supported. Attorney General v. Hawkes, 9 Law J. Exch. 16, s. c. 1 C. & J. 121, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 3.

In an information at the instance of the Crown, for the recovery of penalties incurred in harbouring and concealing tobacco and spirits, the tobacco and spirits were described as goods liable to the payment of duties, and imported and illegally unshipped without payment of such duties. By 6 Geo. 4. c. 107, regulating the importation of such goods, the importation of tobacco and spirits (unless in certain casks or cases) was altogether prohibited; and a jury having, by a special verdict, found the tobacco and spirits to have been harboured and concealed in casks and cases not of that description:—Held, that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, they must be taken to be prohibited goods; and, there being no counts in the declaration applicable to that offence, that the information could not be sustained. Attorney General v. Bell, 9 Law J. Exch. 12, s. c. 1 C. & J. 237.

(D) PRACTICE.

A defendant to an information may plead in person in court, Attorney General v. Carpenter, 1 C. & J. 409, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 351.

---

(A) WHERE GRANTED OR REFUSED IN GENERAL.

[See COMPANY; and Stead v. Clay, 4 Russ. 550, s. c. Dig. Law J. 269.]

A, the inventor of a medicine, employed B, a foreigner residing abroad, to manufacture it for him there, and sold it in England for his own sole profit; a label and seal, denoting that the medicine was manufactured by B and sold by A, were affixed to each of the bottles in which it was sold. The defendant imitated the labels and seals. Demurrer allowed to a bill to restrain the imitation, and for an account of the sales of the spurious labels and seals, A having no interest. Delondre v. Shaw, 2 Sim. 237.

Lands were devised to a trustee and his heirs, to the use of A for life, without impeachment of waste, with divers remainders over; and a power was given to the trustee, with the consent of the tenant for life in possession, to sell the property or any part of it, and lay out the money in the purchase of other lands, to be settled to the same uses, and in the meantime to invest it in the public funds, and, for the purposes of such sale, to revoke the original uses, and appoint new uses. A contract was entered into for the sale of the estate for 13,000*l.*, exclusive of the timber, which was to be taken at a valuation; and, it being conceived that the tenant for life without impeachment of waste was entitled to receive for his own benefit the amount of the valuation of the timber, a deed was executed, by which he, in consideration of 2,448*l.*, conveyed the timber to the purchaser, and the trustee, in consideration of 13,000*l.* conveyed the land exclusive of timber. Many years afterwards, the tenant for life, being advised that he was not entitled to the amount of the valuation of the timber, transferred to the trustee as much 3*l.* per cent. stock as 2,448*l.* produced at the time of the sale. After the death of A, the next remainder-man, though he had concurred in proceedings, in which the fund produced by the sale was treated as applicable to the purposes of the testator's will, brought a writ of formedon, and obtained judgment on the ground that the power of sale was not well executed:—Held, that a court of equity ought not to interfere by injunction, to deprive him of the benefit of that judgment. Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 3 Russ. 55.

(B) TO STAY OR RESTRAIN PROCEEDINGS.

Where the plaintiff has by tortious means, got into possession of property, pending a suit to establish his equitable title to it, the Court will not stay legal proceedings against him for the recovery of the possession. Grafton v. Griffin, 1 Russ. & M. 336.

If a cause for the administration of assets has been heard for further directions, and the executors have paid their balances into court, an injunction will be granted to restrain an action against the executors, for breaches of covenant in a lease granted to the testator, and the Master will be directed to ascertain the damages. Sutton v. Mashiter, 2 Sim. 513.

Quære—whether the proceedings of the assignee of a bond in the name of the obligee, are stayed by an injunction, which restrains only the assignee, his counsellors, and agents. Montague v. Hill, 4 Russ. 128.

(C) Extending.

The common injunction to stay proceedings at law, cannot be extended to stay trial, after an order to amend. Brown v. Reine, 3 Y. & J. 389.

(D) Dissolving.

The common injunction is not dissolved by the plaintiff obtaining an order to amend, without saving the injunction, unless the record is altered. Davies v. Davies, 2 Sim. 515.

Motion refused to dissolve an injunction, granted on affidavit and certificate, to restrain execution on a judgment obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff, the latter having obtained a judgment to a greater amount against the former. Williams v. Davies, 2 Sim. 461.

A bill was filed against two partners, for an account, and an injunction to restrain proceedings at law, commenced by them against the plaintiff, and the common injunction was obtained for want of answer. An answer having been put in, exceptions were taken, some of which were allowed. One of the partners, who was resident in England, filed a further answer, admitting the facts stated in the bill, on which the exceptions were founded; but the other partner being abroad, did not put in a further answer. The defendant, who had filed a further answer, moved to dissolve the injunction, on the ground that he had admitted the facts covered by the exceptions, and that even if his answer did not bind his partner, yet the plaintiff could not obtain from the other defendant more than the same admission of the facts charged by him, which, it was insisted, did not entitle him to an injunction. The Court refused the application, the other defendant not having answered. Prince v. Haydn, 3 Y. & J. 190.

(E) Practice.

On a motion for an injunction by a plaintiff in an interpleading suit, no affidavit is necessary, except the affidavit denying collusion. Fry v. Watson, 7 Law J. Chanc. 175.

A plaintiff cannot move ex parte for an injunction, after he has served the defendant with subpœna, and the defendant has appeared. Perry v. Weller, 3 Russ. 519.

An injunction allowed to be moved for ex parte, in a pressing case, after the defendants had entered an appearance.

In this case, counsel having been instructed to oppose the motion, although no notice had been given, the Court allowed them to be heard. Aeraman v. Bristol Dock Company, 1 Russ. & M. 321.

An injunction was prayed for in the prayer of the bill, but was omitted in the prayer of process, and on that account, a motion for an injunction was refused, but leave was given to amend. The bill was accordingly amended, and on the motion being renewed, it was objected that the application could not be repeated, until the time for answering the amended bill had expired; but the objection was overruled. Wood v. Beadell, 3 Sim. 273.

Where the obligor in a bond has obtained the common injunction to restrain the obligee from proceeding in an action which has been commenced in his name, by an assignee of the bond, the answer of the obligee cannot be read, in opposition to a motion to dissolve the injunction made by the assignee. Montague v. Hill, 4 Russ. 128.

Upon breach of an injunction, the practice is, either to move that the defendant shall show cause why he shall not stand committed, or to give notice of a motion for his committal.

Service of notice on the defendant that an injunction has been ordered, binds him. Durant v. Mann, 9 Law J. Chanc. 12.

(A) Of the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors.

(a) Attornies.

Where an attorney accepts a retainer, and there is a change of custody of the insolvent, who then retains another attorney, who prepares his papers, the first attorney, having no lien, cannot oppose the discharge of such insolvent. In re Polhill, 1 Cross. 190.

(b) Evidence of Proceedings in.

Office copies of papers are admissible in the superior courts; the original papers however are allowed o be sent upon payment of the expense of office opies. In re Walton, 1 Cress. 232.

Quære—whether copies of the proceedings in the nsolvent Debtors Court are admissible under 7 Geo. 4. c. 57. s. 76, except for the insolvent and reditors. Nicholls v. Downes, 2 M. & M. 13, s. c. C. & P. 330. [Tenterden]

The provision in the 76th section of the 7th Geo. c. 57, that a certified copy of the petition, schedule, order of adjudication, &c., "shall at all times, e admitted in all courts whatever, as sufficient evidence of the same," does not take away the right of roducing in evidence the original order of adjudication procured from the Court. Northam v. Lauche, 4 C. & P. 140. [Tindal]

The office copy of an insolvent's petition, attested y the officer of the Insolvent Debtors Court, is ufficient evidence to prove an allegation, that the etition subscribed by the insolvent was duly filed. Gould v. Hulme, 3 C. & P. 625. [Tindal]

In an action by the assignee of an insolvent ebtor, certified copies of the assignments, and the rder of the Court for the discharge of the prisoner, re sufficient to prove the title of the assignee, and hat the prisoner was discharged under the act; nd it is not necessary to prove the insolvent's petion, in order to shew that the Insolvent Court had urisdiction. Delafield v. Freeman, 8 Law J. C.P. 0, s. c. 6 Bing. 294, s. c. 3 M. & P. 704.

To make the contents of a schedule evidence gainst an insolvent debtor, semble, that some evilence of identity is necessary; and it will not be ufficient that the schedule purports to be the schelule of a person of the name of the insolvent. Nicholls v. Downes, 4 C. & P. 330, s. c. 2 M. & M. 13. Tenterden]

Semble, that certified copies of the petition and chedule, and of the order of the Court, under seal, re sufficient evidence of the discharge of the party nder the Insolvent Debtors Act. Northam v. Lauche, 8 Law J. C.P. 62, s. c. 3 M. & P. 646.

A copy of an order of the Insolvent Debtors Court, referring the matters of an insolvent's petion to be heard by the Justices at Sessions in Wales, n pursuance of the 7 Geo. 4. c. 57. s. 41, together rith a copy of the affidavit of the service of the rder upon the insolvent's creditors, affixed to it rith a pin (the latter only bearing the seal of the Court and the certificate of the proper officer), were endered in evidence under the 76th section of the tatute:—Held, that the certificate and seal on the opy of the affidavit, was a sufficient verification of oth documents. Jones v. Nicholls, 7 Law J. C.P. 67, s. c. 3 M. & P. 12.

(B) Of the Petition.

An insolvent having used different names upon ormer hearings, but having, since his last discharge, btained his baptismal register, by which he had ascertained and petitioned in his right name, such escription deemed sufficient. In re Foster, 1 Cress. 78.

(b) Amendment.

The second petition omitting to state the dismissal f the former, but stating insolvent was not discharged under it, is amendable. In re Blow, 1 Cress. 180.

The fact of an omission in the petition of a previous confinement being proved at a second hearing, the Court allowed the petition to be amended, instead of dismissing it. In re Bailey, 1 Cress. 216.

(c) Dismissal.

A collusive arrest no ground for dismissing a petition, if there be a bonâ fide debt; but where it is accompanied by a disposal of property, the Court will dismiss the petition. In re Field, 1 Cress. 236.

Upon an insolvent candidly admitting that his arrest was collusive, the Court forbore their usual practice of dismissing the petition, upon his paying the amount of the sale of his property into court. In re Hammond, 1 Cress. 214.

Petition dismissed on proof of perjury. In re Rothery, 1 Cress. 195.

Petition dismissed, upon proof of the falsity of the estate paper. In re Damen, 1 Cress. 223.

An omission of previous bankruptcy, cause of dismissal of petition. In re Blow, 1 Cress. 180.

Where a hearing is adjourned, and the insolvent having been previously declared a bankrupt, omits to appear pursuant to such adjournment, but files a new petition, without applying to dismiss the first, the Court will dismiss the second. In re Stanley, 1 Cress. 215.

(C) Of the Assignment.

The assignment of the real and personal estate and effects of an insolvent debtor, under the statute 7 Geo. 4. c. 57, passes to the assignee only what the insolvent was entitled to at law and in equity; and where an insolvent had deposited with a creditor the title deeds of an estate, as security for a debt:—Held, that the assignee of the insolvent debtor could not recover from such creditor the rent of such estate received by the latter, subsequently to the discharge of the insolvent debtor. Garry v. Sharratt, 8 Law J. K.B. 306, s. c. 10 B. & C. 716.

A voluntary payment to a creditor, by an insolvent, within three months before his imprisonment, although in discharge of a bonâ fide debt, is a fraudulent delivery of money within the 32nd section of the 7 Geo. 4. c. 57, and, consequently void. Herbert v. Wilcocks, 8 Law J. C.P. 49, s. c. 6 Bing. 203, s. c. 3 M. & P. 515.

A testator devised freeholds to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to apply the rents for the benefit of his son during his life, as they should think fit; and he declared that his son should not have power to sell, mortgage, or anticipate the said rents; after the father's death, the son took the benefit of the Insolvent Act:—Held, that the assignee of his estate was entitled, during the son's life, to the rents of the demised premises. Green v. Spicer, 8 Law J. Chanc. 105, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 395, s. c. 1 Tam. 396.

An insolvent, with a view to taking the benefit of the act, and by way of a fraudulent preference of the particular creditor, gave a warrant of attorney, under which all his goods were taken in execution and sold:—Held, that the warrant of attorney so given and acted upon operated as a "transfer" of, or "charge" upon his estate, within the 32nd section of the 7 Geo. 4. c. 57; and that the sale of the goods under the circumstances was an "assignment" of his effects within the same section. Sharpe v. Thomas, 8 Law J. C.P. 132, s. c. 6 Bing. 416, 4 M. & P. 87.

(D) Of the Assignees.

(a) Appointment.

An assignee may be appointed, prior to filing the schedule, if sufficient grounds of making away with property be shewn. In re Butt, 1 Cress. 210.

(b) Powers, Rights, and Duties.

A being in insolvent circumstances, and wishing to compound with his creditors, had two actions brought against him; A applied to B, an attorney, to defend them, which B refused, unless he was paid 20*l.* in hand. The money was paid to B, who defended the actions, the costs being more than 20*l.*; after this A took the benefit of the Insolvent Act:—Held, that the 20*l.* could not be recovered by the assignees from B, as it was not a voluntary payment. Troup v. Brooks, 4 C. & P. 320. [Littledale]

Quære—whether the assignee of an insolvent can maintain an action against an attorney, for negligence in preparing a lease for the insolvent, whereby he failed to obtain possession of the premises demised. Delafield v. Freeman, 8 Law J. C.P. 70, s. c. 6 Bing. 294, s. c. 3 M. & P. 704.

The assignee of an insolvent debtor cannot recover in an action commenced by him as assignee before the assignment executed to him, though it is executed before the trial, but not before the declaration. Laurence v. Miller, 2 M. & M. 97. [Patteson]

Where a transaction between an insolvent and his creditor (before the imprisonment of the former,) is void against the assignees, under the 7 Geo. 4. c. 57. s. 32, the latter may maintain trover against the creditor for the value of the property in question; although the title of the assignee, taken upon the strict words of the 11th section of that act, would not begin until after the imprisonment. Sowerby v. Wright, 8 Law J. K.B. 312.

The 16th section of the Insolvent Debtors Act, 7 Geo. 4. c. 57, by which it is provided that "the provisional assignee may sue in his own name, if the Court shall so order, for the recovering, &c. the estate, &c. of the insolvent," is only affirmative of the wrong-side right to sue conferred upon the provisional assignee by the assignment. Dance v. Wright, 8 Law J. C.P. 153, s. c. 6 Bing. 486, s. c. 4 M. & P. 201.

The defendant sued out a fi. fa. on the 30th of June, upon a judgment signed on that day upon a warrant of attorney given by J S. On the 1st of July, the goods of J S were taken in execution, and sold on the 18th; the defendant, who was also the landlord of the premises on which the goods were taken, retaining a sum of 130*l.* for a year's rent, beyond the amount of the judgment debt. J S surrendered himself to prison, at the suit of another creditor, on the 14th of June; and on the 19th of July filed his petition in the Insolvent Debtors Court:—Held, that, under the 34th section of the 7 Geo. 4. c. 57, the assignees of J S were entitled to recover the sum so retained in an action for money had and received—the statute 8 Anne, c. 14. s. 1. contemplating the case of an adverse execution, not an execution at the suit of the landlord himself. Taylor v. Lanyon, 8 Law J. C.P. 180, s. c. 6 Bing. 536, s. c. 4 M. & P. 316.

The provisional assignee of the Insolvent Debtors Court, is entitled to his costs from the mortgagee in a suit for foreclosure; and the mortgagee will be then allowed to add them to the principal and interest due upon the security. Peake v. Gibbs, 9 Law J. Chanc. 168.

Assignees of an insolvent mortgagor are not entitled to the costs of a suit for foreclosure, though they by their answer disclaim, and say that if they had been applied to, they would have released the equity of redemption. Collins v. Shirley, 1 Russ. & M. 638.

The equity of redemption of a leasehold for years, with a covenant for perpetual renewal, is not an interest in real estate within the meaning of the 53 Geo. 3. c. 102. s. 19.

The assignee of an insolvent is not bound, under that section, to dispose of such an equity of redemption by public auction. Waldron v. Howell, 3 Russ. 376.

(E) Of the Schedule.

Question of a mis-description of residence, as to whether a casual visit to a friend constituted the last place of abode, and limit of time of residence there. The Court divided in opinion. In re O'Kerfe, 1 Cress. 252.

If an insolvent has carried on business alone, but at the same time trades under the fictitious firm of A B & Co., he is bound so to describe and advertise himself. In re Blondell, 1 Cress. 254.

Debts barred by the Statute of Limitations must be inserted in the schedule. In re Longbottom, 1 Cress. 181.

A party who has given in a schedule on oath, of all his debts and credits to the Insolvent Debtors Court, cannot afterwards claim a debt not there stated. Nicholls v. Downes, 2 M. & M. 13, s. c. 4 C. & P. 330. [Tenterden]

An old schedule, upon which the petition was dismissed, cannot be used in evidence for the purpose of contrasting the same with the present schedule. In re Foster, 1 Cress. 179.

(F) Of the Hearing.

(a) Order for.

No order for hearing before a commissioner on the circuit, can be issued later than the 28th day before the day notified in the Gazette for the attendance of the commissioner. In re Plenderleath, 1 Cress. 179.

Order for hearing dismissed, materially differs from cases requiring a re-advertisement, as in the latter case either party may compel the other to proceed; in the former not. In re Young, 1 Cress. 225.

(b) Notice of.

The description of an insolvent in the advertisement being merely that of an "agent":—Held, to be insufficient. In re Gibbons, 244.

Re-advertisement in consequence of a misnomer, notwithstanding the error originated in the Gazette Office. In re Watt, 1 Cress. 177.

The omission of a creditor's name in the schedule, f verified by affidavit, is ground sufficient for the Court to order an adjournment, for the purpose of assertion of such creditor, and of serving him with notice of hearing. In re Armsby, 1 Cress. 248.

(c) Examination.

An insolvent may be examined from the interrogatories taken before the commissioners of bankrupts. In re Barrett, 1 Cress. 192.

(G) Opposition.

(a) Who may oppose.

The hearing of an insolvent having been adjourned for the purpose of enabling him to amend his description, at which hearing only one creditor appeared to oppose, a question arose at the second hearing, as to the admissibility of two new opposing creditors, who had not appeared to oppose at the first hearing. The Court, upon a conference, were equally divided, and no judgment was given in respect of the complaints of the two new opposing creditors. It seemed, however, that if the Court had dismissed the order for hearing, instead of adjourning the case for re-advertisement, that the two creditors would have been entitled to fresh notices, and might have opposed at the second hearing, notwithstanding they had not appeared to oppose at the first. In re Richards, 1 Cress. 236.

Fraudulent disposal of property, after an offer to compromise. In re Martin, 1 Cress. 212.

An insolvent having agreed to assign property to a relation, omits to execute the assignment for some months, deferring it until his affairs are in a state of embarrassment: the execution of such assignment held to be undue preference. In re Berry, 1 Cress. 116.

If a debt is contracted bonâ fide in the first instance, and it is afterwards discovered that a fraud was used in the payment of such debt:—Held, that no remand can be given for such fraud. In re Rickerby, 1 Cress. 185.

If an insolvent, at the time of contracting his opposing creditor's debt, did so without any fraudulent intent, and it appearing by the subsequent act of the insolvent that his intentions were founded on good faith, as far as regarded a promise made to those opposing creditors, the Court will not give an adverse judgment; but, it being proved that his having appropriated a sum of money to his own use, under 20*l.*, the discretionary clause of the act of parliament will be brought into operation. In re Bate, 1 Cress. 248.

No fraud being intended at the time a contract is made, the future disposal of the property passed by such contract, no ground for a remand under the act of parliament. In re Manton, 1 Cress. 253.

Where a party has been defrauded by an insolvent, and afterwards accepts payment of part of the debt incurred by such fraud, that acceptance will act as a waiver of the fraud. In re Gibbons, 1 Cress. 144.

Where debts are contracted without reasonable or probable expectation of payment, the Court require the evidence of the opposing creditor, complaining of the mode of such debts being contracted. In re Brewster, 1 Cress. 192.

(d) Malicious Injury.

In the absence of proof of a malicious injury in an action of tort, the Court will not pronounce an adverse judgment, non obstante the debt being founded on a verdict recovered for the plaintiff in the courts above. In re Pratt, 1 Cress. 229.

The only debt in the schedule being the amount of a verdict for trespass committed by the insolvent, who had been once before discharged from a debt of the same nature at the suit of the same party, and in both of which actions he has put his creditor to an unnecessary expense, by pleading the general issue:—Held, that after the right of the creditor had once before been decided, such plea was frivolous and vexatious. Consent of three-fourths of the creditors required. In re Harris, 1 Cress. 191.

In an action against the insolvent, as acceptor of a bill of exchange, where the general issue was pleaded, and no defence was offered at the trial, the verdict was for the plaintiff. Upon his hearing under the act, the schedule stated the advance of the money for which the bills were given; but no evidence being offered as to the admission of the debt before the action brought:—Held, the opposition was not supported for want of such admission. In re Foster, 1 Cress. 178.

If an insolvent defends an action for the false warranty of goods, and fails in such defence, opposition unavailable, under the 49th section. In re Everard, 1 Cress. 195.

Insolvent not liable to be remanded upon the warranty of a horse which was found to be vicious, but of which he was not previously aware. In re Murrell, 1 Cress. 202.

(H) Prior Insolvency or Bankruptcy.

In establishing a locus standi under the 64th section, if it appears that the insolvent has been dealing in accommodation bills, his case will be adjourned, to obtain the consent of his creditors. In re Hickman, 1 Cress. 209.

The consent of creditors required, where insolvent accepted accommodation bills, after his discharge upon a former petition filed within five years of his present application. In re Cadogan, 1 Cress. 224.

Consent of creditors required, where the insolvent accepts accommodation bills, within five years of his former discharge. In re Williams, 1 Cress. 228.

The consent of three-fourths of the creditors requisite, where an uncertificated bankrupt renews old debts contained in his former schedule, he having been discharged from such debts within five years. In re Levi, 1 Cress. 225.

If an insolvent, who is an uncertificated bankrupt, renews a debt contracted prior to such bankruptcy, upon his hearing under the Insolvent Act, such renewal will prevent his discharge, without the consent of three-fourths of his creditors, under the 64th section. In re Haslewood, 1 Cress. 197.

The renewal of a debt after discharge, if procured by a threat of prolonged imprisonment, will not be a ground of opposition, so as to require an insolvent to obtain the consent of three-fourths of his creditors. In re Venzano, 1 Cress. 182.

(I) Removal of Prisoners.

Insolvent removed at the expense of creditors, non obstante no affidavits filed in support of application. In re Aglen, 1 Cress. 205.

Insolvents may be removed at the expense of a creditor, non obstante no opposition having been entered in London. In re Wood, 1 Cress. 196.

On application to remove an insolvent into the country for hearing, if the counsel for the opposing creditor has affidavits in support of his application, he is not bound to put them in to be read, as the contents might enable the insolvent to baffle his creditors. In re Ralph, 1 Cress. 233.

Discharge adjudicated, where an insolvent was removed by habeas corpus. Quære, if removal contested, could insolvent avail himself of his discharge? In re Burder, 1 Cress. 215.

(K) Discharge.

[Murray v. Reeves, 2 M. & R. 423, Dig. Law J. 282.]

The tap-room of Kingston town prison, held to be a distinct part of the prison; and an objection to an insolvent's discharge being founded upon his having frequented the tap-room after filing his petition, was held to be good, under the 12th section of the act of parliament. In re Walter, 1 Cress. 221.

(b) Rights, Privileges, and Liabilities, after.

A discharge under the 53 Geo. 3. c. 102, as well as under the 7 Geo. 4. c. 57, relieves the insolvent from a judgment on a warrant of attorney to replace stock at a future day. Sammon v. Miller, 7 Law J. K.B. 337, s. c. 9 B. & C. 770, s. c. 4 M. & R. 551.

Quære—whether an insolvent debtor, who has suffered judgment by default, after he has duly obtained his discharge under the 7 Geo. 4. c. 57, (inserting the debt in his schedule,) is entitled to be relieved from an execution, upon a summary application to the Court. Cook v. Townsend, 9 Law J. C.P. 77, s. c. 5 M. & P. 12.

In replevin, interlocutory judgment was signed against the defendant for want of an avowry. The defendant was afterwards arrested by another creditor, and obtained his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act. After the discharge, the plaintiff executed a writ of inquiry, and issued a fi. fa. for the amount of damages and costs. The Court refused to set aside the fi. fa. for irregularity, holding that the judgment was not such an ascertained debt, at the time of the imprisonment, as to be affected by the insolvent's discharge. Wilmer v. White, 8 Law J. C.P. 69, s. c. 6 Bing. 291, s. c. 3 M. & P. 671.

Where a person has applied for relief under the Insolvent Act, 7 Geo. 4. c. 57, and the Court has made an order that he shall be discharged from his debts so soon as he shall have remained in custody at the suit of one of his creditors for such a time, to be computed from the date of filing his petition,—such discharge is conditional only; and the condition must be strictly fulfilled.

In such a case, before the prescribed term of imprisonment was over, the debtor compromised with his detaining creditor, and was discharged out of custody:—Held, that under these circumstances his discharge under the Insolvent Act was of no avail; and that, being subsequently arrested for a debt which was duly inserted in his schedule, he was not entitled to be discharged; although he had, on the whole, been in custody more than the prescribed time. Ex parte White, 9 Law J. K.B. 97.

A discharged insolvent debtor cannot maintain trespass for breaking and entering the premises in which he resided before his render to prison and assignment of his property, without proving a clear constructive possession in him with the assent of his assignees. Topham v. Dent, 8 Law J. C.P. 172, s. c. 6 Bing. 515, s. c. 4 M. & P. 264.

A, an insolvent debtor, in his schedule, stated that he had given his acceptance to B, who was the drawer of the bill, but A did not mention the name of the indorsee in his schedule:—Held, that if he did not know the bill to have been indorsed, this would be a bar to an action by the indorsee; but that if the insolvent had been told that the bill was in the hands of the indorsee, the insolvent would be still liable, although the jury might think he had forgotten what he had been told, and that his attorney had made inquiries as to who held the bill, with a view of putting such holder's name into the insolvent's schedule. Lewis v. Mason, 4 C. & P. 322. [Littledale]

[And see ante, A b.]

In an action against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, who pleaded his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act, the defendant having misdescribed the holder in his schedule, and there being some evidence tending to shew that he knew the holder at the time:—Held, that the true question for the jury was, whether he did so know the holder. Levy v. Dolbell, 2 M. & M. 202. [Tenterden]

A replication to a plea of discharge under the Insolvent Act, "that the defendant was not duly discharged," puts the discharge only in issue; the petition therefore need not be given in evidence. Andrew v. Pledger, 2 M. & M. 508, s. c. 4 C. & P. 274. [Tindal]

(A) Parties to the Contract.

A ship-owner may effect an insurance on his own goods in his own ship, and by the name of freight, that which would, properly speaking, be freight if he carried the goods of other persons.

But to warrant an insurance of freight on the goods of another, there must be an actual binding contract between the owner of the goods and the assured, as to the freight. Flint v. Flemyng, 8 Law J. K.B. 350, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 45.

(B) Interest.

The mortgagee of a ship insured in two separate offices, without communicating to one that he had assured at another. In one, he insured for 2,000*l.*, and another for 1,700*l.* In the policy in each, the value of the ship was stated to be 3,000*l.* The ship was lost; and the insured received the amount of each policy from each office. The fact of the double insurance being discovered, one of the offices brought an action against the assured, to recover back its proportion of the excess of 700*l.* over the specified value in each policy. The defence was, that the defendant insured as well for the interest of the mortgagor as his own; that, in fact, the ship was of the value of 4,000*l.*, and so he had not received any excess:—Held, (especially with reference to the Registry Act, 6 Geo. 4. c. 110. s. 45,) that whether the defendant assured as well for the interest of the mortgagor as his own, was a question properly left to the jury. Irving v. Richardson, 9 Law J. K.B. 225, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 193.

(C) Voyage.

Where a British registered ship had sailed with a crew bearing the sufficient proportion of British subjects, according to the 6 Geo. 4. c. 109. s. 12; but that proportion became reduced by deaths in the course of her voyage; and, after a fair and reasonable endeavour, without success, to obtain the requisite supply to keep up the proportion, she sailed with a number of foreigners to complete her crew, and was lost in her voyage home:—Held, that the voyage was not illegal, according to the above act, although no certificate had been procured, nor any statement laid before the proper authorities at home, according to section 19. Suart v. Powell, 8 Law J. K.B. 391, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 266.

An insurance effected upon a ship for a voyage to a port which is in a state of blockade at the time of effecting the insurance, is not illegal, unless it appear that there is an intention to violate the blockade. The voyage may be legally made, in expectation that the blockade may have been taken off by the time of the ship's arrival; and inquiry for this purpose may be lawfully made at some port of the blockading country. Harratt v. Wise, 7 Law J. K.B. 309, s. c. 9 B. & C. 712, s. c. 4 M. & R. 521.

Policy of insurance on goods by all or either of four ships named, at and from Singapore, Penang, Malacca, and Batavia, all or any, to the ship's port of discharge in Great Britain, or to any port in the united Netherlands, or Altona, or Hamburgh, with leave to touch, stay, and trade at any port or place in the East Indies, Persia, or elsewhere beyond or on this side of the Cape of Good Hope, at all times and places, until safely arrived; beginning the adventure upon the goods from the loading as above; with leave to call at any port in Great Britain to wait for orders; with liberty also to proceed, touch, and stay at any ports or places whatsoever, particularly Singapore, Penang, Malacca, and Batavia, Cape of Good Hope, and St. Helena, without being deemed any deviation.

The ship (one of the four) being at Batavia, goods were loaded by the assured to be taken to Antwerp. Thence she went to Sourabaya, a port in the island of Java, in the East Indies, and there loaded other goods also for Antwerp. She returned from Sourabaya to Batavia, and sailed thence for Antwerp.

Sourabaya is not in the direct course from Batavia, Singapore, Penang, or Malacca, to Europe, nor in the direct course from any one to any other of the four. It is distant four hundred miles from Batavia eastward. Any place in Persia would be more than one thousand miles out of the course from either of those four places to Europe:—Held, that there had been no deviation; and that the goods taken on board at Sourabaya were covered by the policy. Hunter v. Leathley, 8 Law J. K.B. 274, s. c. 10 B. & C. 858; s. c. in error, 9 Law J. Exch. 118, s. c. 1 C. & J. 423, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 355, s. c. 5 M. & P. 457, s. c. 7 Bing. 517.

(D) Policy.

[See Stamp.]

Insurance on a vessel "at and from Leith to Shetland, and from thence to Barcelona, and at and from thence, and two other ports in Spain, to a port in Great Britain." The vessel was lost while loading at Saloe; and the question was, whether Saloe was a port within the meaning of the policy. The affirmative held by the Courts below, and the assured declared entitled to recover. Affirmed by the House of Lords. Sea Insurance Company v. Gavin, 2 Dow. & C. A.C. 129.

Policy of insurance "at and from all or any of the Windward and Leeward Islands to London, of the freight from the time that any part of the cargo should be put on board." Quære, whether goods put on board before the ship's arrival at the Leeward or Windward Islands are protected by the policy. Barnes v. Akers, Pen. A.C. 22. [Kenyon]

A homeward policy on freight at and from A, attaches when the ship is at A in a condition to begin to take her homeward cargo. Williamson v. Innes, 2 M. & M. 88. [Lyndhurst]

On a policy of insurance on specie from the river Plate to Canton and back, and on the returns thereof in merchandize,—the assured chartered a vessel from Buenos Ayres to Canton and back; and they were to pay for the voyage a sum, in China, necessary for port charges and incidental expenses, not exceeding 2,000 dollars, and to pay the balance, up to 10,000 dollars, after the vessel's return to Buenos Ayres. The specie was shipped at Buenos Ayres, and arrived at Canton, where the port charges and incidental expenses were paid. The ship was lost on her return. The underwriters had no notice of the terms of the charterparty. The policy was an open policy:—Held, that the assured were not entitled to treat the port charges, &c. at Canton as part of the value of the goods shipped there. Winter v. Haldimand, 9 Law J. K.B. 313, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 649.

A and Co., carrying on business in England as an insurance company, had an office and an agent in Scotland, with whom C D, &c., for themselves and others, as joint-owners of a vessel, made an insurance, receiving from the agent a memorandum in general terms, importing, without exception of any sea risks, that the vessel was insured, and that a policy would be prepared and sent to be delivered to the assured, or their order, "on the third Monday in the ensuing month, or on any subsequent day." Notice of the effecting of the insurance was transmitted by the Scotch agent to the principals in London, who, two months after the date of the memorandum, transmitted to the agent a policy of insurance, containing a clause by which the operation of the policy was to be suspended while the vessel should be at sea. This policy was not demanded by, nor delivered, nor shewn to the assured; who, at the end of the year, renewed their policy by the medium of the agent in Scotland, but by a memorandum of renewal, signed by the agent in England, and referring to a specific policy, which, although it was lying at the agent's office, was not then demanded by, nor delivered or shewn to the assured. Soon after this renewal of the policy, the ship was lost, at sea, by fire. Under these circumstances, a judgment of the Court of Session, reserving a sentence of the Judge-Admiral, was affirmed on appeal, but on distinct grounds, the House of Lords being of opinion, that the memorandum was the contract between the parties, and therefore properly admitted in evidence, upon the trial of an issue directed before the Jury Court; that the stat. 6 Geo. 4. c. 18, so far as relates to insurance companies, did not extend to Scotland; that a contract made under the circumstances above stated, was a Scotch contract; and that the principals and their agents were properly included in the same action. Pattison v. Mills, 2 Bligh, N.S. 519, s. c. 1 Dow. & C. A.C. 342.

(E) Warranties.

A warranty to sail on or before a particular day, is not fulfilled if the ship does not completely unmoor at that day, though she then has her cargo and passengers on board, and is quite ready to sail, and is only prevented doing so by stress of weather. Nelson v. Salvador, 1 M. & M. 309. [Tenterden]

(F) Representations and Concealment.

A misrepresentation used by the assured to the assurer, as to a cargo, will not avoid the policy, unless the misrepresentation be of a material fact, likely to affect the risk. Flinn v. Headlam, 7 Law J. K.B. 307, s. c. 9 B. & C. 693, s. c. 1 M. & M. 367.

Whether a proposed assurance be upon shipping, or lives, or against fire, it is the duty of the assured to communicate every material fact necessary to be known to the assurer.

And if any such fact be known and not communicated, the policy will be void, whether the assured did or did not believe it to be material.

Whether the question of materiality be a question of law or fact, or mixed—quære.

In a case where directions had been given to insure a ship in case she did not arrive within thirty days after the receipt of the letter, and accordingly, after the expiration of the time, a policy was effected—no communication being made of this direction, or when the letter had arrived, and, a day before the effecting of the policy, a ship had arrived, by which the underwriters might suppose the direction to insure had come,—Lord Tenterden admitted the evidence of a director of the Royal Exchange Assurance upon the question whether, in his judgment, the fact of the date of the arrival of the letter was material to be communicated. He said, it was. The jury found a verdict in favour of the underwriters—The Court held the evidence to be properly received; and observed, that if the question was purely one of law, they were of opinion that the fact was material, and that the not communicating it avoided the policy. Richards v. Murdock, 8 Law J. K.B. 210, s. c. 10 B. & C. 527.

In general, it is not necessary that the assured should communicate the time of sailing; yet, if it be such as to make the ship a missing ship, then it becomes a material fact, and should be communicated.

It is not necessary, to defeat an action on a policy of insurance on a ship, on the ground of concealment of material facts, that fraud should be made out; but it is enough if the information be withheld, although the party withholding may only have erred in judgment. Elton v. Larkins, 5 C. & P. 86. [Bosanquet]

(G) Loss.

By the articles of a treaty between Great Britain and Portugal, a full reciprocal liberty of commerce and navigation was given as to all goods, except articles the property of enemies of either power, or contraband of war. The next article specified certain particulars, which were to be considered as contraband or prohibited. A previous article gave to the Portuguese government the right of pre-emption as to articles of military and naval stores imported into their dominions, and which they might be desirous of taking for their own use:—Held, that the exception as to contraband applied only to the time of war.

Where arms and ammunition were exported openly, and described in the manifest; and seized by the government of the country of intended importation, before they were landed; and the information which led to the seizure had been given by the agent of the consignor, who at the time acted bonâ fide for the benefit of the parties:—Held, that the underwriter was liable, although the landing had been thus prevented, and the seizure accelerated, by the agent of the consignor. Wilbraham v. Wormsley, 8 Law J. K.B. 254.

When a ship sails on a voyage from this country, and after she has sailed notice is given by the Gazette, that the port for which she is destined is in a state of blockade, the question, whether the captain received intimation of the blockade, is (for the purposes of insurance) a question of fact for the jury, taking into consideration all the circumstances of time, place, and opportunity. Hewett v. Wise, 7 Law J. K.B. 309, s. c. 9 B. & C. 712, s. c. 4 M. & R. 561.

A blockading squadron may lawfully lie at any distance convenient for shutting up the port blockaded, provided it does not obstruct any other; and a ship will be considered as guilty of a wilful breach of the blockade which actually comes within reach of capture by the squadron, if the circumstances were such that a prudent man would have inquired whether that were the blockading squadron, although the captain were actually ignorant of its being so, not having inquired. Naylor v. Taylor, 2 M. & M. 205. [Tenterden]

What is a stranding within the meaning of a policy of insurance. Burnet v. Kensington, Pea. A.C. 71. [Kenyon]

On a policy on freight, the ship having actually carried full freight, though not that intended for her, the owners cannot recover for the delay and expense as a partial loss. Brocklebank v. Sugrue, 2 M. & M. 102. [Tenterden]

Where, by means within the reach of the master, a ship can be so treated as to retain the character of a ship, he cannot by selling her, even bonâ fide, convert the average into a total loss; but the underwriters are entitled to have those means used on their account. Gardner v. Salvador, 2 M. & M. 116. [Bayley]

A ship, being wrecked, was sold by the owner and master, and soon afterwards got off by the purchaser, and repaired, though at a great expense. The owner cannot treat this as a total loss, unless the sale at the time, in the exercise of a sound judgment, appeared most beneficial for all parties. If the ship was likely to be repairable, so as to come to England with any cargo, so as upon her arrival to be worth the sum laid out on her, it cannot be treated as a total loss, though she cannot be made fit to carry the cargo originally intended for her. Semble—That the law would be the same if she could only return in ballast. The loss of the voyage cannot make a constructive loss of the ship, on a policy on the ship only. Doyle v. Dallas, 2 M. & M. 48. [Tenterden]

Where a ship is left by the crew under a fair and reasonable apprehension of her sinking, the right of the assured to recover for a total loss in respect of the goods will not be affected by the circumstance of her afterwards being taken in charge and saved by the crew of another vessel.

Where, under such circumstances, the goods are of a perishable nature, and cannot be carried to their place of destination except at an expense greater than their value, the circumstance of the goods being thus saved in specie does not deprive the assured of their right to recover as for a total loss. Parry v. Aberdein, 7 Law J. K.B. 260, s. c. 9 B. & C. 411, s. c. 4 M. & R. 343.

Where a ship is insured upon a policy in which her value is stated and agreed upon, and the assured become entitled to recover as for a total loss, they are entitled to recover the full amount mentioned in the policy, although it be proved that, in point of fact, she was not worth so much. Allan v. Sugrue, 7 Law J. K.B. 53, s. c. 8 B. & C. 561, s. c. 3 M. & R. 9.

(H) Abandonment.

Where an offer of abandonment is made upon a supposition of certain facts existing at that time; but, before action brought, it be known that those facts did not exist at that time, the assured cannot rely upon those supposed facts to justify his offer of abandonment.

Accordingly, a ship had been captured, and upon the intelligence arriving the assured offered to abandon; but in the interim the ship had been rescued by the crew, and, at the time when the offer of abandonment was made, was upon her voyage back, and she actually arrived back with the cargo. After her arrival back, the assured brought an action as for a total loss:—Held, that they were not entitled to recover. Hanatt v. Wise, 7 Law J. K.B. 309, s. c. 9 B. & C. 712, s. c. 4 M. & R. 521.

(I) Adjustment.

An adjustment of a policy does not admit the loss. Garron v. Galbraith, Pea. A.C. 37. [Kenyon]

The production, by the assured, of a policy of insurance, with an adjustment on it, and the name of the defendant struck off the policy itself, does not prove the payment of the sum so adjusted. Adams v. Sanders, 2 M. & M. 373, s. c. 4 C. & P. 25. [Tenterden]

(K) Return of Premium.

By the terms of a policy of insurance, it was provided that there should be a proportionate return of premium, "for every uncommenced month, if the ship should be sold, or laid up:"—Held, that the words "laid up," thus connected with the word "sold," meant a permanent laying up, and not one which took place merely for the purpose of repairing the ship. Hunter v. Wright, 8 Law J. K.B. 259, s. c. 10 B. & C. 714.

(L) Bottomry and Respondentia.

The master of a vessel having borrowed money at a foreign port for her repair, gave a bond, obliging himself, his heirs, &c., and the ship (whether she arrived or not), to the repayment of the money advanced, with 12*l.* per cent. bottomry premium, eight days after his arrival in London. The obligees effected an insurance on their interest, describing it in the policy as an insurance on bottomry:—Held, that this was a fatal misdescription. Simonds v. Hodgson, 7 Law J. C.P. 239, s. c. 6 Bing. 114, s. c. 3 M. & P. 385.

The Court of Admiralty has an undoubted jurisdiction over bottomry bonds, which are founded upon sea risks, and defeasible by the destruction of the ship in the course of her voyage; but the Court, inclining that a bond, absolute, and without dependence on the accidents of the voyage, was not subject to its cognisance,—dismissed a suit on such bond; the more willingly as questions of mercantile practice were involved, more fit to be decided by a reference to merchants.

The Court directed a search for precedents upon the question, whether a bond professing to be a bottomry bond, but excluding maritime risk, is subject to the Admiralty jurisdiction. Five precedents of such bonds, but no judicial decisions on the point, being found,—the Court, after directing an argument, decided that the interest reserved was maritime interest, and that therefore, ex concessis, the bond excluding sea risk was void. Atlas, 2 Hagg. 48, 65.

Where a bottomry bond is admitted to be drawn in legal form, and entitled to payment, the parties are bound by the terms of the agreement; and the Court will not refer the matter to the registrar and merchants to make such a deduction on account of the rate of exchange as is made in ordinary cases of mercantile negotiation. Jane Vilet, 2 Hag. 92.

The Court declined to pronounce forfeited a bond given for the safe return of a vessel to a particular port of this kingdom, the vessel having been carried in distress into another port, and there arrested in suits of salvage and of wages,—holding, that while the vessel was within the jurisdiction of the Court, safe and unsold, the application was premature.

On the valuation of the ship being impeached, a new appraisement, to be made at the expense of the party applying, permitted.

Quere, whether bonds should not be limited "to the safe return to this country." Margaret, 2 Hag. 275.

In debt on a bond, purporting to be for a loan on respondentia on an East India ship, to which two sets of special pleas were pleaded, one set alleging usury, and the other, illegality under the statute 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. s. 5, it was left to the jury to say whether it was a bonâ fide transaction on respondentia, or a loan on usury:—Held, on motion for a new trial, the jury having found for the plaintiff, that the question was sufficiently left to the jury, and that it was not necessary, notwithstanding the provisions of the 19 Geo. 2, to leave it as a distinct question, for them to say whether the money was or was not lent to a person who had no interest in or goods on board the vessel. Semble, that pleas of illegality under the above statute should contain an allegation, that the money borrowed was not intended to be laid out in the purchase of goods to be put on board the vessel. Wynne v. Crosthwaite, 4 C. & P. 178. [Tenterden]

(M) Insurance on Lives.

A father, merely as such, has not an insurable interest in the life of his son, within the meaning of the 14 Geo. 3. c. 48. Halford v. Kymer, 8 Law J. K.B. 311, s.c. 10 B. & C. 724.

A wife making an insurance on her husband's life, need not prove that she was interested therein. Reed v. Royal Exchange Assurance Company, Peake A.C. 70. [Kenyon]

The vendor of a policy of insurance, not professing to sell any interest which he may have in the life insured, is not bound to make any communication on the subject of such interest; and if his interest has ceased since the policy was effected, and the purchaser of the policy, without making any inquiry, complete the purchase, he cannot afterwards recover back his purchase-money, on the ground that, the vendor having no interest in the life, the insurance office would not be bound to pay the money. Barber v. Morris, 9 Law J. K.B. 179.

A insured his life, and afterwards assigned the policy to B, for a nominal consideration. B's executors then sold and assigned the policy to D, for valuable consideration; and then D's executors sell it to E:—Held, that they could make a good title to the policy, and that E was bound to complete his purchase. Ashley v. Ashley, 3 Sim. 149.

Whether a proposed assurance be upon shipping, or lives, or against fire, it is the duty of the assured to communicate every material fact necessary to be known to the assurer. And if any such fact is known and not communicated, the policy will be void, although the assured did not, at the time, believe it to be material. Von Lindenau v. Desborough, 7 Law J. K.B. 42, s.c. 8 B.&C. 586, s.c. 3 M.&R. 43.

The plaintiff being about to effect an insurance on the life of one H, and being applied to by the agent of the insurance office for information as to the state of health, &c. of H, said he knew nothing of him, but directed the agent to get the necessary information wherever he could. The agent accordingly applied to the life, who made a false representation as to the medical man who usually attended him:—Held, that the plaintiff was bound by the misrepresentation of the life, though made without his knowledge; and that the policy was void. Earnes v. Desborough, 7 Law J. C.P. 123, s.c. 5 Bing. 503, s.c. 3 M. & P. 190.

H F assures his life in January 1815, and pays premiums regularly till 1824. In June 1815, H F commits a felony, of which he is convicted in October 1824, and for which he is executed in November of that year. Bill filed in 1825, by the representatives of H F, claiming under him and in his right, for payment of the sum alleged to be due on the insurance, and decree by Master of the Rolls in favour of the representatives; but the judgment reversed by the Lords, on the ground, that by the general policy of the law the insurance became void, as to those claiming under and in right of H F, in consequence of the death being occasioned by his own criminal act. Amicable Assurance Society v. Bolland, 2 Dow. & C. A.C. 1, s.c. 4 Bligh, n.s. 194; overruling 3 Russ. 315.

(N) Insurance against Fire.

A policy of insurance against fire provided, that if there should appear any fraud in the claim made, or false swearing in support thereof, the assured should lose all benefit under such policy. The assured having sustained a loss, made a claim for 1,085*l*. The jury having found for the plaintiff for 500*l*., the Court directed a new trial, which had been moved for on the ground, that it amounted to an affirmation of fraud in making a claim to the larger amount. Levy v. Baillie, 9 Law J. C.P. 108, s.c. 7 Bing. 349, s.c. 5 M. & P. 208.

(O) Insurance Broker.

An insurance broker who has effected policies is, in general, entitled to recover from the assured the amount of the premiums; although, in point of fact, he may not have paid them to the assurer. The admission in the policy of the receipt of the premium by the assurer, is sufficient to protect the assured.

This general rule is not altered by the circumstance of the insurance broker having entered into a covenant with the assurer to pay the premiums. And in such a case the assignees of the bankrupt broker were held to be entitled to recover from the assured the amount of premiums which, as between the assurer and the assured, would in point of law be considered as paid; although, in fact, the broker had not paid them. Power v. Butcher, 8 Law J. K.B. 217, s.c. 10 B. & C. 329.

Where an underwriter settles a loss with the broker of the assured, by setting off the amount he has to pay, against premiums in other matters due from the broker to himself, such settlement is not a general a payment to the principal.

To make such settlement equivalent to payment to the principal, it must be shewn, either that he have express authority for such a mode of payment, or that, from the course of dealing in business, it must be necessarily implied.

The course of dealing at Lloyd's in such cases, is not binding on persons who are not in the habit of transacting such business there.

Where the underwriter had a general account with the broker, he is not entitled to apply, against the demand of the principal, sums paid in cash on the general account, after the adjustment of the figures with the broker. The payment, to bind the principal, must be specifically on his account.

The striking off the policy the name of the underwriter, by the broker, under the circumstances mentioned above,—held, not to discharge him from liability to the principal, the assured. Bartlett v. Southland, 8 Law J. K.B. 164, s. c. 10 B. & C. 760.

The underwriter cannot charge against the assured, as payments, money settled in account between the broker and himself for premiums due from the broker to the underwriter on account of other assurances; notwithstanding the usage at Lloyd's; unless it be shewn that the assured was aware of and acquiesced in that usage.

But where an underwriter settled a loss with a broker "to be paid in a month," and paid him before the month was out:—Held, that this was a good payment against the assured. Scott v. Irving, 9 Law J. K.B. 89, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 605.

(P) Actions.

Whether underwriters at Lloyd's must be taken, under all circumstances, with reference to insurances, to be cognizant of the contents of the foreign lists lied in the reading-room there—quere. Elton v. Larkins, 5 C. & P. 86. [Bosanquet]

In an action on a policy of insurance, the broker through whom the policy was effected is a competent witness for the assured; although he has a lien upon the policy for premiums paid. Hunter v. Leathley, 8 Law J. K.B. 201, s. c. 10 B. & C. 858.

A memorandum indorsed on a ship's policy of insurance, for a change of voyage, was signed by an agent of the insurance company. It was proved that the agent had signed similar memorandums on many other policies, and that his habit was to do so, and advise the company of it; though, when a new policy was required, he always sent the proposals to the company:—Held, that this was sufficient proof of the agent's authority to sign such memorandums; and that the other policies on which such memorandums had been signed need not be produced. Brocksbank v. Sugrue, 5 C. & P. 21. [Tenterden]

On a policy from London to Preston, the jury found, that the captain was driven by stress of weather to Liverpool. It appeared, however, that there was a bill of lading for Liverpool; and a printed bill was produced, directing an application for freight or passage to Down, agent for the Liverpool traders:—Held, that these documents were sufficient evidence of deviation to send the cause to another jury. Catterall v. Taylor, 9 Law J. C.P. 205.

Lloyd's List is evidence against the assured, if it be shewn that the broker had read it before the policy was effected. A ship stayed at a particular port for a period of one hundred and nine days, and whether this was an unreasonable time, was held to be a question of fact for the jury. Bain v. Case, 3 C. & P. 496. [Tenterden]

If a policy of insurance be produced by the agent of the plaintiff, through whom it was effected, and the defendant's name be struck out, and have written against it, "adjusted the general and particular averages at 30*l.* 9*s.* per cent.;" this is proof that the policy has been adjusted; but not that it has been satisfied: but the plaintiff will not be allowed to go into evidence to shew that some of the sums allowed at the time of the adjustment were too small. If the plaintiff could shew that the loss was settled without his authority, or perhaps if he could shew that some sum was entirely omitted, he might go beyond the amount of the adjustment. Adams v. Saunders, 4 C. & P. 25, s. c. 1 M. & M. 373. [Tenterden]

(A) Where payable.

Interest not allowed upon money secured by a written instrument, unless it be expressly reserved on the face of the instrument, or necessarily implied from usage in respect of instruments of that nature.

Not allowed upon a promissory note made in France, payable in one month after the return of the maker to England. Page v. Newman, 7 Law J. K.B. 267, s. c. 9 B. & C. 378, s. c. 4 M. & R. 305.

The defendants, by an instrument under seal, bound themselves for the due payment of the sum of 1,500*l.*, in three equal payments of 500*l.*, at three, five, and seven months from the date; in failure of which they acknowledged and rendered themselves liable to be sued and proceeded against for the amount:—Held, that the payee was not entitled to interest thereon. Foster v. Weston, 8 Law J. C.P. 295, s. c. 6 Bing. 709, s. c. 4 M. & P. 589.

In assumpsit on the following undertaking: "We hereby undertake to pay you, agreeably to instructions from Mr. J W, the sum of 1,262*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, on his account, as soon as we shall have received from Messrs. Rain & Ramsay, of New South Wales, the amount of monies in their hands belonging to Mr. W, and now under attachment by you." The instructions referred to, directed that the payment should be taken by the plaintiff in discharge of a bill for 1,262*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, at nine months, and which bill the defendants were to receive at the time of payment:—Held, that, upon this undertaking, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover interest. Hare v. Richards, 9 Law J. C.P. 87, s. c. 7 Bing. 254, s. c. 5 M. & P. 35.

The underwriter on a policy of insurance is not liable to pay interest on the amount of his subscription, although he has no colourable ground for refusing to pay the loss, unless a distinct demand of the money has been made at an earlier period for that purpose. Bain v. Case, 2 M. & M. 262, s. c. 3 C. & P. 496. [Tenterden]

Lord M dies indebted in more than 100,000*l.*, and leaves funds applicable to the payment of only 50,000*l.* The widow enters into an obligation to pay the whole of her deceased husband's debts:—Held, by the Court of Session, that the English creditors under this obligation are entitled to interest on the bonds and bills of exchange, till the principal is paid, on the ground that such securities carry interest by the law of England. Secus, as to the simple contract debts, which by the law of England do not bear interest. Montgomery v. Bridge, 2 Dow. & C. A.C. 297.

(B) On Judgments.

Interest is not allowed on a judgment, except under special circumstances, and where there is no imputation on the creditor; and therefore, interest was refused on a judgment, where the creditor, being also mortgagee, had been in the receipt of the rents and profits of the mortgaged estates, and the propriety of his conduct was questioned with respect to the manner in which he had become such mortgagee, and with respect to his accounts, both as such mortgagee, and also as solicitor, agent, and steward to the mortgagor. Lewes v. Morgan, 3 Y. & J. 394.

A judgment creditor is entitled to interest on his debt, where the warrant of attorney authorizes the judgment to be entered up for double the amount of the sum actually due. Tunstall v. Trappes, (Lawson's case,) 3 Sim. 299.

(C) How computed.

[See Banker.]

In an action of debt on an award, interest is recoverable on the sum awarded from the time at which it was demanded. Johnson v. Durant, 4 C. & P. 327. [Tenterden]

In a case where, in 1811, a written agreement had been obtained to discharge an heritable bond on which interest was due from 1792, which agreement was reduced as fraudulent, the Court of Session, in an action on the bond, adjudged that the simple interest from 1792 to 1811 should be turned into principal, and that on the accumulated fund, from 1811 till payment, interest should be charged on biennial rests. But this judgment was reversed by the House of Lords; the ground of reversal, as stated in the subsequent case of Napier v. Lady Gordon, being the biennial rests. Macneil v. Jolly, 2 Dow. & C. 454.

ISSUE.

[See Evidence and New Trial.]

(A) Where directed.
(B) Practice.

(A) Where directed.

A portioner is not entitled to an issue as a matter of right. Lewis v. Bridgman, 3 Sim. 316.

Issues directed by Master of the Rolls, as to a bond, merely upon the surmise and suggestion of a party, the bond being unobjectionable on the face of it, and all the evidence as to the circumstances under which it had been obtained being before his Honour upon a report, made after inquiry by the Master. The order directing the issues reversed by the House of Lords, and the cause remitted, with directions to his Honour to decide upon the matter himself. Nichol v. Vaughan, 2 Dow. & C. A.C. 420.

A, by his will declaring a purpose to assign the lease of an hotel, in which he carried on business, with the effects in the hotel, and the business of it, to a trustee, in trust for the benefit of his son and daughter, in consideration of an annuity to be paid to him for his life, bequeathed the residue of his personal estate and effects to his son and daughter in equal shares. The testator died without having carried into effect the purpose declared in his will. His daughter, being executrix, carried on the business from the death of the testator to the year 1810, in the house where the testator had carried it on. In that year she purchased, chiefly by means of the assets, the freehold of another house, to which she removed the business, and carried it on there alone until 1819, when she married. Upon the marriage, the freehold house and effects were conveyed and assigned to a trustee, for the daughter and her husband, and the children of the marriage, in the ordinary course of settlement.

In 1820 the son filed a bill against the daughter and her husband, praying that the deed of settlement might be set aside; that the freehold house might be declared to be part of the assets, and sold with the effects, &c.; that an account might be taken of the profits of the business, from the death of the testator to 1819, the date of the marriage; and that half the assets and half the profits of the business might be paid to him as residuary legatee and partner.

The case of the plaintiff as to the partnership was supported by the evidence of the will, and of acts and admissions on the part of his sister, at various times before the marriage, of her liability to account as partner. The defendants insisted, upon an agreement between the plaintiff and his sister, shortly after the death of the father, that the lease of the hotel, and the effects, should be valued, and the produce divided between them; that they were accordingly valued, and that the half of the amount of the valuation had been paid to the plaintiff by his later; but this alleged agreement did not include ny consideration for the good-will of the business. The defendants also produced in evidence a letter written from Paris by the plaintiff, in which he spoke of the business as not belonging to him; but his letter he sought to explain, by stating that he could not with safety, being in France, acknowledge that he had any property or concerns in England. Upon these pleadings, and evidence at the hearing, issues were directed to try—first, whether there was any agreement for the sale of the lease, effects, and good-will of the business; and if so, secondly, whether such agreement had been abandoned. Upon the trial of these issues, verdicts were given for the respondent on both issues. Upon further directions, the Court (Vice Chancellor) declared, that a partnership in moieties subsisted between the son and daughter from the death of the father to the marriage of the daughter, when the partnership was dissolved; and that the freehold house was part of the assets; and an account was directed accordingly.

Against this decree the defendants appealed to the Chancellor, and the decree being affirmed with a slight variation, the defendants further appealed to Parliament, and insisted that an issue should be directed to try the question of fact, whether a partnership subsisted; but the decree was affirmed, the House being of opinion that it was too late, in that stage of the cause, to ask for such issue. Burnard v. Nerot, 2 Bligh, N.S. 215.

(B) Practice.

Order made nisi, that an issue might be taken pro confesso, the plaintiff in the issue having repeatedly made default. Powell v. Wood, 1 Russ. & M. 354.

JUDGMENT.

[See Practice.]

(A) In general.
(B) For want of a Plea.
(C) Signing.
(D) Entering up.
(E) Docketing.
(F) Setting aside.
(G) As in case of a Nonsuit.

---

(A) In general.

Where an action had been brought in an inferior court, and was thence removed into the King's Bench, where the defendants pleaded, and the cause was brought on for trial:—Held, that evidence of a record of the action, while it was in the inferior court, (by which it appeared that a judgment by default in the action had been suffered by the defendants,) was inadmissible on the trial of the action in the King's Bench. Bottings v. Firby, 7 Law J. K.B. 129, s.c. 9 B. & C. 762, s.c. 4 M. & R. 566.

(B) For want of a Plea.

The rule of Court, H.T. 60 Geo. 3. and 1 Geo. 4, authorizing plaintiffs to sign judgment for want of a plea, where declaration is filed and notice given two days before the end of the term in which the writ is returnable, does not apply to cases where the process is returnable on the last term. Neck v. Southall, 13 Price, 800.

The defendant pleaded non assumpsit, with a notice of set-off, to a declaration in debt:—Held, that, the plea being a nullity, the plaintiff, by afterwards obtaining an order for particulars of set-off, did not waive his right to sign judgment as for want of a plea. Ford v. Bernard, 8 Law J. C.P. 219, s.c. 6 Bing. 534, s.c. 4 M. & P. 302.

The defendant having pleaded his privilege as an attorney of the Court of King's Bench to an action in the Common Pleas after an imparlance, saving exceptions to the writ and declaration only, the plaintiff, treating the plea as a nullity, signed judgment:—The Court set aside the judgment, on the terms of the defendant pleading to the merits. Godefroy v. Jay, 8 Law J. C.P. 230, s.c. 6 Bing. 616, s.c. 4 M. & P. 440.

A declaration in debt demanded 60*l.*, and contained six counts for 10*l.* each; and the defendant pleaded that he did not owe the said sum of 10*l.* above demanded. The plaintiff treated this plea as a nullity, and signed judgment:—The Court set the judgment aside. Risdale v. Kelly, 1 C. & J. 410, s.c. 1 Tyrw. 337.

(C) Signing.

A party is not entitled to open the office in order to sign a judgment, or take any other proceeding, on a dies non, unless he was entitled to take that proceeding on the previous day. Harrison v. Smith, 7 Law J. K.B. 171, s.c. 9 B. & C. 243.

Where a plaintiff is entitled to sign a judgment by default before the essoign day of the term, a judgment signed between the essoign day and full term is regular, and is a judgment of the preceding term. Beeston v. Beckett, 7 Law J. K.B. 333.

Although a cognovit be produced to the clerk of the dockets on signing judgment, if it be not filed with him after the taxation of the costs, (pursuant to the rule of court, Hilary 1822,) the judgment will be irregular. Long v. Sperrin, 7 Law J. K.B. 332.

Where the proceedings were by original, a judgment signed by virtue of a cognovit on the first day of full term, the defendant having died between the essoign day and that day, held to be regular. Whittaker v. Whittaker, 7 Law J. K.B. 161, s.c. 8 B. & C. 768.

(D) Entering up.

Where the representatives of a deceased party have not been able to enter up judgment within two terms, in consequence of necessary delay in procuring letters of administration, this does not deprive the other party of the advantage he gains by the omission so to enter up the judgment. The Court have not the power in such a case to order the judgment to be entered nunc pro tunc. Dowbiggin v. Harrison, 8 Law J. K.B. 175, s.c. 10 B. & C. 480.

A verdict having been taken at the trial (by consent) on two counts of the declaration, both containing in substance the same cause of action, the Court allowed the plaintiff to amend the postea by entering up judgment on the first count only, though the Judge who tried the cause declined to interfere. Henley v. the Mayor and Burgesses of Lyme Regis, 7 Law J. C.P. 243, s.c. 6 Bing. 100, s.c. 3 M. & P. 310.

(E) Docketing.

Judgments not docketed have no reference against heirs, executors, or administrators. Landon v. Ferguson, 3 Russ. 349.

(F) Setting aside.

The application for setting aside a judgment, as against good faith, is ex debito justitiæ, and the Court will not impose on the defendant, as a condition for setting it aside, that he bring no action. Cash v. Wells, 1 B. & Ad. 375.

(G) As in case of a Nonsuit.

In a country cause, judgment as in case of nonsuit cannot be had, till the term next after the second assize from the term in which issue is joined, where the plaintiff has not given notice of trial for the first assize. Simonds v. Folkingham, 9 Law J. Exch. 191, s. c. 1 C. & J. 513, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 501.

In a country cause, where issue is joined in Michaelmas term, and the plaintiff does not proceed to trial at the assizes after Hilary term, the defendant may, in Easter term, move for judgment as in case of a nonsuit. Cowley v. Dean, 1 C. & J. 18.

Where a cause goes off at Nisi Prius, because neither party will pray a tales, the defendant cannot afterwards obtain judgment as in case of a nonsuit; nor can he try the cause by proviso. Phillips v. Dance, 7 Law J. K.B. 338, s. c. 9 B. & C. 769, s. c. 4 M. & R. 584.

A rule for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, will not be made absolute while anything remains due, under an agreement between the parties, to pay by instalments. Anon. 1 Tyrw. 378.

Rules for costs of the day, and judgment as in case of nonsuit, may be simultaneous, and will be heard in such order as the discretion of the Court shall determine, according to circumstances. Hockin v. Read, 9 Law J. Exch. 131, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 386, s. c. 1 C. & J. 466.

Where a plaintiff, with a full knowledge of the defendant having become insolvent subsequent to the action brought, declared, upon being ruled so to do, (that he might avoid the cost of a non pros.,) and subsequently discharged the defendant's rule for a judgment as in case of a nonsuit, on giving a peremptory undertaking to try:—The Court refused to interfere in discharging such undertaking. Cunningham v. Rees, 9 Law J. Exch. 1, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 1.

It is not an inflexible rule in the Exchequer, that an order for judgment as in case of nonsuit, for not proceeding to trial according to notice, cannot be discharged upon a peremptory undertaking, but on terms of paying costs. Grant v. Kearney, 12 Price, 529.

Where the plaintiff gives a fair reason for not having proceeded, the costs will be ordered to abide the event. Brown v. Tanner, 13 Price, 803.

On a rule for judgment as in case of a nonsuit for not proceeding to trial pursuant to notice, discharged on a peremptory undertaking, the defendant is not entitled to costs unless mentioned in the rule. Pertington v. Wyatt, 7 Law J. C.P. 247, s. c. 6 Bing. 171, s. c. 3 M. & P. 216.

An interlocutory motion for discharging a rule for judgment as in case of nonsuit, made absolute with costs; the plaintiff, on whose behalf the motion was made, having left his home, and being unable to be found for more than a year, his attorney apply to the Court for an order, requiring the defendant to pay the costs to them, under the circumstances disclosed by affidavit;—rule granted and made absolute, on cause shewn.

An attachment in such case refused.

Part of the costs allowed on taxation, being for a letter of attorney to demand the amount, the document not being executed, that item was disallowed.

The Court, on making the rule absolute, gave no costs on either side, in respect of the application.

Service of the rule and allocatur a sufficient demand.

Service of the present rule on the defendant's clerk in court, made part of the order. Cuper v. Hatton, 12 Price, 462.

JURISDICTION.

Where a tribunal determines in a matter not within its jurisdiction, the decision is a nullity. Attorney General v. Lord Hotham, 3 Russ. 415.

The Court of Admiralty, except upon the subject of prize, exercises an original jurisdiction only on the grounds of authorised usage and established authority. Atlas, 6 Hag. 55.

JURY.

[Jury trial in Scotland in civil causes, 1 Will. 4. c. 69, 8 Law J. Stat. 151.]

A certificate granted by the Judge, to warrant the allowance of costs of a special jury, given by him after he had left the assize town, is unavailing against the positive words of the 6 Geo. 4. c. 50, which requires it to be given "immediately after the verdict;" and the Court cannot receive any explanation why it was not so given. Upton v. Longworthy, 8 Law J. K.B. 302.

Costs of a view are only allowed where the statute 6 Geo. 4. c. 50. s. 23. and the practice have been complied with; that is, where a sheriff has been named in the writ for each party. Taylor v. Thompson, 9 Law J. C.P. 102, s. c. 7 Bing. 403, s. c. 5 M. & P. 255.

If the jury cannot agree, the Judge at Nisi Prius has authority to discharge them. Cook v. Caldicot, 4 C. & P. 315. [Tenterden]

(A) Powers and Duties.

Where a person is charged, on oath, with an offence amounting to felony, and a Magistrate issues his warrant; and, on the party being brought before him, the charge is proved, and he is committed to prison,—the Magistrate is not liable in trespass for false imprisonment, although the charge turns out to be unfounded.—Where, therefore, a party was charged with cutting down a tree adjoining a lwelling-house, under the statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30. s. 19, and committed to gaol, but the person who laid the information did not prosecute:—Held, hat the Magistrate was not liable in trespass, although the party charged was the occupier of the and on which the tree grew. Mills v. Collett, 7 Law J. M.C. 97, s.c. 6 Bing. 85, s. c. 3 M. & P. 242.

An attorney, merely in that character, has no right to insist upon taking part as an advocate on proceedings before Justices under a penal statute, where it is the practice of the Court in which the proceeding is pending, not to allow persons to practise as attornies or advocates. Collier v. Hicks, 9 Law J. M.C. 188.

(B) Actions against.

If a Magistrate commit a prisoner for re-examination, stating that he does so in the hope that the prisoner will admit a fact then in dispute; and the jury should be of opinion that the commitment, though in point of form for re-examination, was intended to force an admission from the prisoner of the particular fact, the Magistrate is liable to an action of trespass and false imprisonment, in respect of that commitment.

Whether fifteen days is a reasonable time to commit a prisoner for re-examination; whether the reasonableness of the time is a question of law, or of fact, or is a mixed question—quære. Davis v. Capper, 7 Law J. M.C. 90.

If a Magistrate has power to commit for a specific time, and he exceed that time, his commitment is altogether void, and he is liable to an action of trespass, although he act bonâ fide. So, if a Magistrate, having power to commit for a reasonable time—if he commit for a time which, upon investigation, appears to be unreasonable, his commitment is void altogether; and he is liable in trespass, although he act bonâ fide. Davis v. Capper, 8 Law J. M.C. 67, s. c. 10 B. & C. 28, s. c. 5 M. & R. 53, s. c. 4 C. & P. 134.

In computing the six months limited by 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. s. 8, for bringing an action against a Magistrate for false imprisonment, the day of discharge from imprisonment is to be reckoned exclusively. Therefore, where a party, discharged on the 14th of December, sued out a writ on the 14th of June following, it was held, that the action was commenced in time. Hardy v. Ryle, 7 Law J. M.C. 118, s. c. 9 B. & C. 603, s. c. 4 M. & R. 295.

If the plaintiff bring an action against the Magistrate alone, he is not bound by that action. He may abandon it, and bring another, joining the constable as a defendant with the Magistrate, if he bring the second within time. Jones v. Simpson, 9 Law J. M.C. 45.

(A) Rights and Liabilities of Landlord.

Encroachments made by a tenant, upon the waste adjoining the demised premises, belong to the landlord and not to the tenant, at the end of the term, however long; the possession of the tenant during the term not being adverse against the landlord. Nor does the fact of the landlord being also lord of the manor, in which the waste is situate, render the possession of the tenant adverse to the lord of the manor in his character of landlord. Doe d. Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, and Dickinson, v. Stopford, 9 Law J. K.B. 171.

If a tenant quit, without any intention of returning, the landlord may enter without bringing ejectment. Lacy v. Lear, Pea. A.C. 210. [Alvanley]

Where a pauper is put into a cottage by parish officers, he may be turned out without ejectment. Fox v. Oakley, Pea. A.C. 214. [Le Blanc.]

Where the terms of letting contain no stipulation as to arrangements upon quitting, the custom of the country is let into operation in that respect, although the off-going tenant comes within the benefit of the custom by a course of husbandry inconsistent with that which he agrees to pursue during the continuance of the tenancy. The landlord's remedy against the off-going tenant is by action for breach of covenant, and the coming-on tenant cannot prevent the latter taking his off-going crop. Holding v. Pigott, 9 Law J. C.P. 124, s. c. 7 Bing. 465, s. c. 5 M. & P. 427.

A lessor granted lands, with a condition "that, if the lessee should commit an act of bankruptcy whereon a commission should issue, and he should be declared a bankrupt, or if he should become insolvent, or incur any debt upon which any judgment should be signed, entered up, or given against him, and on which any writ of fieri facias, or any other writ of execution should issue, it should be lawful for the lessor to re-enter into the demised premises, and the same again to have, re-possess, and enjoy, as in his former estate." The lessor having entered for a breach of this condition:—Held, that he was entitled to the emblements. Davis v. Eyton, 9 Law J. C.P. 44, s. c. 7 Bing. 154, s. c. 4 M. & P. 820.

(B) Rights and Liabilities of Tenant.

[Cornish v. Searell, 1 M. & R. 703, Dig. Law J. 298.]

Upon an information to set aside a lease for ninety-nine years of charity lands, the defendants, the lessees, set up a title adverse to the lease; upon the merits it was held, that there was no ground for the defence; but the Court was of opinion, that, if the merits had been otherwise, the defendants were estopped, and could not dispute the title, while they retained the possession. Attorney General v. Hotham, 3 Russ. 415.

A tenant has no right to make any alteration in the demised premises; not even that which may improve their value, if such an alteration will affect the evidence of the landlord's title, either by the alteration not having the character of an act done by a mere tenant, or by its causing a difficulty in afterwards proving the identity of the premises. Young v. Spencer, 8 Law J. K.B. 106, s. c. 10 B. & C. 145, s. c. 5 M. & R. 47.

A tenant of a house, who is bound by agreement to keep it in tenantable repair, may quit without notice in the course of his term, if the premises become unwholesome for want of sufficient drainage, if they cannot be kept dry without extravagant and unreasonable labour and expense on his part. Collins v. Barrow, 2 M. & M. 112. [Bayley]

A tenant may, by the general rules of husbandry, carry away straw or hay from the premises. Gough v. Howard, Pea. A.C. 197. [Lawrence]

A pump erected by a tenant, and so fixed as to be removable without injury to the freehold, may be taken away by him at the expiration of his term. Grymes v. Bowerem, 8 Law J. C.P. 140, s. c. 6 Bing. 437, s. c. 4 M. & P. 143.

If a tenant, who may be entitled to remove certain fixtures, which he has put up during the term, neglect to remove them during his term, and leave them on giving up possession, he has, in point of law, relinquished them to his landlord.

Where, in such a case, the landlord, in the course of a discussion between him and his late tenant about the fixtures, made an offer of a sum to effect a settlement, which was refused:—Held, that this offer did not restore any right in the fixtures to the late tenant. Lyde v. Russell, 9 Law J. K.B. 26, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 394.

A lessee of a mill and steam-engine covenanted to repair, reasonable wear and tear excepted. During the lease, he added both to the height and extent of the mill, and removed all the works of the engine except the fly-wheel, fly-wheel shaft, and boiler, and attached to them a new engine of greater power. Injunction granted to restrain the assignees of the lessee, who had become bankrupt, from removing the parts of the new building, and the new parts of the engine, subject to an action to be brought by the lessors to try the right. Sunderland v. Newton, 3 Sim. 450.

(C) Contracts between.

[Peirse v. Sharr, 2 M. & R. 418, Dig. Law J. 299.]

If, by a written agreement, A agrees to let, and B to take, a messuage from a day past, for a term of ten years, "at and under the rent of 80*l.*," this is an agreement by B to pay a rent of 80*l.*; and therefore, if there be a power of re-entry in case of a breach of "any of the agreements therein contained," A has a power of re-entry for non-payment of rent, although there is no express agreement to pay the rent. Doe d. Rains v. Kneller, 4 C. & P. 3. [Tenterden]

An agreement for the holding of certain quarries, provided that the rent should be 50*l.* a year; that the tenant was to work the whole of the stone, but not to employ more than a given number of men; that the rent was not to be advanced; and that that agreement was to have the effect of creating a new yearly tenancy between the parties. It would, in point of fact, take five years to work out the stone with the limited number of men:—Held, that this created only a tenancy determinable by notice to quit at the end of the first year. Doe d. Skrine v. Watson, 8 Law J. K.B. 12.

Where a party by words of present demise lets premises to another, he is bound to give him possession; and if the tenant in possession refuses to quit, the lessee is not bound to proceed against him by ejectment, but may sue the lessor for the breach of the agreement. Coe v. Clay, 7 Law J. C.P. 162, s. c. 5 Bing. 440, s. c. 3 M. & P. 57.

A tenant from year to year by parol, will not be discharged from the rent of the current year, by an agreement of his landlord to accept a third person as a tenant, unless such agreement is in writing, or the third person take possession, it being a surrender within the Statute of Frauds. Taylor v. Chapman, Pea. A.C. 19. [Kenyon]

A being a tenant in possession of a farm, which he held after the expiration of a lease, made a proposal by missive, to take a new lease, upon the conditions of an offer made by W, for another farm belonging to the same estate. W had engaged to enter into a lease, which was to contain "all the regulations to be laid down for the estate." G, the owner of the estate, by letter, accepted the proposal of A, on the footing of the offer of W, "and the general conditions laid down by him for the whole estate;" and this letter of acceptance provided, that a lease should be executed as soon as the other leases of the estate could be got ready. Three years after this proposal and acceptance, a document, entitled Articles and Conditions, was signed by G, and various other proposed tenants of the tenants of the estate, but not by W or A. By one of these conditions it was provided, that "all the fodder should be used upon the farm, and none sold or carried away at any time." This document concluded by providing, that the leases on the estate were to be granted upon, and to refer to the conditions therein contained. A few days after the signature of this document, a draft-tack with various blanks, but containing a reference to the articles and conditions, and an obligation to perform them, and a consent to the registration of them, was signed by the tenants, including W, but not A; he did, however, two years afterwards, sign this draft-tack, which was never extended or otherwise executed:—Held, that the draft-tack, as signed by A, was a probative document, and not a new contract between the parties, but referable to the preceding agreement and conditions; and that the condition prohibiting the sale or removal of straw, &c. applied to the last year of the term, and the way-going crop.

The draft-tack not having been produced on the first hearing of the cause, held, that the appellant was liable for all the costs consequent upon the non-production. Gordon v. Anderson, 3 Bligh, N.S. 351.

(D) Rent.

[Process for securing rent in the county palatine of Durham and Sadberge, 11 Geo. 4. c. 11, 8 Law J. Stat. 7.]

Payment of rent is primâ facie evidence of title in the landlord. Doe v. Clarke, Pea. A.C. 239. [Bayley]

Where a distress is made for more than a year's rent, after an act of bankruptcy by the tenant, the Court will allow the assignees of the tenant to avail themselves of the 6 Geo. 4. c. 16. s. 74, and to pay a year's rent into court.

But if the landlord under such a rule accept the sum so paid into court, he is entitled to double costs under the 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. s. 22. Alderson v. Gadsden, 7 Law J. K.B. 89.

Payments by a tenant, of ground-rent due to the superior landlord, or of land-tax, for which, in default of payment, he is liable to be distrained upon, are not voluntary payments, but are such as the tenant is entitled to deduct from the rent paid to his immediate landlord; and a distress by the latter, after notice of such payments, is wrongful, and the subject of an action. Carter v. Carter, 7 Law J. C.P. 41, s. c. 5 Bing. 406, s. c. 2 M. & P. 732.

A tenant who holds over after the expiration of his own notice to quit, is not liable to double rent from the time of his having offered to give up possession, and having afterwards quitted possession; although he may have previously filled the character of tenant at double rent, by having paid it. A notice is not necessary, by the tenant, to determine such a tenancy, though it may be by the landlord. Booth v. Macfarlane, 9 Law J. K.B. 161, 1 B. & Ad. 904.

In an action for rent, semble, that it is no answer that the landlord has distrained goods for it to the full value of the rent, if he has sold them for a less sum. If he has sold them at too low a price, the tenant's remedy is by action. Efford v. Burgess, 2 M. & M. 23. [J. Parke]

In an action by a landlord against a sheriff, for removing, under an execution, the goods of his tenant, without securing the payment of a year's rent, as required by the statute 8 Anne, c. 14, the tenant was called to prove the rent due, but objected to as interested, and released by the landlord:—Held, that the release could not be pleaded in bar of the action, puis darrein continuance, nor did it reduce the landlord to the necessity of taking a verdict against the sheriff for nominal damages only. The statute 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1. applies to goods in apartments being parcel of a messuage. Thurgood v. Richardson, 4 C. & P. 481. [Tindal]

By the Irish statute, 11 Anne, c. 2, it is enacted, (s. 2.) "That when more than half a year's rent is in arrear upon a lease, the landlord or lessor may, without demand or re-entry, serve a summons in ejectment for recovery of the demised premises; and upon proof of the fact that more than half a year's rent was due when the summons was served, and that no sufficient distress was to be found on the premises, shall recover judgment and execution; and if the lessee or person claiming under the lease, shall suffer judgment to be recovered and execution executed, without paying the rent in arrear with costs, or without filing a bill for relief in equity, within six months after execution executed, the lessee, &c. shall be barred from all relief or remedy, in law or equity, &c., and the landlord, &c. shall hold the premises discharged from the lease."

The Irish statute, 4 Geo. 1. c. 5. recites the former statute, and the difficulty of proving the want of sufficient distress, and thereupon enacts (s. 2) "That when one year's rent shall be in arrear upon a lease, although there be sufficient distress upon the land to answer the rent in arrear, the landlord or lessor may serve a summons in ejectment, and upon proof that one year's rent was in arrear, and due before the service of the summons, shall recover judgment and have execution; and if the lessee, &c. shall not pay the rent in arrear with costs, to be ascertained as in the act provided, or deposit the same in a court of equity, on filing a bill, within six months after execution executed, he shall be barred from all relief or remedy in law or equity, &c., and the landlord shall hold the premises discharged from the lease."

The Irish statute, 8 Geo. 1. c. 2, reciting the former statutes, enacts (s. 4.) "That where any lease, for avoiding of which an ejectment is brought, shall, before the bringing of the ejectment, have been mortgaged for a valuable consideration, and the lessee and mortgagee, and their respective assignees, shall be served with the summons in ejectment, and affidavits of the summons made and filed, and the plaintiff shall obtain judgment and execution on the ejectment; if the mortgagee or assignee shall not, within nine months after execution executed, pay or tender to the landlord or lessor the rent in arrear, and costs, to be ascertained as in the former acts provided, the mortgagee or his assignee shall be barred of all relief and remedy, in law or equity, on account of the mortgage, and the landlord or lessor shall hold and enjoy the premises discharged from the mortgage and the equity of redemption."

In the case of a lease, subject to a mortgage, the landlord having recovered judgment, &c. according to the statutes, against the lessee, who did not within six months pay or tender; but where the representatives of the mortgagee, before the lapse of nine months after execution executed, paid the rent in arrear and costs:—Held, that the benefit of that payment enured to the lessee as well as the representatives of the mortgagee.

A suit having been instituted against the landlord by the representatives of the mortgagee, to have the benefit of the lease, an account was directed of what was due for rent and costs. In this stage of the cause, the representatives of the mortgagee entered into an agreement with the landlord, and executed a deed, by which they covenanted not to claim the equity of redemption of the lease.

Upon a bill filed by the representatives of the lessee and mortgagor, against the landlord and representatives of the mortgagee, to have the benefit of the suit, and to carry on the accounts:—Held, that the agreement between the landlord and the representatives of the mortgagee, was incompetent and invalid, and that the representatives of the lessee were entitled to the benefit of the suit and the account. O'Reilly v. Fetherston, 4 Bligh, N.S. 161.

(E) Repairs.

A landlord has no right to enter his tenant's premises to repair them, without some stipulation to that effect. Barker v. Barker, 3 C. & P. 557. [Best]

(F) Notice to quit.

Where tenant disclaims, no notice to quit necessary. Doe v. Clarke, Pen. A.C. 239. [Bayley]

Tenant for life granted a lease, rendering rent in money and a quantity of culm to be carried to the lord's house.

After the death of the tenant for life, the remainder man sent his servant to the different tenants for the culm to be brought home. Culm was accordingly sent twice, at intervals, and received:—Held, that, even assuming the lease granted by the tenant for life to be invalid, the remainder-man had adopted the tenant so far, that the latter was entitled to a notice to quit before ejectment could be maintained. Doe d. Symmons v. Morse, 9 Law J. K. B. 77, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 365.

Where a person holds as tenant to persons as landlords, who are joint tenants as between each other, a notice to quit by either of them to their tenant, determines the tenancy as between him and all of them. Doe d. Aslin v. Summerset, 8 Law J. K.B. 369, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 135.

A notice to quit, which is given by an agent of one party, will not be binding on the other, unless it appear that, at the time of giving it, the agent had authority, or that before it begins to operate, the principal had adopted it. Doe d. Mann v. Walters, 8 Law J. K.B. 297, s. c. 10 B. & C. 626.

A six months' notice to quit need not contain six full calender months; a customary half year, as, from the 28th of September to the 25th of March, suffices. Roe d. Durand v. Doe, 8 Law J. C.P. 227, s. c. 6 Bing. 574, s. c. 4 M. & P. 391.

A notice to quit on Lady-day, is a good termination of a holding, either from Lady-day old, or Lady-day new style. Denn d. Willan v. Walker, Peo. A.C. 194. [Heath]

A weekly tenancy commenced on a Wednesday. The landlord gave the tenant notice to quit, "on Friday, provided your tenancy commenced on a Friday, or otherwise, at the end of your tenancy next after one week from the date hereof":—Held sufficient. Doe d. Campbell v. Scott, 8 Law J. C.P. 110, s. c. 6 Bing. 362, s. c. 4 M. & P. 20.

LAND-TAX.

Lease for a term of years, in consideration of a premium, at an annual rent. The lease being silent as to taxes and rates:—Held, that the lessor was to bear such proportion of the land-tax, as the reserved rent bore to the total annual value; and the tenant, the remainder.

In such a case the lessor having redeemed the land-tax:—Held, that he was entitled (under the 42 Geo. 3. c. 116. s. 123 or 154.) to recover from the lessee the proportion of land-tax which he was liable to pay, before it had been redeemed. Ward v. Coast, 8 Law J. K.B. 291, s. c. 10 B. & C. 635.

Summary application against commissioners of land-tax, to compel a due assessment of the land-tax. Attorney General v. Commissioners of Land-tax, 12 Price, 647.

The securities required by the Land and Assessed Tax Act to be given by the collectors and their sureties, may be united in one bond to commissioners acting under both acts. Collins v. Gwynne, 9 Law J. C.P. 130, s. c. 7 Bing. 423, s. c. 5 M. & P. 276.

LARCENY.

Where property is taken under a bonâ fide claim of title, in an open manner, such taking is not the subject of an indictment for larceny.

Therefore, where a party has cut and carried away part of a tree, under a claim of right to do so, as a commoner, from the lord's waste, in the presence of his gamekeeper, a conviction, under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 39, "for cutting, destroying, and damaging the same, and stealing the whole or the greater part thereof," was held wrong. In v. Jenner, 7 Law J. M.C. 79.

Semble, that the stealing of brass fixed to tombstones in a churchyard, is a felony within the statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 44. Rex v. Blick, 4 C. & P. 377. [Bosanquet]

The halves of country bank notes, sent in a letter, are goods and chattels, and a person who steals or embezzles them is indictable for such larceny or embezzlement. Rex v. Mead, 4 C. & P. 353. [Bosanquet]

If pigeons are so far tame that they come home every night to roost in wooden boxes, hung on the outside of the house of their owner, and a party come in the night and steal them out of those boxes, this is a larceny. Rex v. George Beals, 4 C. & P. 131. [Taddy, Serj.]

If one employed to carry goods for hire, appropriate them to his own use, but does not break bulk, this is no larceny, although the person so employed were not a common carrier, but was only employed in this particular instance. Rex v. Fletcher, 4 C. & P. 545. [Patteson]

A delivered his watch to B to be repaired, instead of repairing it, he sold it, and A being informed of this, told B that he would either have his watch back again or the money:—Held, no felony. Rex v. Henry Levy, 4 C. & P. 241. [Vaughan]

A placed valuable securities in the hands of B, with a written direction to invest the proceeds in the funds, "in case of any unexpected accident happening to A;" no accident did happen to A, and the proceeds were by B converted to his own use:—Held, that B was not indictable under the statute 52 Geo. 3. c. 63, (now repealed), and it seems that he would not be so under the statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 49. An allegation in an indictment, that A placed valuable securities in the hands of B, "with an order in writing to invest the proceeds in the government funds," is not supported by proof of an order in writing directing B to invest the proceeds in the government funds in case of any accident happening to A. Rex v. White, 4 C. & P. 46. [Tenterden]

If the only evidence against a prisoner charged with a larceny be, that stolen property was found in his possession three months after the loss of it, the Judge will direct an acquittal, without calling upon him for his defence. Rex v. Adams, 3 C. & P. 600. [J. Parke]

A went to the shop of B, and asked for shawls for Mrs. D to look at. B gave her five; she pawned two, and three were found at her lodgings. Mrs. D was not called as a witness:—Held, that A, on this evidence, could not be convicted of a larceny in stealing the goods of B. Rex v. Savage, 5 C. & P. 143. [Patteson.]

If a prisoner, who was in the service of the prosecutor, steal a quantity of lace in several pieces, the pieces together being above 5*l.* in value, and bring them all out of his master's house at the same time, this is a capital offence, although it be shown that the prisoner had the opportunity of stealing the lace by a piece at a time, and that no one of the pieces was worth 5*l.* Rex v. Charles Morris Jones, 4 C. & P. 217. [Bolland]

A prisoner was indicted for stealing three articles

It appeared, that having taken the first article, he returned in about two minutes and took the second, and then returned in half an hour and took the third:—Held, that the last taking was a distinct felony, and could not be given in evidence with the other two; but that the interval of time between the first and second taking was so short, that they must be considered as parts of the same transaction. Rex v. Birdseye, 4 C. & P. 386. [Littledale]

(A) WHAT INSTRUMENT AMOUNTS TO.

[Doe d. Henniker v. Watt, 1 M. & R. 694; Dig. Law J. 303.]

Whether an instrument be a lease or an agreement for a lease, must depend upon the whole of the instrument; the words "agree to let" not being conclusive for an agreement. Where there was no distinct reference to a future instrument, and the instrument itself contained all the terms, the Court construed it a lease. Staniforth v. Fox, 9 Law J. C.P. 175, s. c. 7 Bing. 590, s. c. 5 M. & P. 589.

Where an agreement for a lease contained covenants on the part of the lessee to repair the premises, to pay all taxes, &c., and to paint once in three years; and also a covenant that, until the lease was executed, the lessees were "to pay rent, and to hold the premises, subject to the covenants above mentioned:"—Held, that this was an absolute demise, and not a mere agreement for a future lease. Pinero v. Judson, 8 Law J. C.P. 18, s. c. 6 Bing. 206, s. c. 3 M. & P. 497.

An agreement, by which A agrees to "let" premises to B, "on lease" for a certain term, at a certain rent, "subject to the stipulations and covenants in the original lease, under which he holds," and "to keep the said stipulations in every respect until the said lease shall be granted; which lease, when required by B, is to be prepared by A's solicitor, but at B's expense,—is a lease, and not an agreement for one. Wilson v. Chisholm, 4 C. & P. 474. [Gaselee]

Where, in a contract of sale, it was provided that the intended purchaser should be considered as a tenant to the vendor, at a rent equal to the amount of the interest on the purchase-money, with a power of distress:—Held, that this was not a lease, but a contract of sale. Hope v. Booth, 9 Law J. K.B. 21, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 498.

(B) INVALID OR FRAUDULENT.

A husbandry lease of charity lands for ninety-nine years, at an uniform rent, cannot be supported. Attorney General v. Hotham, 3 Russ. 415.

Whether the provisions of the statute 13 Eliz. c. 20, go to prohibiting the granting of any lease of the glebe, and other rectorial property of a benefice with cure—quære.

But whether they do or not, all such leases made between 1803 and 1816, are good; the statute 43 Geo. 3. c. 84. having repealed the statute of Elizabeth; and the provisions of the latter not having been revived until the 57 Geo. 3. c. 99.

Where such a lease had been granted within the above two periods to secure several annuities; and subsequently, and after the passing of the 57 Geo. 3. c. 99, a new arrangement was made by the incumbent, the grantor of the annuities, by which the annuities were paid off, and the lease was assigned to a new party to secure the payment of a sum of money advanced by that party for the paying off of the annuities, and the further assistance of the grantor:—Held, that such legal estate was well assigned, although it was after the 57 Geo. 3. c. 99. was passed.

But whether, in a court of equity, such legal estate would be allowed to prevail beyond the securing of that part of the charge which was well created between the 43 Geo. 3. and the 57 Geo. 3.—quære. Doe d. Broughton v. Gully, 7 Law J. K.B. 201, s. c. 9 B. & C. 344, s. c. 4 M. & R. 249.

The statute 13 Eliz. c. 20. is not repealed by the 57 Geo. 3. c. 99, so far as relates to the charging of benefices.

An instrument drawn in point of form as a lease, but operating in substance as a charge, is void under the first-mentioned statute. Shaw v. Pritchard, 8 Law J. K.B. 133, s. c. 10 B. & C. 241, s. c. 5 M. & R. 180.

A lease granted by a bishop under the 42 Geo. 3. c. 116. s. 88, (Land-tax Redemption Act,) which did not add the land-tax to the reserved rent, nor contain any express provision for its payment (except the general words, that the rent reserved was to be clear of all taxes),—held to be not binding on the bishop's successor.

Such lease being granted in consideration of the surrender of a former lease, which was in fact surrendered by deed under seal:—Held, that the first lease did not become revived by the circumstance of the second not being binding on the successor. Doe d. the Bishop of Rochester v. Bridges, 9 Law J. K.B. 113, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 847.

A made a voluntary surrender of copyholds to a trustee, upon trusts for F during her life; and if at her death she left children who attained twenty-one, upon trust to sell, and divide the money among them; but if that event did not take place, upon trust for A in fee. Afterwards, by a deed, reciting that the trustee was seised of the premises upon trust for F and her husband and A, the trustee, and F and her husband and A, concurred in demising the premises, for a valuable consideration, to G, for a long term of years:—Held, that the lessee was to be considered as having notice of the trust for the benefit of the children of F, and that the lease was void as against them. Malpas v. Ackland, 2 Russ. 273.

(C) CONSTRUCTION OF, IN GENERAL.

Demise of a tenement, called Woodend, containing nineteen acres, "except all timber and other trees, wood, underwoods, sand, marl, mines, &c. The question was, whether the soil of a woodland close, part of Woodend, called Roach Key, was excepted by these words; or only the wood growing thereon. If that close were not included in the demise, only thirteen acres would pass:—Held, that the soil of Roach Key passed by the demise, and was not excepted. Legh v. Heald, 9 Law J. K.B. 98, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 622.

Provisos for re-entry in a lease are to be construed like other contracts; not with the strictness of conditions at common law. Davis v. Elsam, 2 M. & M. 189. [Tenterden]

By an indenture, a farm and lands were demised to a tenant at a yearly rent, and also under and subject to certain yearly payments in case the tenant should not crop, manure, and manage the farm in manner therein specified and covenanted; and also in case the tenant, in the last three years of the term, should sow more than seventy acres of clover in one year, the additional rent of 10*l.* an acre for every acre above seventy acres, for the residue of the term:—Held, that the additional rents were in the nature of liquidated damages, and not of penalties; and therefore, on a bill filed by the landlord for a discovery of breaches of the covenants in aid of an action at law, a plea, that the discovery might subject the tenant to penalties, was overruled. Jones v. Green, 3 Y. & J. 298.

Lease to A, for a term of years, at a yearly rent, and under and subject to the payment, at stipulated periods during the term, of certain sums of money in the nature of fines; with a covenant on the part of the lessor, at the end of the term, on due and punctual payment being made of the rent, and gross sums or fines, at the times appointed for payment thereof, to grant a further or renewed lease. A assigned to B a part of the premises, for the same term and interest as A himself took under the lease, subject to the payment of a proportional part of the rent and gross sums or fines; (the amount of the proportion was not specified). C afterwards purchased of the lessor the reversion of the premises, expectant on the lease to A; and, subsequently to acquiring the reversion, purchased A's interest in all the premises demised to A by the lease, and not assigned by him to B. After this purchase by C, one of the gross sums or fines became due, but was not paid; and no proportion of it was demanded by C from, or was paid by B:—Held, that the double character filled by A relieved B from the strict performance of the covenant; and that the non-payment by B of a proportion of the gross sum or fine was not, under the circumstances, a refusal to pay, or such a breach of the covenant as to deprive B of his claim to a renewed lease of the property assigned to him. And a demurrer for want of equity was overruled. Statham v. Liverpool Dock Company, 3 Y. & J. 565.

(D) Covenants.

A lease of an undivided third part of certain mines, reciting that by permission of the lessor and the owners of the other two thirds, the lessee had pulled down an old smelting-mill, and had agreed to build another of larger dimensions, contained a covenant by the lessee to keep such new mill in repair, and so leave it at the expiration of the term; but contained no covenant by the lessee to build the new mill:—Held, that such a covenant by the lessee might be implied, and that the lessor might sue upon the implied covenant in respect of his interest. Easterley v. Sampson, in error, 1 C. & J. 105, s. c. 6 Bing. 644, s. c. 4 M. & P. 601, s. c. 9 B. & C. 505, s. c. 4 M. & R. 422.

A tenant for life, remainder over, by indenture demised to the lessee, his executors, &c., for the term of fifteen years, without any express covenant for quiet enjoyment. The lessee was evicted by the remainder-man, after the death of the tenant for life, but before the expiration of the term:—Held, that the lessee could not maintain an action of covenant against the executor of the tenant for life, in respect of such eviction. Adams v. Gibney, 8 Law J. C.P. 242, s. c. 6 Bing. 656, s. c. 4 M. & P. 491.

Semble—that a covenant by tenant with a brewer landlord, to purchase of him all the beer which shall be sold on the premises, is not a covenant which would pass to the assignee of the lessee.

But even if such covenant should so pass, it cannot be enforced where the business of the original brewer landlord is not carried on at the same place by the assignee. Doe d. Calvert v. Reid, 8 Law J. K.B. 328, s. c. 10 B. & C. 849.

(E) Assignment.

[See Debtor and Creditor.]

An agreement on a lease stamp, whereby A agreed to let to B certain premises from Michaelmas next, upon condition that A should paint, &c., is an actual demise, and may be assigned. Doe d. Green v. Fidler, Peo. A.C. 33. [Kenyon]

A covenant that the lessee, his executors or administrators, will not assign without the consent of the lessor, does not bind the assignee of the lessee, so as to enable the lessor to maintain ejectment for the breach of the covenant.

And semble, that the lessor has no remedy whatever against the assignee. But if he have any, he cannot sue the assignee for breach of the other covenants in the lease subsequent to his assigning over; founding his action upon the supposed privity of estate. He must recover, if at all, upon an action against the assignee for damages, by reason of the assignee having wrongfully destroyed the privity of estate. Paul v. Nurse, 7 Law J. K.B. 12, s. c. 8 B. & C. 486, s. c. 2 M. & R. 525.

In deeds, the proper office of the habendum is to restrain the generality of the premises. An assignment (indorsed upon the counterpart of a lease granted by the assignor) of all the estate, right, title, and interest of the assignor in a messuage, &c. of which he is possessed, for a term of years, to hold to the assignee from thenceforth, for all such time or term therein as within mentioned, conveys to the assignee that portion only of the assignor's term, for which he has granted the lease. If the lessor grants his reversion for a limited term only, it will enable the grantee to maintain an action on the covenants in the lease; and a grant from the lessor for a term exactly co-extensive with the lease, gives the grantee, whilst such grant continues, a right to sue on the covenants in the lease, the same being incident to the immediate reversion. A conveyance by lease and release of a messuage, &c. and 'the reversion, &c. and all the estate of the grantor," passes a chattel reversion, expectant on a term for years. The assignee, by way of mortgage of a lease, who retains the lease and assignment, is liable to the rents and covenants in the lease. Therefore, where L, tenant in fee, leases for years to B, who under-leases for a portion of his term to M, and then assigns to L, his lessor, for such portion of the term as is leased to M, and L mortgages in fee by lease and release in the usual form, containing the words 'and the reversion and all the estates," &c. to the plaintiff; and M mortgages by assignment his under-lease to the defendants, who keep the under-lease and mortgage deed, the plaintiff can, as assignee of a portion of the reversion, maintain covenant on such under-lease, and the defendants are liable as assignees of the lease, although their mortgage-money has not become due, and they have never actually entered. Burton v. Barclay, 9 Law J. C.P. 231, s. c. 7 Bing. 745, s. c. 5 M. & P. 785.

If a leasehold interest is assigned by way of mortgage, the assignee, unless there is a special provision to the contrary, takes the interest, subject to all the covenants and obligations of the original lessee.

B N, having an interest, which he held subject to head-rents, under the see of Kilmore for terms of years, renewable periodically on payment of fines, granted under-leases at certain annual rents, and subject to fines for renewal; and he covenanted with the sub-lessees to renew the under-leases as often as he should obtain renewals from the see of Kilmore, the sub-lessee paying all head-rents and renewal of fines.

The interest in these under-leases vested in R, who assigned and conveyed to a trustee his interest in the terms, together with other lands, to secure the payment of annuities which he had granted to F.

The interest of B N in the leaseholds was mortgaged and sold under a decree of foreclosure, and finally assigned to H in August 1814. In September 1814, the interest of R in the under-leases was assigned to H, as purchaser, under a commission of bankrupt.

In 1815, the annuitants filed a bill, praying a sale of the lands charged with the annuities, and payment, subject only to the head-rents; and afterwards, upon discovery that the leases had expired, a supplemental bill was filed against H, praying that they might be renewed upon reasonable terms. Upon a reference under the decree, the Master having found that the rents and fines paid by H, and the lessees under the see for renewals, were a charge upon the lands prior to the annuities, his report was in this respect overruled by the Court, upon exceptions; and upon a second report, the Court below held, that the annuities were a charge prior to the fines. But this decree was reversed upon appeal.

In such a case the covenant does not run with the land, but is personal, and the right under the lease to deduct the rent and fines is not merged by the union of the principal and under-leases in the same person. Haig v. Homan, 4 Bligh, N.S. 380.

A agreed to take an assignment of a lease of a house, which was out of repair, from B, and by the agreement it was stipulated that all outgoings should be paid by B up to April 23rd; and, by an assignment indorsed on the lease (executed by B, but not by A), B assigned the residue of the term, subject to the performance of all the covenants of the lease, which, from the 22nd of April, ought to be observed on the part of the tenant. The lease contained a covenant to keep the premises in repair, and so to deliver them up; and, after the assignment, the reversioner sued B, and recovered for dilapidations which occurred before April 22nd:—Held, that B could not maintain an action on the case against A for these dilapidations, even though it could be proved that A gave a smaller price, because the premises were out of repair.—Held, also, that the Judge could not look beyond the written instruments, viz. the written agreement and the assignment. If B assign the lease of a house to A by deed, subject to certain covenants, and A take possession, whether B's remedy for a breach of the covenants is by an action of covenant, though A never executed the deed—quære. Hawkins v. Sherman, 3 C. & P. 459.

(F) Renewal.

Every presumption is to be made to support a right of renewal, where, from 1682, leases for twenty-one years, at a small rent and fine certain, of the tithes of a parish, had been regularly granted by the respective bishops of Ely, who were impropriate rectors of the parish, to the vicars for the time being. The Attorney General v. the Bishop of Ely, 4 Russ. 102.

Decree against a corporation to grant a new lease according to a covenant for perpetual renewal, though the whole of the reserved rent has been for many years applied uniformly to one charitable purpose. Goxna v. the Aldermen and Burgesses of Grantham, 3 Russ. 261.

In a lease for a term of years determinable on the deaths of three persons, it was covenanted that on the death of either of the lives, the lessee should, within twelve months, renew, and pay a fine of nine guineas; and each party bound himself unto the other in a penalty of eighteen guineas, to renew, and to grant and take the new lease respectively; two of the lives died before the lessee made his application to renew, when he offered to pay the fines and a penalty, but the owner of the land refused to renew.

Held, that no accident will entitle a party to renew, unless it could not have been avoided by reasonable diligence.

Held, that the penalty did not give an option to the lessee, and that a direction given by a former owner in his will to renew, only left the trustees to do what the testator himself would have done.

Held, that if the lessee omit to renew on the death of the first life, he is not entitled to renew on the death of the second life.

Held, that communications which have passed between the lessor or solicitors, and other lessees, regarding their renewals, cannot be read in evidence. Reid v. Blagrave, 9 Law J. Chanc. 245.

The assignee of a lease for lives, which contained a covenant for renewal upon the dropping of any life, provided application were made within six months, having omitted, upon the death of one of the cestuis que vie, to apply for a renewal within the six months, filing his bill praying relief, upon the ground that he did not, within the six months, know that the person was dead, or that the deceased person was one of the cestuis que vie named in the lease. The bill was dismissed with costs; because the plaintiff might have known the facts, if he had used reasonable diligence, and acted with ordinary prudence. Harries v. Bryant, 4 Russ. 89.

A testator devised premises, which he held by lease under the dean and chapter of Westminster, to A for life, subject to the payment of all fines and rents as they became due yearly; and he directed that, after A's decease, the premises should be vested in two trustees, who were to manage the same to the best advantage, and were to pay all rents and fines until B should attain his age of twenty-one years, to whom the testator bequeathed all the remaining term and interest, which he had in the lease; the lease was holden at a nominal rent, and contained no covenant to renew; but the custom of the dean and chapter was, to renew every seven years, on receiving a reasonable fine; and at the death of the testator, about thirty years of the term were unexpired:—Held, that A was not bound to renew the lease at any time during her life. Capel v. Wood, 4 Russ. 500.

A lease of lands in Ireland contained a covenant on the part of the lessor for perpetual renewal; and a covenant on the part of the lessee, to pay 1*l.* sterling for every perch of bog, cut otherwise than thereby covenanted, and to be distrained for as additional rent. Upon a bill filed by the assignee of the lease and his mortgagee against the assignee of the lessor, for a specific performance of the covenant for renewal, it appeared that three years before the filing of the bill, a notice had been given by the landlord to the tenant, to name new lives in the place of those which had expired, and to pay the fines with interest, &c.; but in the interval, a correspondence had taken place, from which it was to be collected, that the tenant had always been ready to pay the fine; but that the landlord alleging, by his answer in the suit, supported by evidence, that the tenant had cut large quantities of turf in breach of his covenant, and had also made encroachments upon other lands, refused to renew until those two questions were settled; and although no actual tender of the fines had been made, it was clear from the correspondence that they would have been refused if made.

Held, affirming the decree of the court below, that, under these circumstances, the delay of three years was not, under the Irish Tenantry Act, such gross laches as ought to deprive the tenant of the right of renewal, and work a forfeiture of the lease; but that the landlord ought to be compelled specifically to perform the covenant for renewal. Held, also, that in making this decree for the performance of part of the contract between the parties, it is not necessary for a court of equity to provide for the performance of the other part, namely, the covenant against cutting turf, otherwise than by leaving the landlord at liberty, by the decree upon further directions, to bring an action at law upon that covenant, especially as that liberty had been given by the original decree; and an action brought against the tenant, which abated by his death, and thereupon no application had been made by the landlord to the court of equity for its assistance. Trant v. Dwyer, 2 Bligh, N.S. 11, s. c. 1 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 125.

By a will, a renewable lease was devised to A for life, remainder to B for life, or so long as the said lease should continue, remainder to trustees for sale and division of the produce amongst various persons. C, the husband of A, purchased the life-interest of B, and then obtained a renewal of the lease to himself, for three lives; and died. The personal representative of C was held, by the Court, to be a trustee for those claiming under the will of the original lessee; and was decreed to convey as they should direct, on payment of their respective due portions of the expenses of the renewal; but the price given by C for the life-interest of B was not allowed to be considered as a portion of those expenses, although B was himself the last surviving cestui que vie of the original lease, and therefore was not likely to have renewed. Cridland v. Lunn, 9 Law J. Chanc. 99.

If a tenant for life of an under-lease for eighteen years, granted by a person who himself holds the premises so underlet, along with other property, under a lease for twenty-one years, purchases the interest of his immediate lessor, and obtains from his superior lessor a renewal of the lease thus purchased, the renewed lease is subject, so far as regards the premises which were comprised in the underlease, to the same trusts as would have affected the under-lease, if it had not been merged or had not expired by the effluxion of time.

The same rule holds, though, at the time of the purchase the property was vested in a trustee upon trusts, under which he could not have granted a renewal of the under-lease, and though the tenant for life outlived, by twenty-five years, the time at which the under-lease would have expired by effluxion of time. Powell v. Sonnet, 3 Russ. 556.

(G) Surrender.

[See Surrender.]

The mere cancelling in fact of a lease is not a surrender of the term thereby granted within the Statute of Frauds, which requires such surrender to be by deed or note in writing, or by act or operation of law.

Nor, where such a lease appears to have been once in the possession of the lessee, who entered into possession of the property, will the fact of the lease being produced by the lessor in a cancelled state, unaccompanied by any other evidence, be sufficient to warrant a presumption that there has been a valid surrender. Doe d. Courtail v. Thomas, 7 Law J. K.B. 214, s. c. 9 B. & C. 288, s. c. 4 M. & R. 216.

(H) Forfeiture.

[Doe d. Hannibar v. Watt, 1 M. & R. 694, Dig. Law J. 307.]

By the terms of a lease, the lessee was to insure and keep insured the premises demised, and deposit the policy with the lessor. There was the usual clause of re-entry on non-performance of the covenants. The lessee never insured, but assigned the premises; and the assignee never insured. The lessor distrained for rent due from the assignee; and afterwards brought ejectment for the forfeiture by the not insuring; laying the day of the demise in his declaration of ejectment a few days after he had so distrained:—Held,

1. That the lease was conditional, and therefore, whether the covenant to insure run with the land or not, (so as to subject the assignee to an action) the lessor was entitled to re-enter on the forfeiture for condition broken.

2. That the covenant to insure and keep insured was a continuing covenant; and although the distress for rent was a waiver of the forfaiture up to the time, the lessor might recover for the forfeiture incurred each day afterwards: and therefore the above ejectment was well brought. Doe d. Sir Charles Flower, Bart. v. Peck, 9 Law J. K.B. 60, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 428.

A lease contained a covenant that the lessee should not make certain erections on the premises. There was a clause of re-entry in default of the performance of the covenants, after thirty days' notice; —Held, that this clause only applied to covenants affirmative, to pay rent, to repair, and the like, and not to a negative covenant like the above; and, therefore, that the lessor was not entitled to re-enter after thirty days' notice to remove erections which had been made in breach of the covenant. Doe d. Peck v. Marchetti, 9 Law J. K.B. 126, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 715.

Building lease from A to B. B underlet to C. C was to build houses; but, by his inability to do so, his lease became forfeited to B, and B's lease also became forfeited to A. B assigned all his interest to D, who applied to A for an extension of time to complete the original contract, which was granted.

D brought an ejectment against C, for his breach of covenant, and recovered a verdict.

Motion for an injunction to stay execution of the writ of possession, refused. Hillier v. Parkinson, 9 Law J. Chanc. 156.

A forfeiture of a lease occasioned by the using of the premises, in a manner prohibited by the covenant, is not waived by a subsequent receipt of rent, if the prohibited user be continued afterwards. Doe d. Ambler v. Woodbridge, 7 Law J. K.B. 263, s. c. 9 B. & C. 376, s. c. 4 M. & R. 302.

B, the assignee of certain leases of lands in Ireland, for long terms of years, being in arrear for rent, suffered judgment to be recovered on ejectment by the lessor, and possession of the lands was delivered by writ of habere on the 18th of July 1823. By the Irish Statute, 4 Geo. 1. c. 5. s. 3, a court of equity is empowered to annul the proceedings in ejectment, and restore the possession to the lessee, if a bill in filed, and the amount of rent and costs paid into court, within six calendar months after execution had been executed in ejectment. On the 17th of January 1824, B filed a bill in the Exchequer to redeem the lands, and obtained an order, dated on the 17th of January, and signed by one of the Barons of the Exchequer, to lodge the amount of rent in arrear and costs in the Bank of Ireland. The order was left with the accountant-general on the 17th, after the bank was shut. On Monday the 19th of January, the money was paid in to the bank, and the accountant-general gave a certificate accordingly. A treaty for a compromise then took place, and was for some time pending.

On the 7th of May 1825, on the motion of B, it was ordered that the order for lodging the rent and costs should be entered as of the 17th of January; and that the lodgment of the money should be receipted on that day, instead of the 19th, and that a certificate should be granted accordingly by the accountant-general.

On the 7th of July 1825, the lessor obtained an order to take out of court, without prejudice to the rights of the parties, the rent and costs which had been deposited, and that he might be at liberty to proceed on the recovery of the lands.

Having, under this order, taken the money out of court, the lessor appealed against the order, directing the alteration in the date of the payment of the rent and costs. The order was reversed. Vesey v. Bodkin, 4 Bligh, N.S. 64, s. c. 1 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 456.

(I) Actions.

[Fancy v. Scott, 9 M. & R. 335, Dig. L. J. 308.]

Although the lessee, when sued in covenant by the lessor, cannot dispute the lessor's title, yet, when sued by the assignee of the lessor, he may deny that the lessor had such a title as could pass the right of action to the assignee.

Accordingly, where a person, suing as assignee, declared that A, being seised in fee, demised by deed, and then averred that the lessor devised the reversion to him the plaintiff—the defendant, (who claimed through the lessee,) was allowed to plead that A was not seised in fee. Seymour v. France, 7 Law J. K.B. 18.

Covenant against A and B, on a covenant supposed to be implied as incident to a demise by lease. On production of the lease, it appeared, that, in point of law, A only demised, and that B, who had an equitable interest, merely confirmed:—Held, that the action was not maintainable against A and B. Smith v. Pocklington, 1 C. & J. 445, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 309.

A lease purported to have been signed by the mark of the party; a person proved the hand-writing of the subscribing witness, and that he had gone abroad, and another person proved that the defendant had spoken of the term that he had under the lease:—Held, that this was sufficient proof of the execution of the lease by the defendant. Doe d. Wheeldon v. Paul, 3 C. & P. 613. [Tenterden].

Testator bequeathed to his grandchildren, naming them, the sum of 1,000*l.*, payable to each of them on their attaining twenty-one; and, in case of the death of either of them before that period, the legacy to be divided amongst the survivors:—Held, that the grandchildren were entitled to one sum only of 1,000*l.*, and not each of them to a separate legacy to that amount. Stewart v. Garnett, 3 Sim. 398.

The construction of a will, as to whether a sum to be raised out of the rents and profits of real estate shall be raised by the annual rents and profits, or by sale or mortgage. Wilson v. Halliley, 8 Law J. Chanc. 171, a. c. 1 Russ. & M. 590.

Bequest of land, and of 5*l.* per cent. stock and 3*l.* per cent. stock to trustees, to apply a sufficient part to the support and education of R, the stock to remain in the testator's name, and the surplus of the dividends and rents to accumulate; and when R attained twenty-one, to transfer to her the lands, stock, and accumulations, but if R died under twenty-one, (as happened to be the case,) testator gave his lands to E, without any words of limitation, and his 5*l.* per cent. stock to M, provided they were living at the decease of R, not else. The plaintiffs were the residuary legatees. R died under twenty-one.

Held—That E took the lands in fee.

Held—That M took the capital of the 5*l.* per cent. stock.

Held—That the plaintiffs were entitled to the accumulations of the rents and dividends. Powles v. Jopling, 9 Law J. Chanc. 224.

A direction in a will, that the testator's brother should be his executor to arrange, dispose of, and settle his affairs, and the appointment of the brother to be the guardian of the testator's daughter, an only child, who was afterwards discovered to be illegitimate, does not amount by implication to a bequest of the personal estate in favour of the daughter. Davies v. Davies, 1 Russ. & M. 645.

A testator gave one-third of the residue of his personal estate to trustees, to lay out the same in the purchase of a government annuity for the life of his sister, which annuity he gave to his sister for her sole and separate use and benefit, independent of any husband she might happen to marry, and her receipts to be good discharges; and he declared the annuity to be for her personal benefit and maintenance, without power for her to assign or sell the same by way of anticipation.

Held, that the sister, being a feme sole, was entitled to the capital or to the annuity, at her option; and decree accordingly: but costs paid out of the said one-third. Woodmeston v. Walker, 9 Law J. Chanc. 257.

Testator gave to his daughter and her children 5,000*l.*, 3,000*l.* to be paid in one year after his decease, and 2,000*l.* after the decease of his wife, and appointed A B trustee of those sums for his daughter and her children:—The Court declared the 5,000*l.* to be in trust for the daughter for life, and, after her decease, for all her children, whether born in the testator's lifetime or after his decease. Morse v. Morse, 2 Sim. 485.

A son died before his father, leaving a widow, to whom he gave all his property. The son's estate being insufficient for the payment of his debts, the father, by a codicil to his will, directed his trustees and executors to pay his son's debts, and named the son of his son the residuary devisees and legatees. The true construction of the father's codicil is, that he intended only the payment of such portion of the debts of the son as his son's estate would be insufficient to pay. Walker v. Lodge, 3 Russ. 559.

A testator having by his will given an interest for life in a sum of stock to two persons, and the survivor of them, with remainder to another for life, and afterwards to the children of such other person, by a codicil substitutes an annuity, nearly equal to the amount of the dividends of the stock, in the place of the first gift: the gift in remainder is not accelerated; but its value is to be computed according to the price of stock at the time of the testator's death, when, but for the substitution, the gift of the prior life interest would have taken effect. Davis v. Ross, 1 Russ. & M. 687.

A testator by will gives his moiety of an estate called H, to his sister and her children, and subsequently, by a codicil, which purports to give them the whole of that estate, if he shall possess it at his death, charges it with a sum of money to legatees. At the date of the will and codicil, he was owner of only one moiety of H, but before his death he acquired the other; although the devise fails as to the after-purchased moiety, the charge is good for the whole sum, and equity will make no apportionment. Lushington v. Sewell, 1 Russ. & M. 169.

(B) Who take as Legatees.

[Hayes v. Hayes, 4 Russ. 311, Dig. Law J. 312. Hardwick v. Thurston, 4 Russ. 381, Dig. Law J. 312.]

Where a pecuniary legacy is given by a testator to his heir, the word is to be understood in its legal and ordinary sense, unless controlled by the context of the will; and the heir-at-law will take the legacy, not the next of kin.

In such a case it makes no difference, that there are three co-heirs. Mounsey v. Blamire, 4 Russ. 384.

A testator bequeathed "to the two sons and the daughter of A B 50*l.* each." At the date of the will, and the death of the testator, A B had one son and four daughters:—each of these five children is entitled to a legacy of 50*l.* Harrison v. Harrison, 1 Russ. & M. 72, a. c. 1 Tam. 273.

A testator, after devising an estate to his son-in-law B, gives the residue of his real and personal estate to his daughter S B for her natural life, for her sole and separate use and benefit, and so as the same should not be subject to the debts of her said husband; he then gave, after the decease of his said daughter, all the rest, residue, and remainder of his real estates, of what nature or kind soever, unto her second, third, fourth, and every younger child or children, share and share alike, as tenants in common, with a limitation over in case his daughter should die leaving no issue, or if her second and other children did not attain his, her, or their respective age or ages of twenty-one years, and were not married before such age, with the consent of his son and daughter, and the survivor of them; and he declared his will and meaning to be, that his son and daughter, or the survivor of them, should be subscribing witnesses or witness at the wedding of such child or children that should so marry before his, her, or their respective age or ages of twenty-one years, otherwise such child or children should not have or receive any benefit from his will. B died; and the daughter married a second husband:—Held, that the children of the second marriage were entitled, as well as the children of the first; that the shares did not vest till the children attained twenty-one years, or married with consent. Critchett v. Taynton, 8 Law J. Chanc. 143, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 541.

The term grandchildren, in a clause of a will directing legacies in a given event, extended so as to include great-grandchildren who had been previously named. Strutt v. Finch, 7 Law J. Chanc. 176.

A bequest to the children of the testator's late aunts, Rachael Walker and Diana Walker, who should be living at his death. The testator had no aunt nor any relative named Diana Walker; but he had a cousin, the daughter of his aunt Rachael, named Dinah Walker, who married Harrison long before the date of the will, and survived the testator. Evidence proved that the testator called his cousin by her maiden name of Walker after her marriage:—Held, that the children of Dinah Harrison were not entitled as the children of his late aunt, Diana Walker. Shearman v. Jennett, 9 Law J. Chanc. 148.

A testator, having one nephew and one niece, and eight great-nephews and nieces, living at his death, gave one-tenth of his residue to his nephew, and another to his niece, and the remainder to trustees in trust for their children at twenty-one: and he empowered his trustees to apply all or any part of their respective shares for their advancement:—Held, that all the great-nephews and nieces born before the eldest attained twenty-one, though after the testator's death, were entitled to shares. Titcomb v. Butler, 3 Sim. 417.

A bequest by a husband to his "beloved wife," not mentioning her by name, applies exclusively to the individual who answers the description at the date of the will, and is not to be extended to an after-taken wife. Garratt v. Niblock, 1 Russ. & M. 529.

(C) What Property passes.

[Kendall v. Kendall, 4 Russ. 360, Dig. Law J. 313. Newburgh v. Ayre, 4 Russ. 454, Dig. Law. J. 313.]

Devise of "one moiety of the rents, issues, and profits of my estate named I, in the parish of M, to be divided equally amongst my grandchildren; the other moiety of the rents, issues, and profits of my said estate I give to K. and his heirs:"—Held, that the grandchildren take the fee as tenants in common, in a moiety of the estate. Stewart v. Garnett, 3 Sim. 398.

A testator, after giving several annuities for lives, each gift commencing with the word "item," proceeds thus: "Item, I give to my wife 1,200*l.* a year during her life, and also my furniture and house, and after her decease to S S and his heirs:"—Held, that S S was entitled to the fund for payment of the annuity, as well as to the house and furniture. Oldman v. Slater, 3 Sim. 85.

I B, at his death, had a balance due from his banker, and was also entitled to a share of the balance due to A B, from his banker, A B having received monies for him from time to time, and with his knowledge paid them to his own bankers, as his own monies; but I B had no concern with A B's bankers, nor did they know that he was interested in the monies paid by A B. I B bequeaths all his money in the hands of any banker:—Held, that his balance at his own banker's, and also his share of A B's balance, will pass; and that evidence is admissible to shew that he so intended. Benson v. Whittam, Heming v. Whittam, 2 Sim. 493.

A bequest of a cabinet, with whatever it contains "except money," will not pass a promissory note payable to the testatrix, of a date anterior to the will, and which, at her death, was found in the cabinet. Read v. Stewart, 4 Russ. 69.

A bequest of "property in the English funds" will not pass India Stock or Exchequer bills.

Stock standing in the testator's name at the time of his death, and which his bankers had purchased with monies received by them on his account, without any express authority for their so doing, will not pass by a bequest of the testator's stock. Johnson v. Digby, 8 Law J. Chanc. 38.

A bequest of household furniture and other household effects in a dwelling-house and premises, comprises all property placed there, either for ornament, or for use or consumption in it. Cole v. Fitzgerald, 3 Russ. 301.

A testator by his will bequeaths his leasehold messuages, together with all his pictures, prints, drawings, or paintings in miniature or enamel, with all his gold and silver coins, medals, watches, and trinkets, of every kind whatsoever; as also his coaches, carriages, harness, and furniture to the same belonging; also, all and singular the fixtures appurtenant to his said leasehold messuage, together with the household furniture, plate, linen, wines, liquors, and other his estate and effects whatsoever, in and about the same, and that should be in his possession at the time of his decease, or in and about his said dwelling-house, or the out-houses and offices appurtenant thereto, and by him held, used, occupied, and enjoyed therewith: by a codicil he makes a different disposition of the house, "with all its furniture and appurtenances thereunto belonging:"—Held, that pictures placed in the house as ornamental furniture, and plate (including plate deposited for safe custody at a banker's), and linen, passed by the codicil; but that the disposition of the other articles mentioned in the will, not being household furniture, was not affected by the codicil. Cremorne v. Antrobus, 7 Law J. Chanc. 68.

A testatrix directs all her plate and jewels to be sold for the payment of her debts, except Lady Mary Duncan's ring set with diamonds, which she desires may be restored to her; and she bequeaths to her three cousins the remainder of her rings, and all her trinkets, necklaces of every description, pearls, garnets, cornelians, and watches:—Held, that a diamond necklace and cross, and diamond rings, did not pass to the cousins, but were to be included as jewels, among the jewels that were to be sold.

By a codicil, the testatrix gave to her niece all her trinkets and pearls, and several jewel ornaments particularly described:—Held, that a pearl necklace passed to the three cousins, under the bequest of necklaces, and not to the niece, under the bequest of pearls. Attorney General v. Harley, 7 Law J. Chanc. 31.

A testator (a sculptor) by his will gave articles used in his profession, by description, some of which were very obscurely written:—Held, that the articles so obscurely described would not pass. Goblet v. Beechey, 9 Law J. Chanc. 200.

(D) What Interest vests.

[Butter v. Ommaney, 4 Russ. 70, Dig. Law J. 314.]

Bequest to a wife for her own use, and if she make no disposition thereof, either by expenditure, sale, transfer, assignment, gift, or otherwise, in her lifetime, or by her last will and testament, then over:—Held to be a bequest by which the property bequeathed vested in the wife absolutely. Bourn v. Gibbs, 8 Law J. Chanc. 151, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 614.

Bequest of 40*l.* per annum to A for life, and after her decease to B or his heirs:—Held, that "or" must be construed disjunctively; and that therefore B did not take an absolute interest in the annuity. Girdlestone v. Doe, 2 Sim. 295.

A testator bequeathed all his personal property, not before disposed of by his will, unto his trustees, in trust for his five sons, "and their respective issue (if any), such issue to take per stirpes, and not per capita, to be divided amongst them in equal shares and proportions; the shares of such of them as shall have attained the age of twenty-one to be paid them respectively forthwith after my decease, and the shares of such of them as shall be under the age of twenty-one years to be paid to them when and as they shall respectively attain such age:"—Held, that this bequest was an absolute gift, to each of the sons, of the fifth part of the property thus bequeathed; and that, if any of the sons had died before the testator, the issue of such son would take his share by substitution. Pearson v. Stephen, 2 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 328.

(b) For Life.

[Reith v. Seymour, 4 Russ. 263, Dig. Law J. 314.]

(c) Tenancy in Common.

By will, after giving a life-interest to A, in stock, "and after her decease I give and devise the said stock to her children when they attain the age of twenty-one years:"—Held, that the children who attained twenty-one took vested interests as tenants in common. Only two children attained twenty-one, one of whom died in the lifetime of the tenant for life; and, on a bill filed by the survivor for the whole stock, a general demurrer by the representatives of the other was allowed. Woodgate v. Atkins, 9 Law J. Chanc. 166.

(E) Survivorship.

"Survivors or survivor" construed in one part of a clause to mean "others or other," though in another part of the same clause the same words are used in their literal meaning, and though, in other parts of the will, the distinction between "survivors or survivor," and "others or other," is carefully observed. Earl Winterton v. Crawford, 8 Law J. Chanc. 134, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 407.

A testator gives a fund to his wife for life, and, after her death, to five persons, A, B, C, D, and E, equally; and he directs, that in case of the death of any of these five persons, without lawful issue, before his or her share should become payable, the share of him, her, or them, so dying, should be equally divided between the survivors of them. A died, leaving a son; then B died, leaving issue, who survived the tenant for life; then the son of A died, without issue; then C died, without issue; next D died, leaving issue; and lastly, the tenant for life died:—Held, that, upon the death of A's son, A's share went over; that C's accrued share of A's original share did not go over, on C's death without issue; that the shares, which went over, accrued only to such of the five persons as were living at the time of the accrual. Crowder v. Stone, 7 Law J. Chanc. 93, s. c. 3 Russ. 217.

(F) Specific.

Testatrix bequeathed to A B and C D "50*l.* each of Bank Long Annuities stock, now standing in my name:"—Held, that each of the legatees was entitled to a specific legacy of 50*l.* Long Annuities; and that evidence of the state of the testatrix's assets was not admissible. Boys v. Williams, 5 Sim. 563.

(G) Accumulative.

A, by each of two several codicils to his will, directed his just debts to be paid, and in particular a debt of 12*l.* By the one of them, he gave 100*l.* to a charity; and by the other, he gave 200*l.* to the same charity:—Held, that the legacies were not accumulative, and that the latter legacy was only a substitution of the former. Sevinon v. Barber, 1 Tam. 14.

Equal sums given to the same person by a will and codicil,—held, from the character and objects of the latter, to be substitutional, and not accumulative, although the legacy given by the codicil was only conditional. Fraser v. Byng, 1 Russ. & M. 90.

A testatrix by her will gave to T L 50*s.* a month during his life, in lieu of his giving up all other notes and claims; and, by a codicil, she gave him 3*l.* a month during his life, and concluded by directing that all other things should be paid and done as directed by her will:—Held, that T L was entitled to both the monthly payments. Lord v. Sutcliffe, 8 Sim. 273.

(H) Vested.

The testator directed his personalty to be invested for the sole use and maintenance of his daughter until she arrived at twenty-one; and when she attained twenty-one, the remainder to be paid to the daughter. She died under twenty-one:—Held, a vested interest. Ross v. Sowerby, 1 Tam. 376.

A testator gave to his wife 300*l.* a year, and an annuity of 100*l.* a year for each of his three children during their respective minorities, for their maintenance, with a direction, that upon the death or marriage of his wife, the 300*l.* a year should be divided among his three children in like manner as his other effects; and, subject thereto, he gave all the residue of his personal estate to his three children and the survivors or survivor of them:—Held, that they took a vested interest in their respective shares at the death of the testator. Bass v. Russell, 9 Law J. Chanc. 177, s. c. 1 Tam. 18.

Vesting of legacies, where, by the bequest therein, they were given to be paid on a day certain, "and in case any of the legatees should die before that day, that their legacies should be given to whomsoever of his or her children to whom he or she should bequeath it." Tolner v. Marriott, 9 Law J. Chanc. 14.

A testator devises and bequeaths his property, after his wife's death, to trustees, who are to invest it in securities, and to pay the interest to his daughters, Jane and Eliza, in equal shares, and also to pay to, or apply for the benefit of, his grandson Edmund (Eliza's eldest son), 200*l.* annually, when he attains twenty-one; and before that period, such part of the 200*l.* bequeathed to him as they may judge proper. In a subsequent part of his will he gives his daughters power to dispose of the moieties of his property, of which they respectively took the interest, in favour of their respective children or grandchildren, except that 4,000*l.*, part of Eliza's share, out of which the interest to the grandson is to arise, and which is to be that grandson's property; and he directs that, in case either of his daughters shall die without leaving issue, the fortune of the one so dying shall go over for the benefit of the other and her children, and she shall have the power of limiting an annuity of 100*l.* per annum, out of her moiety, to a surviving husband. The grandson Edmund attained twenty-one, and died in the lifetime of his mother:—Held, that the annuity of 200*l.* a year ceased upon his death; that the 4,000*l.* did not become a vested interest in him. Livesey v. Livesey, 7 Law J. Chanc. 120.

(I) Contingent.

[Smart v. Clark, 3 Russ. 365, Dig. Law J. 316. Newburgh v. Ayre, 4 Russ. 454, Dig. Law J. 316.]

Where a testator gives an annuity to A for life, and after A's death to B, if she be a widow, and not otherwise:—Held, that if B were not a widow at the death of A, she could not take the annuity. Bartleman v. Murchison, 9 Law J. Chanc. 60.

Bequest to H D, for his own use; and in case he should die in the testator's lifetime, or afterwards, without having any child or children, then over. H D survived the testator, and died without having had a child:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Stone v. Maule, 2 Sim. 490.

A testator bequeathed the dividends of certain stock to his nephew, solely for the maintenance of himself and family, declaring that such dividends should not be capable of being charged with his debts or engagements, and that he should have no power to charge, assign, anticipate, or encumber them; but that if he should attempt so to do, or if the dividends, by bankruptcy, insolvency, or otherwise, should be assigned or become payable to any other person, or be or become applicable to any other purpose, than for the maintenance of the nephew and his family, his interest therein should cease, and the stock be held upon trusts for his children. Long subsequently to the date of the will, and a few weeks prior to a codicil confirming it, the nephew took the benefit of the Lords' Act (1 Geo. 4. c. 119.) in the usual way; and some years afterwards the testator died:—Held, that this insolvency operated as a forfeiture of the life interest given to the nephew by the will. Yarnold v. Moorhouse, 1 Russ. & M. 364.

(K) Conditional.

[Hemming v. Gurney, 1 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 35, Dig. Law J. 316.]

A testator gives a specific bequest to A, and directs, that, in consideration of the bequest, A shall pay his debts; and makes A his residuary legatee and executor: the payment of the debts is a condition annexed to the specific bequest; and, if A accept the bequest, he is bound to pay the debts, though they should far exceed the amount of the property bequeathed to him. Messenger v. Andrews, 4 Russ. 478.

A testator gave to his daughter a legacy of 10,000*l.*, "payable and to be paid unto her in manner following, viz. a sum of 5,000*l.* upon her marriage under twenty-one, with the consent of his trustees, and the sum of 5,000*l.* within two years afterwards. The daughter married under twenty-one, without consent of the trustees; and, her first husband dying, she married a second husband at the distance of thirty years from the first marriage. Quære, if, on such second marriage, she became entitled to the 10,000*l.* Clifford v. Beaumont, 4 Russ. 325.

Where a testator directs a legacy to be paid, if the legatees claim within a given time:—Held, that a bill filed for the administration of the assets is a claim sufficient to satisfy the words of the will. Tolner v. Marriott, 9 Law J. Chanc. 14.

(L) On what Property chargeable.

[Kirke v. Kirke, 4 Russ. 435, Dig. Law J. 318.]

Construction of a will as to the question, whether the proceeds of real estate were made the primary fund for the payment of certain legacies. Ricketts v. Ladley, 3 Russ. 418.

Testator by his will, gave an annuity, payable out of his freehold, copyhold, and personal estate, and by a codicil, not duly attested, revoked the annuity: Held, that it was a subsisting charge upon the freehold. Mortimer v. West, 2 Sim. 276.

A, by his will, limited his lands to E, his daughter, and H, her husband, for their lives, &c., remainder to their sons successively in tail, remainder to M, his daughter, and F, her husband, for their lives, &c.; remainder to their sons successively in tail; with divers remainders over, including C and his sons, and their issue; and he declared and provided by the will, that in case M or F, or the sons or sum of F and M, or either of them, should become entitled to the estate under the limitations of the will, a sum of 2,000l. should be charged on the lands in remainder, for the use of the younger children of F, in certain specific proportions. E and H died without issue. The sons of M and F died before the estate became vested in them; and after the death of M and F, and the expiration of the preceding life estates, G a grandson of M and F, became entitled under the limitations of the will to an estate tail.—Held, in the court below, and on appeal, that the lands having vested in a grandson, and not in a son of M and F, were nevertheless liable to the charge created by the will in favour of the younger children of F. Gore v. Lord Lorton, 2 Bligh, N. S. 286, s. c. 1 Dow & Cl. A.C. 190.

J. S. by a will properly executed, gave a sum of 4,000l. to be laid out in government or real securities, in trust for L. the wife of S. for her separate use for her life, remainder to J. for his life; remainder to the children of L. by S. he then devised certain lands and tenements specified to various persons named in the will, and after bequeathing several pecuniary legacies, he concluded thus:—"And I do hereby expressly charge and make liable my real and personal estate to and with the payment of the aforesaid several legacies."—Held, reversing the decree of the court below, that the lands specifically devised, were not liable to the payment of the legacies on a deficiency of the personal estate. Spong v. Spong, 3 Bligh, N.S. 84, s. c. 1 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 365.

A testator had covenanted, that on his decease 3,000l. should be paid to trustees on trust to pay the interest to the husband of his daughter A for life, remainder to his daughter A for life, remainder to his children, &c.: by his will he gave a third part of his residuary estate to A for life, remainder to her children, and declared that his estate was not to be charged with the payment of the 3,000l. or interest thereon. A died without issue; upon whose event the share of the residue, given to her and her children, was limited over to B: the issue of A, who took nothing under the will, claimed the annuity:—Held, that the annuity was to be borne exclusively by that share of the residue, which had been given to his wife for life, and was now enjoyed by B. Winterton v. Crawford, 8 Law J. Chanc. 134, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 407.

Where a testator creates a mixed and general fund from real and personal estate, and directs that fund to be applied in payment of debts and legacies, the real and the personal estate must contribute, in proportion to their relative amounts, to the payment of the debts and legacies; and if some of the legacies fail by lapse or otherwise, that part of the fund, which would have been applicable to those purposes, been unappropriated, belongs, as far as it is composed of real estate, to the heir, and, as far as it is composed of personal estate, to the next of kin. Roberts v. Walker, 1 Russ. & M. 752.

(M) Interest upon.

A testator gave legacies to illegitimate children, provided they attained twenty-one; with a bequest over if they died under that age; and appointed trustees and guardians of the children, earnestly requesting those trustees and guardians to take care of the interests of the children:—Held, that the children were entitled to interest on their legacies during their minority. Mills v. Roberts, 8 Law J. Chanc. 141, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 555, s. c. 1 Tam. 66.

A testator gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees, directing them to convert it into money, and invest the proceeds in government or real securities, of which they were to stand possessed, upon trust for A during her life, and, after her death for B. The trustees permitted a share, which the testator had in an Indian loan, bearing interest at 10*l.* per cent., to remain for several years on that security, during which time they paid to A the interest at 10*l.* per cent., which it yielded annually; and, the loan being afterwards paid off, they invested the money in the 3*l.* per cents., at a time when the funds were so low that the amount of stock purchased was considerably greater, than if the conversion had taken place at the end of a year from the testator's death:—Held, that the tenant for life was not entitled to the actual interest which the money yielded, while it remained on the Indian security, but only to the dividends of so much 3*l.* per cent. stock as would have been purchased with it at the end of a year from the testator's death.

That the trustees ought to be charged with the whole of the stock actually purchased, and all the sums actually received in respect of the Indian rate of interest; and that they ought to be allowed in their discharge as payments to the tenant for life, not the sums which they had in fact paid her, but only a sum equal to what she would have received for dividends, if the money had been transferred from the Indian security and invested in the 3*l.* per cent. stock, at the end of a year from the testator's death. Dimes v. Scott, 4 Russ. 195.

(N) Investment of.

Where an annuity is given with a direction for purchase, if the annuitant does not waive his or her right, and dies before the purchase is made, his or her personal representatives are entitled to the purchase-money.

Accordingly A directed a government annuity to be purchased within a given time, for the benefit of his wife; the executors request a delay, to which the wife assents, and she dies before the annuity is purchased:—Held, that her representatives are entitled to the amount for which the annuity could be purchased. Dawson v. Hearn, 8 Law J. Chanc. 153, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 606, s. c. 9 Law J. Chanc. 249.

A testator directs a sum of 4*l.* per cent. bank annuities to be invested in the names of his executors, in trust to accumulate during the life of his daughter, and after her death, to be transferred to her children: at the date of his will he was possessed of a large sum of old 4*l.* per cent. bank annuities, and also of a small sum of new reduced 4*l.* per cent. bank annuities; the former stock was converted in the testator's lifetime into 3½*l.* per cent. stock:—Held, that the trustees were bound to purchase the specified amount of a stock bearing 4*l.* per cent. interest, and that the legacy would not be satisfied by purchasing the specified amount of 3½*l.* per cent. stock. Banks v. Sladen, 8 Law J. Chanc. 101, s. c. 1 Tam. 407, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 216.

A testator gave the yearly sum of 2,000l. sterling money to his wife and daughter during their joint lives, and to his wife after the death of his daughter, and to trustees, to the separate use of his daughter, during her life, and, after her death, upon the same trusts as were declared of the yearly sum of 3,000*l.* He then gave the yearly sum of 3,000*l.*, to issue and arise out of and from the dividends of a sufficient quantity of stock in the navy 5*l.* per cent. annuities, to be appropriated and invested in the names of his trustees for that purpose, to his daughter for life, to her separate use, and after her death to her children; and, in a subsequent part of his will, he directed his executors to appropriate and invest in their names such a quantity of stock in the navy annuities as should be fully sufficient to answer the payment of the yearly sums of 2,000*l.* and 3,000*l.*; and, subject to his debts and these legacies, he gave the residue of his real and personal estate to his son; the executors invested a sufficient sum in the purchase of 100,000*l.* navy 5*l.* per cent. stock, the dividends of which were paid to the daughter and widow: that stock being afterwards reduced to 4*l.* per cent.:—Held, that the daughter and widow were not entitled to more than the dividends of the appropriated stock, reduced as they had been. Kendall v. Russell, 8 Law J. Chanc. 108, s. c. 3 Sim. 424.

(O) Abatement.

Rule to be followed, where legatees and annuitants are to abate proportionally, in making the abatement. Long v. Hughes, 7 Law J. Chanc. 105.

A testator gives charitable legacies, charged on a mixed fund of realty and personalty, and gives the residue to charity:—Held, that all the charitable legacies fail in the ratio of the real to the personal estate, and that the deficiency ought not to be made up out of the residue of personalty. Patten v. Smith, 8 Law J. Chanc. 132.

Where a testator gives to three different persons three leasehold estates, one of which is mortgaged, and directs that the mortgage shall be paid out of his residuary personal estate, which proves insufficient for that purpose, the legatee of the mortgaged leasehold takes it cum onere, and the legatees of the two other leaseholds shall not contribute towards the payment of the mortgage debt. Halliwell v. Tanner, 1 Russ. & M. 633.

A testator, by his will, gave certain annuities, and directed that the sums set apart to secure them should, as the annuitants died, sink into the residue of his personal estate. By a codicil to his will, he stated, that in case his property would not provide an income equal to the annuities, they should be rateably reduced. His estate was deficient, and the annuities were rateably reduced. Upon the death of any annuitant, the sum set apart to secure the reduced annuity, will belong to the residuary legatees, and is not to be applied to increase the reduced annuities to the amount given by the will. Farmer v. Mills, 4 Russ. 86.

(P) Payment.

Payment of a legacy decreed to a married woman, "whose receipt was to be a discharge to the executor, notwithstanding coverture," her husband (a bankrupt) and his provisional assignees being first cited. Norris v. Hemingway, 1 Hag. Ec. 4.

A sum of money being left to the executors, in trust to invest and pay the interest to A for life, and after A's death to divide the principal among his issue, on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one, with benefit of survivorship till that age. A being dead, his only three children majors, and the shares of two of them paid over, the Court will proceed, in a suit of subtraction of legacy against the executor, to enforce payment of the third's share, holding that the character of trustee is at an end, and that of executor alone subsisting. Grignion v. Grignion, 1 Hag. Ec. 535.

Legacy given to be paid within one year, without interest, and, in case of default or refusal, devise of life estate. The year expired; and on a bill filed, the Court decreed a sale of the land to raise the legacy—interest from the end of the year, and costs of the suit. Bell v. Skelton, 9 Law J. Chanc. 214.

Where the existence and amount of a testator's debts are contingent, and depend upon the result of legal proceedings before a foreign tribunal, which are not likely to be speedily settled; the Court, in administering his assets, will not be induced, by that circumstance, to direct an appropriation of the fund in court to answer pecuniary legacies, subject to such demands as creditors may eventually establish.

If, in a suit to administer a testator's assets, it clearly appears that a surplus will remain, after discharging all his debts and liabilities, although the exact amount of the surplus cannot be ascertained for a considerable time, the Court will, by anticipation, direct proportional payments to be made to pecuniary legatees, as far as that can be done with safety to the creditors.

Principles on which such anticipated payments are to be applied in reduction of the claims of the legatees. Thomas v. Montgomery, 1 Russ. & M. 729.

In the progress of a suit for the administration of a testator's assets, which was more than sufficient to pay the legacies with interest, it was ordered that the Master should ascertain one-fourth part of the legacies and interest, and that the same should be paid out of a fund in the cause:—Held, that the payment ought to be applied, first, in discharge of the whole of the interest on the legacies, and then in the reduction of one-fourth of the principal. Thomas v. Montgomery, 2 Sim. 348.

A testator makes his will in Ireland prior to the act of 6 Geo. 4. c. 79. for assimilating the English and Irish currency; and dies after that act:—Held, that an annuity given by the will was to be paid in Irish currency. Holmes v. Holmes, 8 Law J. Chanc. 157, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 660.

A testator, domiciled in Jamaica, gave legacies in Jamaica currency to J C, H C, and M C, persons also domiciled in that island, and desired them to be paid out of the money due to him on certain bonds, which the will specified. At his death, which happened in Scotland in 1790, no such bonds were to be found; but J C was then indebted to his estate upon other bonds, in a sum which exceeded the value of his legacy, and which, a year after the testator's death, including interest, was equal to the amount of the penalties. In 1794, actions were brought in Jamaica upon those bonds, by the testator's personal representative there, and judgments recovered against J C for the full penalties and [illegible] unsatisfied. [illegible] testator's death the legatees [illegible] in Jamaica, [illegible] their legacies [illegible] 1817. In the year 1818, H. C. and I. [illegible] respective legacies to the plaintiff, who was the personal representative of I. C., the [illegible] testator's [illegible] the bill for the purpose of [illegible] interest:—Held, that as they were payable [illegible] in this country, their value was [illegible] according to the standard par of exchange between Jamaica and British currency, and [illegible] according to the actual rate at the time of payment.

[illegible] considered as having been paid [illegible] the amount out of the bond [illegible] amount was to be deducted, [illegible] there are made from the [illegible] upon the bonds, as at the [illegible] after the death of the testator; and interest was [illegible] on the balance till [illegible] for which the judgments were recovered, and no further.

[illegible] could not be allowed [illegible] which the plaintiff [illegible] and that the assigned [illegible] circumstances, and after the [illegible] seven years, without demand, ought [illegible] to have been satisfied. [illegible] 9 Law J. Chanc. 234, s. c. [illegible]

(Q) Ademption.

[illegible] will, gave 300*l.* bank stock and 500*l.* [illegible] trust for his daughter, then unmarried, [illegible] after her decease upon trust [illegible] appoint; in default, for [illegible]. After the execution of his [illegible] marriage of his daughter, he gave her [illegible] a sum of 300*l.* bank stock, [illegible] for her life, then for her husband for [illegible] amongst the children:—[illegible] was an ademption of the legacy, [illegible] the daughter took less under [illegible] than by the original bequest. [illegible] 9 Law J. Chanc. 91.

[illegible] 10,000*l.* to trustees, in trust [illegible] the interest to his daughter for life, provided [illegible] married, one moiety of the 10,000*l.* [illegible] her or her husband, and that the [illegible] should be held in trust, to pay the interest [illegible] for life, and, after her decease, [illegible] her children; and if she had no children, [illegible] the residue of his personal estate, [illegible] to the two sons. The daughter married [illegible] the testator's lifetime, and the testator [illegible] in trust for his daughter for life, for [illegible] son, and, after her decease, in trust for [illegible] husband for life, and, after the decease of the survivor [illegible] in trust for the children of the marriage, as [illegible] husband and wife should jointly appoint; and, [illegible] such joint appointment, then as the [illegible] should appoint; and in default of any appointment, [illegible] in trust for the issue of the marriage [illegible] failure of such issue, then in trust for the issue of the testator living at the death of the survivor of the husband and wife:—Held, that the provision made by the settlement was a satisfaction of the legacy. Platt v. Platt, 3 Sim. 503.

The same rule of presumption applies between persons standing in loco parentis et filiæ, as between parent and child. Where a provision is made by will, and afterwards a provision is made by a settlement, on the marriage of the party intended to be benefited by the will, parol evidence is admissible to show that the settlor had placed himself in loco parentis, and what was his intention as to provision: and the Court held, that the settlement was a satisfaction of the provision intended by the will. Booker v. Allen, 9 Law J. Chanc. 130.

A testator, domiciled in Jamaica, gave by will in 1768, legacies in Jamaica currency to three persons domiciled there, with a direction that they should be paid out of certain monies due to him on bond. In 1790, he died in Scotland, and there was no such bond to be found. A, one of the legatees, was indebted to him upon other bonds, the penal sums of which, with interest from a year after the testator's decease, were equal to the amount of the legacy. Actions were brought in 1794, in Jamaica, by the representatives of the testator, upon the bonds due from A, and judgment had for the full penal sums and costs: but no execution was levied. Before the actions in Jamaica, all the three legatees came to England, and they never returned. In 1818, two of the legatees (who had claimed their legacies for the first time a year before) assigned their legacies to the plaintiff, who was the personal representative of A, the other legatee. In 1821, administration to the effects of the testator was taken out in England, and there the bill was filed for payment of the legacies:—Held, that the legacies were not to be considered as ademed. Campbell v. Graham, 9 Law J. Chanc. 234, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 453.

A gift of a sum of money to one, to be paid out of the produce of a real estate, directed to be sold, followed by a gift to others, of the residue of that produce, is substantially a gift of the whole estate, and not a gift of legacies, with a collateral charge upon the estate; and these gifts are ademed, if the testator sell the estate in his lifetime. Newbold v. Roadknight, 1 Russ. & M. 677, s. c. 1 Tam. 492.

(R) Lapsed.

[Law v. Thompson, 4 Russ. 92, Dig. Law Journ. 320.]

A legacy was given to the separate use of a married woman during the joint lives of her and her husband, and in case she survived him, to her absolutely, but if she did not survive him, to such person as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment, to her next of kin, exclusive of her husband: she died in the lifetime of her husband and the testator:—Held, that the legacy lapsed. Baker v. Hanbury, 3 Russ. 340.

A testator gave the residue of his estate to three persons for life; remainder to his two nephews, share and share alike; in case either of them died without issue before his share became payable, his share was to go to the survivor: one of the nephews died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the share did not lapse, but went to the survivor. Humphreys

v. Howes, 8 Law J. Chanc. 165, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 639, s. c. 1 Tam. 497.

Under a bequest of stock to A for life, and after the decease of A, to the testator's great grandchildren, share and share alike, if they were living at the time of A's death; but that they should not receive any part of the capital till they arrived at twenty-one. But if any one or all of the said children should die before they arrived at the age of twenty-one years, the shares or part of those so dying should go to B and C, share and share alike:—Held, that the attaining twenty-one was not confined to the event of surviving A; and therefore, that on the decease of one of the children, in the lifetime of A, under twenty-one, the share of such child passed to B and C, and did not lapse so as to go to the testator's residuary legatee. Goodchild v. Fenton, 3 Y. & J. 481.

Testatrix gave her real and personal estate to trustees, for sale; and directed that the proceeds of realty should be considered as personalty—that, out of monies arising from the sale, and other her personal estate, her legacies should be paid; and gave the residue of personalty and of money arising from sale of realty, to A for life, with remainder over:—Held, that the real estate was not absolutely converted into personalty; and that the legacies which lapsed belonged to the heir-at-law, as not being so converted. Amphlett v. Parke, 9 Law J. Chanc. 161.

(S) VOID.

[Attorney General v. Mill, 3 Russ. 328, Dig. Law J. 320, affirmed 2 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 393. Emanuel v. Constable, 3 Russ. 436, Dig. Law J. 320. Prichard v. Arbouin, 3 Russ. 456, Dig. Law J. 320. Hayes v. Hayes, 4 Russ. 311, Dig. Law J. 320. Palmer v. Holford, 4 Russ. 403, Dig. Law J. 320.]

A bequest of a sum of money to pay off a debt secured, by an equitable charge only, upon a meeting-house, is void. Waterhouse v. Holmes, 2 Sim. 62.

Where a testator, who has given his personal estate to charitable uses, contracts to sell real estate, but the sale is not completed in his lifetime, his lien upon the estate for the amount of the purchase-money, is an interest in land, within the Statute of Mortmain; and the purchase-money will not pass by his will to a charity. Harrison v. Harrison, 1 Russ. & M. 71, s. c. 1 Tam. 273.

Bequest to charitable purposes, of money secured on mortgage and judgment, void, except as to legacies for life specially named. Testator directed his executors to lay out his personal estate in the funds, and pay the interest to A, B, C, and D, for lives equally; after the death of any one, her share to be received by any widow answering particular description, to be appointed by the vicar for the time being of N, and so that always four persons answering such description should receive the bounty for life. Part of the personal estate consisted of a debt due to testator on mortgage, and a debt due to him upon a warrant of attorney, on which judgment was entered up during his life:—Held, that the bequest quoad the mortgage and judgment) was within the Mortmain Act, and void; but that A, B, C, and D, should take for life as being specifically named. Collinson v. Peter, Collinson v. Knibb, 9 Law J. Chanc. 158.

A school-house, built prior to the 9 Geo. 2. c. 36, on waste of a manor given by the lord for that purpose, and paid for by subscriptions from the lord of the manor and other parishioners, and never subsequently used, otherwise than as a public school-house, is so dedicated to charity, and in mortmain, that a bequest for the purpose of repairing and enlarging it, and of providing a salary for a schoolmaster, is a valid legacy. Ingleby v. Dobson, 4 Russ. 342.

A testator, who had long resided in India, gave a legacy "to T P, who resided at A when I left England, or to his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns." T P died in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the bequest over was void for uncertainty. Waite v. Templer, 2 Sim. 524.

A legacy to a witness to a will relating to personal estate only, is not void under 25 Geo. 2. c. 6. Foster v. Banbury, 3 Sim. 40.

A testator gave an annuity to a person for life, and after his death, to the eldest surviving son of A, and failing the male issue of A, to the daughters of A living at the demise of such male issue: at the death of the tenant for life of the annuity, A had no son living, but he had daughters:—Held, that the gift to them was valid, and that they were entitled to the annuity. Murray v. Addenbrooke, 8 Law J. Chanc. 79, s. c. 4 Russ. 407.

A testator gives personalty to his daughter for life to her separate use, remainder to her children who should attain twenty-three:—Held, that the gift to the children is too remote.

The daughter taking the corpus of the fund as the sole next of kin of the testator:—Held, that she could not, during coverture, part with her interest in the corpus. Bull v. Pritchard, 7 Law J. Chanc. 41.

A testatrix gives the residue of her personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay the dividends to A during her life, and after her death, to apply the dividends to the maintenance, or accumulate them for the benefit of A's children, till they respectively attain twenty-two, at which age each of them is to be entitled to his or her share of the principal; with limitations over of the shares of such of them as die under twenty-two:—Held, that the gift to A's children, and the limitations over, are void, as being too remote. Vawdry v. Geddes, 8 Law J. Chanc. 63, s. c. 1 Tam. 361, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 203.

A testatrix, by her will, limits personal property to her children for life, remainder to her grandchildren, in such words as would include all grandchildren, whether in esse at her death, or born afterwards: by a codicil, she directs the shares of the grandchildren to be settled on them for life, and afterwards to revert to their issue; but, in default of issue, they were to dispose of their respective shares as they thought proper:—Held, that the limitations to the great-grandchildren were too remote, and that the grandchildren retained the absolute interests given them by the will. Arnold v. Congreve, 8 Law J. Chanc. 88, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 209, 1 Tam. 341.

Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, in trust to pay the income of one-third part to his daughter Sarah, for life, and upon her death, to stand possessed of that third in trust for her child or children, and to be transferred to them on their attaining twenty-five; but in case his daughter should leave but one child her surviving, then the whole of the one-third part to go to such only child, on his attaining twenty-five, and to be transmissible to his executors; and in case his daughter should leave no child her surviving, or in case she should leave a child who should not attain twenty-five, then over: —Held, that the children were not intended to take vested interests until they attained twenty-five, and that, therefore, the bequest to them was void for remoteness. Judd v. Judd, 3 Sim. 525, s. c. as Judd v. Hubbs, 8 Law J. Chanc. 119.

Bequest to J A for life, remainder to his eldest son for life, and to remain entailed on the eldest son of J A and his posterity for ever. But in case of the death or want of issue of J A, to M (a brother of J A) and his descendants as above mentioned from one generation to another for ever. J A survived the testator and died a bachelor:—Held, that the bequest over to M and his descendants was void for remoteness. Monkhouse v. Monkhouse, 3 Sim. 119.

(T) Residue or Surplus.

[Da Costa v. Keir, 3 Russ. 360, Dig. Law J. 322.]

A bequest of a reversionary interest in personalty to an executor, affords a presumption that the testator intended to exclude him from the residue. But parol evidence is admissible to rebut the presumption. Oldman v. Slater, 3 Sim. 85.

A bequest to executors for the care and trouble they might have in the execution of the testator's will, renders the executors only trustees of, and not beneficially interested in, the residue undisposed of by the will.

The presumption in such a case is so strong, that parol evidence is not admissible to rebut it. Whitaker v. Tatham, 9 Law J. C.P. 189, s. c. 7 Bing. 628, s. c. 5 M. & P. 628.

The testator gave the residue of his estate to his wife during her life, and at her demise, to the eldest surviving son of A, the interest thereof to be applied to the use of the said eldest son, as to the trustees should seem fit, until he attained twenty-five; or failing such male issue, to the daughter or daughters of A, living at the time of the demise of such male issue. There being no son of A living at the death of the widow:—Held, that the limitation over of the residue to the daughters was not too remote; and that they, upon the death of the widow, became entitled to the residue. Murray v. Addenbrooke, 8 Law J. Chanc. 79, s. c. 4 Russ. 407.

J C, by a deed of trust and settlement, gave all his lands, &c. to trustees, among whom was his brother, who accepted the trust, for the payment of debts, legacies, and other purposes, among which were donations to certain specified charities. The deed then contained this passage: "And in regard I have not yet determined in what way and manner the further distribution of my means and estate shall take place, I hereby reserve to myself power and liberty to make such distribution at any time preceding my death, either in holograph instructions to my said trustees, to be executed informally, or by a formal deed," &c. In a codicil to this testamentary instrument, he made this declaration: "In the event of my failing to make a distribution of my means and estate, which shall remain after fulfilling the purposes before specified, either by holograph instructions, though not formally executed, or by a formal deed of instructions, which I reserve to myself full power to do, then it is my wish that such remaining means and estate shall be applied to such charitable purposes, and in bequests to such of my friends and relations, as may be pointed out by my said dearly beloved wife, with the approbation of a majority of my said trustees; and in the event of her decease, or entering into a second marriage, before such application shall have been pointed out and approved of as aforesaid, then I hereby empower the majority of the said remaining trustees to make the application, in the way and manner they would conceive to be most agreeable to my wishes if in life." In a question between the brother, claiming as next of kin, and the trustees,—Held, first, that that acceptance of the trust was not such an homologation of the deed as to bar his title to sue; secondly, that the testamentary instruments contained a valid disposition of the residue. Crichton v. Grierson, 3 Bligh, n.s. 484.

A testatrix bequeathed one moiety of the residue of her personal estate to her daughter Hannah, for her separate use, during the joint lives of her and her husband; and if she survived him, to her absolutely; if not, to such of her children, living at her decease, as should attain twenty-one; with a bequest over, if there were no such children, to another daughter, Mary, and her children: and she bequeathed the other moiety to her daughter Mary, for her separate use, during the joint lives of her and her husband, and after her decease, to such of her children living at her decease as should attain twenty-one; and if there were no such children of Mary, to Hannah and her children, in like manner as the first moiety; with a proviso, that if Hannah died in her husband's lifetime, and should not have a child living at her decease who should attain twenty-one, the second moiety was to go over to Hannah's executors and administrators; and that, in like manner, the first-mentioned moiety, in the event in which it was limited over, should, if Mary had not a child living at her death who should attain twenty-one, go over to Mary's executors and administrators. By a codicil, the testatrix gave 1,500*l.*, if Mary died without leaving any child who attained twenty-one, to Hannah and her children, in the same manner as was in the will directed touching the first-mentioned moiety of the residue; and in case both daughters died without leaving any child living who should attain twenty-one, she bequeathed the 1,500*l.*, together with all the residue of her personal estate, to A. Both the daughters died without issue; but Hannah survived her husband:—Held, nevertheless, that A was entitled to the residue. Hopkins v. Towle, 3 Russ. 304.

A testator having directed his executors to pay the interest of his residue to a woman during her life, and after her decease to divide the residue amongst the next of kin:—Held, the next of kin at the time of the testator's death were the persons entitled. Collisham v. Sams, 1 Tam. 346.

A testatrix gives the residue of her property to executors, upon trust to dispose of the same at such times and for such purposes as they should think fit;

t being her intention that the distribution thereof should be left entirely to their discretion:—Held, hat the next of kin were entitled to the residue. Fowler v. Garlike, 8 Law J. Chanc. 66, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 232.

Construction of will—Vesting of shares of a residue. Hardinge v. Pratt, 7 Law J. Chanc. 179.

A testator devises a leasehold to E, the only surviving child of his son A, and bequeathe the residue (subject to a life estate) to the children of A, B, and C: E was illegitimate, and A had no other child:—Held, that E was not entitled to a share of the residue. Bagley v. Mollard, 8 Law J. Chanc. 145, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 581.

Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, upon trust to transfer the same unto his great-nephews and nieces; the shares of the boys to be transferable to them at twenty-one, and those of the girls at twenty-one or marriage, and to accumulate for them in the meantime, with benefit of accruer and survivorship; and in case of the death of all the said children except one, before their shares became vested, then upon trust to transfer the whole to the survivor, at the age or time aforesaid:—Held, that a great-nephew, born after the testator's death, but before any of his other great-nephews or nieces attained twenty-one or married, was entitled to a share of the testator's residuary estate. Balm v. Balm, 3 Sim. 492.

A gift of a moiety of the residue of the testator's personal estate,—held, upon the context of the will, to pass also a moiety of the interest of the proceeds of real estate directed to be sold. Byam v. Munton, 3 Law J. Chanc. 156, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 503.

The general rule is, that all which a testator has, passes by the residuary clause, unless an intention appear, from other parts of the will, to limit the effect of that clause.

A testatrix devised certain copyhold estates to her mother for life; then to other persons for their lives, and to their children in fee. All the residue she devised to her mother in fee; but charged such residue, real and personal, with an annuity of 20*l.* to her grandmother for life:—Held, that the provision for the grandmother did not indicate an intention to limit the effect of the residuary clause; and, consequently, that the reversion in the copyholds passed to the mother. Doe d. Moreton v. Fossick, 8 Law J. K.B. 389, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 186.

A testatrix directed her residuary estate to be divided into three equal shares; and gave one share to the children of J M; one share to the children of W H (subtracting from their share the 2,000*l.* that W H owed the testatrix); and the remaining third part to the children of R H:—Held, that the 2,000*l.* was to be considered as part of the residue; that the residue was to be divided into three equal parts, and that the 2,000*l.* was to be taken as part of the share of the children of W H. Murray v. Samson, 3 Sim. 536.

A testator devises the residue of his real and personal estate to such of his children as shall attain twenty-one, or marry under that age with consent. All the children are entitled, although interests are contingent, to have allowances out of the residue for their maintenance during their minorities. Brown v. Temperley, 3 Russ. 263.

An allowance out of a residue, which was directed to be accumulated, made for the support of a legatee, in the interval between the time when the legatee attained his full age, and the time fixed for the distribution of the accumulated fund. M'Dermott v. Keelan, 3 Russ. 624.

R N, by his will, gave all his personal estate to R F and J N, that is to say, (he then enumerates several particulars,) in trust for the following purposes: that the same be not liable or resorted to for the payment of mortgages or bond debts, until the legacies, debts, and charges thereinafter mentioned should be satisfied; and as soon as that could be effected, the same was to be resorted to in relief of his real estate. The testator then gave several legacies to his wife and children, and bequeathed the residue, after the respective charges thereby made thereon, to his eldest son:—Held, that the residue, as well as the enumerated articles, were subject to the charges in the will mentioned. Nicholas v. Nicholas, 1 Tam. 269.

(V) Legacy Duty.

[Smith v. Anderson, 4 Russ. 352, Dig. Law J. 324.]

The forgiveness of a bond debt by will is a legacy, and as such is liable to the payment of legacy duty.

But where a specific sum is bequeathed, or a specific debt forgiven, which is known and ascertained at the time of the testator's death, legacy duty is not payable upon the interest accruing in respect of such debt or sum of money between the time of such death and the period when the executors close their accounts.

The obligee of a bond, after the death of the principal therein, but during the life of the surety, who was his brother, made his will, containing the following directions relative to the bond: "I hereby forgive the bond debt, both principal and interest, due to me, and entered into by J W and my brother J H, with and for him, for the said J W's paying me the principal sum of 4,000*l.*, and interest at 4*l.* per cent., &c., and do order the said bond, at my decease, to be delivered up and cancelled." The interest upon the bond was paid up to the death of the testator, whom his brother survived:—Held, that this was a legacy whereon legacy duty was payable by J H, testator's brother, but upon the principal sum only, and not in respect of interest accruing subsequent to the testator's death. Attorney General v. Holbrook, 3 Y. & J. 114, s. c. 12 Price, 407.

An annuity was given by a will, clear of all deductions, and was directed to be paid out of certain sums of stock standing in the testator's name:—Held, that it was not subject to the legacy duty. Dawkins v. Tatham, 2 Sim. 492.

Testator gave an annuity of 300*l.*, free from all taxes and stamp duties, to J and H, during their joint lives, and to the survivor during her life; and after the death of the survivor, to G, for her life. By a codicil, he revoked the annuity of 300*l.* given to J and H, and gave them an annuity of 100*l.* each, with benefit of survivorship:—The annuities of 100*l.* are subject to the legacy duty. Burrows v. Cottrell, 3 Sim. 375.

A bequest to the poor of the parish of A, of 50*l.* per annum, to be laid out at Christmas in bread, and distributed by the minister, &c. to the most needy objects in the parish, is liable to the legacy duty at the rate of 10*l.* per cent., payable upon the whole sum. In re Franklin's Charity, 3 Y. & J. 544, s. c. 3 Sim. 147.

A bequest of a residue of whatever it may consist, such money as arises from it to be invested in the public funds, the interest to be appropriated to the testator's son and his wife (a stranger in blood) for their lives, with remainder to the grandchildren of the testator, in equal proportions, is liable to legacy duty, to be calculated at the rate of 1*l.* per cent. for the son's moiety, and 10*l.* per cent. for that of the wife, upon the principle that the son and his wife each take a life interest in one moiety of the income of the residue. Attorney General v. Burnie, 3 Y. & J. 531.

A testator, a British subject, and whose domicile was in this country, died possessed of stock in the American, French, and Russian funds; the executor possessed himself of such stock abroad, and was proceeding to transfer the same to the residuary legatee in those countries:—Held, that the property must be considered as English personal property, and consequently, liable to the payment of legacy duty. In re Ewing, 9 Law J. Exc. 37, s. c. 1 C. & J. 151, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 91.

When a legacy is not paid at the time appointed by the testator, legacy duty is payable, not merely on the capital sum bequeathed, but on the aggregate amount of capital and interest, which is ultimately received by the legatee. Thomas v. Montgomery, 3 Russ. 502.

The rule for an attachment, for not accounting to the legacy office, is a rule nisi, which makes itself absolute by a certain day, unless in the meantime cause be shewn. In re Vivian, 1 C. & J. 409, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 379.

(W) Rights of Legatees.

Where a sum of money is bequeathed, in terms that give an absolute interest to the legatee, the mere addition by subsequent words of a power to dispose of the legacy by will, during the continuance of a prior life interest in the money, does not by implication exclude the right of the legatee to dispose of it by deed inter vivos during the same period. Comber v. Graham, 1 Russ. & M. 450.

Residuary legatees may sustain a bill for an account against the executor and the surviving partner of the testator, though collusion between the executor and the surviving partner is neither charged nor proved. Bowsher v. Watkins, 1 Russ. & M. 277.

Testator devised to his executors, their heirs and assigns, his lands, upon trust to sell the same; and directed that the money arising from the same sale should be deemed part of his personal estate, and that it should be subject to the disposition made concerning his personal estate. He then directed his personal estate to be sold, and when the money arising from the sale of his personal and real estate should be collected, he disposed of it in the manner mentioned in the will; and among other dispositions he bequeathed a legacy to A B:—Held, that the money arising from the sale of the real estate was equitable assets, and that a legatee could not maintain a suit in the ecclesiastical court to recover his legacy. Barker v. May, 9 B. & C. 489, s. c. 4 M. & R. 386.

A testator charged his real estate with an annuity to his widow, and subject thereto, devised it to S A, in fee, and appointed her his executrix. The testator had insured a house. The policy expired a few months after his death, and was then renewed by S A. Soon afterwards the house, which was the whole of his real estate, was burnt down. The insurance money was ordered to be paid into court, on a motion by the widow, in a suit instituted by her against S A, for the administration of the testator's estate. Parry v. Ashley, 3 Sim. 97.

A legacy having been given to a legatee in a name she had for many years assumed, the Court will direct an inquiry, who was the person meant. The deposition of an admission of a residuary legatee and executrix is good evidence, it being against her own interest. Neathway v. Ham, 1 Tam. 316.

The Court having decided that a legatee, in a separate paper, is not executrix according to the tenor, she cannot oppose the validity of a former will, if she is paid her costs, and if the executor of that will is ready to take probate of the paper by which she is benefited, and to pay her full bequest. Hillam v. Walker, 1 Hag. Ec. 71.

Costs are peculiarly in the discretion of the Court; and though the general rule is, that a legatee ex executoris, propounding and establishing a paper, is entitled to his costs out of the estate, his unwise delay in producing the paper, and thus occasioning the suit, is a ground for refusing them. Huntington v. Holloway, 3 Hag. Ec. 280.

A legatee under a former will, who, after long acquiescence, calls in probate of and contests a later will, setting up a case of incapacity and undue influence, which is disproved—will be condemned in costs from the time of giving in an allegation.

Semble, a next of kin—à fortiori, a legatee under a former will—contesting a will, under circumstances manifestly vexatious, may be condemned in the whole costs. Green v. Proctor and Neary, 1 Hag. Ec. 337.

An allegation on the part of the executors, responsive to a libel in a suit of subtraction of legacy, and pleading circumstances dehors the will, is admissible to explain a latent ambiguity as to the subject of the bequest; but the Court rejected the testator's declaration to the drawer of the will, as inconclusive, and expressed a strong disinclination to their admission, in such a suit, under any circumstances. Capel v. Roberts and Neald, 3 Hag. Ec. 156.

(A) Actions for.

It is not libellous fairly and honestly to criticise a painting publicly exhibited, however strong the terms of censure used may be. Thompson v. Shackell, 2 M. & M. 187. [Best]

If the surveyor to a society, which publishes an account of the different classes of ships, for the in-bmitation of merchants, underwriters, &c., is requested by a ship-owner to survey his ship, and does so in consequence, and makes a report to the society, who class the vessel according to his report, such shipowner cannot maintain an action against the members of the society for a libel, in misdescribing the ship, nor against the surveyor, unless he made a false report; and quære, whether such an action is maintainable at all, without evidence of express malice? Kerr v. Sheelden, 4 C. & P. 528. [Tenterden]

It is not actionable without the aid of prefatory averment in the declaration, to write of a Magistrate, that "as chairman of a finance committee, he audited accounts containing items of 12,000*l.*, for the nominal purpose of furnishing lodgings, plate, &c., for the Judges; but which expenditure was in reality to find accommodation for the Magistrates, as the sheriff always found the Judges suitable lodgings, without putting the county to any expense." Adams v. Metedew, 8 Y. & J. 219.

Where a declaration complained of a publication, which charged the plaintiff with having insulted two females and some gentlemen, in a most barefaced manner; and the declaration also averred that special damage had been sustained: and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, but negatived the special damage:—Held, that the action was maintainable, in respect of the publication, without proof of special damage. Clement v. Chivis, 7 Law J. K.B. 189, s. c. 9 B. & C. 172, s. c. 4 M. & R. 127.

In an action for a libel for publishing a hand-bill, offering a reward for the recovery of certain bills of exchange, and stating that A B is suspected of having embezzled them, it is a good defence on the general issue, that the hand-bill was published solely with a view to the protection of persons liable on the bills, or to the conviction of the offender. Finlen v. Westlake, 1 M. & M. 461. [Tindal]

An action will lie for the publication in a newspaper of a story calculated to render a party ridiculous, although the plaintiff has himself first spoken of it. Cook v. Ward, 8 Law J. C.P. 126, s. c. 5 Bing. 409, s. c. 4 M. & P. 99.

It is no justification for the publishing of a libel, that, at the time of publishing it, the name of the person who communicated it to the defendant was also published. De Crespigny v. Long Wellesley, 7 Law J. C.P. 100, s.c. 5 Bing. 392, s.c. 2 M. & P. 695.

To justify the publication of a report of a trial, it must be a fair and accurate account of the whole trial—setting forth the evidence, and not the mere unsupported statements of counsel. Saunders v. Mills, 8 Law J. C.P. 24, s. c. 6 Bing. 213, s. c. 3 M. & P. 524.

An account published in a newspaper of proceedings in a court of law, containing matter redounding to the discredit of a person in his business of an attorney-at-law, is, whether true or false, rendered actionable as libellous, by the paragraph being headed or introduced with the line, "Shameful conduct of an attorney."

Pleas by way of justification, therefore, in such a case, averring that the supposed libel contained a faithful and true account of the proceedings in a court of law, were determined to be bad pleas, by reason of the preceding words.

Affirmed on writ of error. Clement v. Lewis, 10 Price, 181.

Where, in an answer to an application to a former master, for the character of a servant, he writes a letter to the applicant, giving an unfavourable account of the servant during his service, and also stating matter injurious to his character in respect of his conduct out of that service, at the time the letter is written, the mere circumstance of the letter going thus far beyond the matter of inquiry, will not deprive it of the protection given to a privileged communication. But if it be shewn that the facts, which are thus stated out of the matter of immediate inquiry, be untrue,—that circumstance may be evidence of malice to go to the jury. The onus of proof in such case appears to lie upon the servant.

Nor, in the case of the writing such a letter, would the circumstance of the master going to persons who had recommended the servant to him, and making statements similar to those contained in the letter, be of itself sufficient evidence of malice to deprive the letter of the protection given to a privileged communication. Child v. Affleck, 7 Law J. K.B. 272, s. c. 9 B. & C. 402, s. c. 4 M. & R. 338.

Where a gentleman, voluntarily and unsolicited, writes a letter to another, touching the character of a person who has lived with the writer as a servant, and is about to be, or is, engaged with the person to whom the letter is addressed, the mere circumstance of its having been voluntarily written, will not deprive it of the protection given to a privileged communication, although it may reflect on the character of the servant; but such a letter, to be entitled to the protection given to a privileged communication, must have been written fairly and bonâ fide; and whether it has been so written is a question for the jury. Patterson v. Jones, 7 Law J. K.B. 26, s. c. 8 B. & C. 578, s. c. 3 M. & R. 101.

The plaintiffs having obtained a contract for a supply of timber for the navy, agreed with the defendant for a share in it. The contract, however, not turning out to be so advantageous in its terms as was anticipated, the defendant withdrew himself from it, and afterwards wrote to a house at Sierra Leone, who had engaged to supply the timber to the plaintiffs, a letter reflecting on the character of the plaintiffs, and tending to embarrass them. The jury having found a verdict for the defendant, the Court directed a new trial. Ward v. Smith, 8 Law J. C.P. 294, s. c. 6 Bing. 749, s. c. 4 M. & P. 595, s. c. 4 C. & P. 303.

In an action for a libel, the question for the consideration of the jury is, not whether the defendant intended to produce an effect injurious to the plaintiff; but, whether the publication has a tendency to produce such an effect. Haire v. Wilson, 7 Law J. K.B. 302, s. c. 9 B. & C. 643, s. c. 4 M. & R. 605; s. p. Fisher v. Clement, 8 Law J. K.B. 176, s. c. 10 B. & C. 472.

(B) PLEADINGS.

In declaring on a libel, it is not necessary to set out every part of it, provided the sense of the part set out is not varied or altered in its quality or effect, by that which is omitted. Rutherford v. Evans, 8 Law J. C.P. 86, s. c. 6 Bing. 451, s. c. 4 M. & P. 162, s. c. 4 C. & P. 77.

The declaration, in an action for libel, averred that the plaintiff carried on the business of a carpenter, builder, and surveyor, and had been appointed the surveyor, agent, and steward of a certain company or society of persons, called "The New England Company;" and that the defendant published, concerning him, and concerning his said employment by the said company, and concerning him in the said trade of carpenter, builder, and surveyor, &c., in a letter to one J G, he, the said J G, then and there being the treasurer of the said company, a certain libel, &c. It appeared that the company in question was a corporation, and that its name was "The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in New England and parts adjacent, in America:"—Held, that this misdescription of the company was not, under the circumstances, any ground of nonsuit. Rutherford v. Evans, 4 C. & P. 77.

In an action for a libel, imputing to the plaintiff, a proctor, that he had been thrice suspended from practice, for extortion; the defendant in his plea of justification, averred that the plaintiff had been suspended once:—Held, that, inasmuch as the plea professed to be a justification of the whole libel, and did in fact only justify a part, the plea was bad, on demurrer. Clarkson v. Lawson, 8 Law J. C.P. 36, s. c. 6 Bing. 266, s. c. 3 M. & P. 605.

Where a libel is in its nature divisible, a plea of justification may be pleaded, as to part of it. Thus, where the plaintiff, a proctor, declared on a libel in which he was alleged to have been thrice suspended from practice for extortion, and the defendant pleaded a justification as to one suspension—The Court, on demurrer, held the plea good. Clarkson v. Lawson, 8 Law J. C.P. 193, s. c. 6 Bing. 587, s. c. 4 M. & P. 356.

Semble—That if a libel consist of distinct propositions, any one of them may be separated from the rest, and justified. But where a libel charges the plaintiff with having committed a felony, the defendant cannot justify by shewing circumstances which amount to suspicion only, and without averring in the same terms as the libel, that which charges the actual commission of the felony. Mountney v. Watson, 9 Law J. K.B. 298, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 673.

If a defendant, in an action for libel, imputing want of skill to a surgeon, plead that the plaintiff did want skill, and that he performed an operation in an unsurgeonlike manner, occupying unnecessary time, and causing unnecessary pain; these are all affirmatives on the part of the defendant. Cooper v. Wakley, 3 C. & P. 474, s.c. 1 M. & M. 248. [Tenterden]

(C) Evidence.

On the trial of an indictment, information, or action for libel, against any person who has made an affidavit at the Stamp Office, according to the 38 Geo. 3. c. 78, it is not necessary to produce the newspaper filed at the Stamp Office in pursuance of that act, or to give any proof of the publication of the newspaper containing the alleged libel.—Proof of the affidavit, in the manner pointed out by the act, with the mere production of a newspaper, corresponding in the title and the names mentioned in the affidavit, with the particulars given in the affidavit, will be sufficient primâ fâcie evidence of the publication. Mayne v. Fletcher, 7 Law J. K.B. 69, s. c. 9 B. & C. 382, s. c. 4 M. & R. 311.

Evidence that the defendant accounted with the stamp-distributor for the amount of stamp-duties on advertisements inserted in a country newspaper, is sufficient proof of publication by him. Cook v. West, 8 Law J. C.P. 126, s. c. 6 Bing. 409, s. c. 4 M. & P. 99.

If a libel, purporting to be a circular, written by the secretary of a society for the protection of trade against swindlers, impute certain specific facts to the plaintiff, a witness cannot be asked what he understands by finding a person's name inserted in such a circular; but he may be asked whether there is any meaning in such a circular, beyond what appears on the face of it.

If the members of such a society agree to contribute towards all law expenses respecting it, and an action be brought against the secretary of it for a libel, it seems that a member of the society is a competent witness for the defence, because an agreement by parties, that they will bear each other harmless in doing wrong, is void. In this case, a member of the society was examined for the defence, but the secretary released him before he gave his evidence. Humphreys v. Miller, 4 C. & P. 7. [Tenterden]

In case for a libel on the plaintiff in the way of his trade, the declaration alleged that the plaintiff exercised and carried on his trade in an honest and lawful manner:—Held, that, under the general issue, the defendant might give evidence to shew that the plaintiff's was not a lawful trade. Manning v. Clement, 9 Law J. C.P. 60, s. c. 7 Bing. 362, s. c. 5 M. & P. 211.

In an action for a libel, which is only libellous on a man in the execution of his office, where the plaintiff has stated, by way of inducement, his due discharge of its duties, the defendant cannot, on the general issue, give evidence of negligence in discharging them in answer to that allegation. Dunn v. Robson, 1 M. & M. 294. [Tenterden]

Semble—that a defendant who is sued by a servant, in an action of libel for the writing of a letter touching his character, may, under the general issue, (and without pleading a justification,) give evidence of facts, tending to shew that the letter was written bonâ fide, although the facts themselves, in an ordinary case, would amount to a justification. Patterson v. Jones, 7 Law J. K.B. 26, s. c. 8 B. & C. 578, s. c. 3 M. & R. 101.

In an action for a libel, for publishing a hand-bill, offering a reward for the recovery of certain bills of exchange, and stating that A B is suspected of having embezzled them, evidence is admissible that the party publishing the hand-bill, followed it up by preferring a charge of the same nature against A B before a Magistrate. Finden v. Westlake, 1 M. & M. 461. [Tindal]

(D) Informations and Indictments.

[60 Geo. 3. c. 8. repealed, so far as relates to sentence of banishment on second conviction for publishing seditious and blasphemous libels, 1 Will. 4. c. 73, 8 Law J. Stat. 164.]

In an information for a libel, the jury are to consider whether the defendant published it with a criminal intent or not. Rex v. Reeves, Peo. A.C. 84. [Kenyon]

In an indictment for libel, the proprietor of a newspaper is primâ facie answerable for what appears in it; but the presumption arising from proprietorship may be rebutted and an exemption established.

Rex v. Gutch, Fisher, and Alexander, 1 M. & M. 433. [Tenterden]

Where a libel charges a person with having committed an indictable offence, the defendant, upon being brought up for judgment for publishing that libel, is not at liberty, in mitigation of punishment, to shew, upon affidavit, that the person was guilty of that offence, except by shewing a record of his conviction. But the defendant, in such a case, is at liberty to shew, upon affidavit, that he published the libel, believing the statement to be true; and to shew what were the reasons operating upon his mind at the time, which induced him so to believe. Rex v. Halpin, 7 Law J. M.C. 75, s. c. 9 B. & C. 55, s. c. 4 M. & R. 8.

(E) DAMAGES.

[Amount of bonds given by publishers of newspapers increased, and plaintiffs in libel cases, entitled to execution for damages, enabled to recover on such bonds, 1 Will. 4. c. 73, 8 Law J. Stat. 164.]

In an action for a libel, the defendant may, on the general issue, prove, in mitigation of damages, any ground of suspicion short of facts, which would, if pleaded, have amounted to a complete justification. Knobell v. Fuller, Pea. A.C. 139. [Eyre]

In an action for a libel published in a newspaper, the defendant cannot be permitted to shew, in mitigation of damages, that the libel has already been before published in several other newspapers. Saunders v. Mills, 8 Law J. C.P. 24, s. c. 6 Bing. 213, s. c. 3 M. & P. 524.

In an action for a libel, the defendant cannot, under the general issue, give evidence of any fact in mitigation of damages, which would be evidence to prove a justification of any part of the libel. He ought to justify as to that part. Vessey v. Pike, 3 C. & P. 512. [Tenterden]

The declaration in an action for libel, alleged that the plaintiff was a good and faithful subject, &c., and that he was a medical practitioner, and stated the libel to have been published of and concerning him, and of and concerning him in his said practice. No evidence was given of any licence or authority to practise, nor was the plaintiff mentioned in the libel as a regular medical man, but merely as "Physician extraordinary to several ladies of distinction," and "doctor, or rather quack":—Held, that this did not withdraw the claim to damages in the medical capacity from the consideration of the jury, but that they might give such damages as they thought right, both for that and the libel on the plaintiff's private character. Long v. Chubb, 5 C. & P. 55. [Tindal]

The jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff in an action for a libel, on the issues joined upon the plea of not guilty, and also on the second and sixth special pleas, without assessing damages, and having found for the defendant on the other issue, as far as it related to all the other five special pleas, the Court below ordered judgment to be entered for the plaintiff on the issue on those pleas, non obstante veredicto pro defendente.

The verdict found for the plaintiff in the action on the first issue joined on the plea of not guilty, and on the second issue in so far as it related to the second and sixth special pleas by way of justification—held to be imperfect, by reason of the omission on the part of the jury, who tried the issue, to assess the damages, and therefore void. Affirmed.

The Court below having also awarded a writ of inquiry, to assess the unassessed damages on the issues found for the plaintiff below, whereupon judgment was afterwards entered up for the damages found by the inquisition; the judgment of the Court of King's Bench in that respect was annulled for error in awarding a writ of inquiry, and the final judgment reversed.

Such omission on the part of the jury is not to be supplied by a writ of inquiry, because the defendant would thereby lose his right to the remedy by attaint, for a finding of excessive damages.

The defendant to the action, therefore, held to be entitled to a venire de novo, by reason of the void verdict, for want of assessment of damages as to the issues found for the plaintiff.

[Since this decision, see 6 Geo. 4. c. 50. s. 60, abolishing the process of attaint of juries.]

Semble, the Judge before whom the issues were tried, should have directed the attention of the jury to the question of damages on the finding for the plaintiff.

The course of practice in such cases, to correct the erroneous proceedings of the court below, is to remit to them the record, requiring them "anew" to command the sheriff to cause a jury to come, &c. to try, (&c., the issue and part of issue for the plaintiff,) Clement v. Lewis, 10 Price, 181.

LICENCE.

[1 Will. 4. c. 51, 8 Law J. Stat. 107.]

[The general sale of beer and cider in England, permitted and regulated by 1 Will. 4. c. 64, 8 Law J. Stat. 127.]

A retail brewer of strong beer, whose brewery is situate out of a city or market town, and who obtains a licence to retail strong beer in a city or market town next adjoining his brewery premises, under the stat. 5 Geo. 4. c. 54. s. 7, can retail at that place only the strong beer brewed by him at his country brewery.

A retail brewer of strong beer, under the stat. 5 Geo. 4. c. 54. s. 6, whose brewery is situate in a city or market town, can retail from his brewery such strong beer only as is brewed by him upon his brewery premises.

Where a brewer of strong beer, who has two breweries, the one situate out of a city or market town, and the other situate in a city, obtains a licence to retail the beer brewed at the former in the next adjoining city, and another licence to retail that brewed at the latter place where it is brewed, he cannot retail at both places the beer brewed by him at his country brewery. Attorney General v. Overington, 3 Y. & J. 440.

The stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36, relating to places for public dancing, music, &c., extends to licensed taverns and hotels; and it is no defence, that the company frequenting the performances were respectable, or that the admission money was not received for the benefit of the keeper of the house. The 13th section of that statute which gives a form of the declaration, extends to common informers. Green v. Botheroyd, 3 C. & P. 471. [Tenterden]

If a person go to a coach-office, and direct that a place be booked for him by a particular coach, and that be done, and he leave his portmanteau, the coach proprietor will have a lien on the portmanteau for something, but not for the full amount of the coach fare; but, if the party merely leave the portmanteau while he goes to inquire if there be an earlier coach, and no place be actually booked, the coach proprietor has no lien at all. Higgins v. Bretherton, 5 C. & P. 2. [Tenterden]

A applied to B (the proprietor of a house with cellars, which he was in the habit of letting), telling him that he wanted cellar room to do a pipe of wine, but adding, that he did not know but very shortly he might want a good deal of room; B, upon this, said that he had better put it into his (B's) own cellar, which he did:—Held, that under these circumstances, B was entitled to detain the wine, till a reasonable and proper sum had been paid him for rent. Gray v. Chamberlain, 4 C. & P. 260. [Tindal]

(B) IN EQUITY.

What possession, and what agreement, as to the possession of title deeds, shall constitute an equitable lien. Roberts v. Jefferys, 8 Law J. Chanc. 136.

A conveys an estate to B, in consideration of B entering into the covenants contained in the deed, for paying an annuity to A, and 3,000*l.* to certain persons in the event of his, B's, marrying:—Held, that the covenants did not create a lien on the estate. Clarke v. Royle, 3 Sim. 499.

Lien established against the produce of West India estates, in respect of supplies furnished to the estates, upon an agreement implied from the course of dealing and conduct of the parties. Simond v. Herbert, 1 Russ. & M. 719.

A person, indebted on bond, being entitled to certain prize-money, and being pressed by his creditor for payment, promised that the debt should be paid out of the prize-money, and delivered to him the following written order, addressed to "Colonel Francis Hastings Doyle: My dear Friend,—As I shall leave to you the distribution of the prize-money as soon as it shall be issued for me, I have to mention, that the executors of the late William Sims are claimants on that fund for a bond debt, with interest—faithfully yours—Hastings:"—Held, that the debt was not an equitable charge on the prize-money. Watson v. the Duke of Wellington, 8 Law J. Chanc. 159, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 602.

A business which was the property of A, was carried on in the name of B, who was the agent of A, at a fixed salary; A being under considerable liabilities, in respect of that business, B became bankrupt; A was held to have a lien on the property of the concern, to the extent of his liabilities; and the assignees of B were restrained from interfering with the business or the property belonging to it, and from receiving monies due to it. Paxcraft v. Weed, 4 Russ. 487.

The indorsee of a bill has a lien upon property deposited with the drawee as security. Ex parte Perfect, in re Neville, 1 Mont. B.C. 25.

(C) WAIVER.

Where a person was assumed to have had a lien upon goods for his general balance as a wharfinger, and upon being applied to by the consignor made a charge only in respect of the particular goods; but was not paid at the time on account of the difficulty of getting change for a bank note; and the card of the consignor, with the consent of the wharfinger, was nailed on the goods, and the parties separated upon the understanding that the consignor should send for the goods and pay the sum which had been named:—Held, that these facts amounted to a waiver by the wharfinger of his lien for his general balance, and that he could not detain the goods after a tender of the sum he had previously named. Morley v. Hay, 7 Law J. K.B. 104.

LIGHTS.

[See REVERSIONER.]

A, the owner of two adjoining houses, grants a lease of one of them to B. He afterwards leases the other to C, there then existing in it certain windows. After this B accepts a new lease of his house from A:—Held, that B cannot alter his tenement so as to obstruct windows existing in C's house, at the time of C's lease from A, though the windows are not twenty years old at the time of the alteration. Coutts v. Gorham, 1 M. & M. 396. [Tindal]

In an action of trespass for removing boards, on a plea of justification that they obstructed an ancient window, through which the light ought to pass, it is sufficient to shew that the window was one through which the light ought to be allowed to pass, though the window is proved to have been within living memory. Penwarden v. Ching, 1 M. & M. 403. [Tindal]

LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF.

(B) COMPUTATION OF TIME.
(C) PROMISE OR ACKNOWLEDGMENT.
(D) PLEADINGS.

(A) WHERE AVAILABLE.

(a) At Law.

The Statute of Limitations does not run against an attorney's lien; and, therefore, when, six years after judgment in an action, the plaintiff himself sued out a fieri facias, the Court stopped the fund produced by that writ to satisfy the amount of the attorney's lien. Higgins v. Scott, 9 Law J. K.B. 162, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 413.

Continuances on the roll from the first to the last return of a term were allowed to be entered, in order to answer a plea of the Statute of Limitations; although the application for leave to enter them was not made until after the cause had advanced as far as the argument of a special case. And the Court afterwards refused to exonerate the bail; although they complained that they had become bail in the belief that the plaintiff would fail upon the ground of the Statute of Limitations, and they had lost the power of rendering the defendant. But, as the declaration went beyond the affidavit of debt, their liability was limited to so much of the judgment as corresponded with the affidavit of debt. Taylor v. Gregory, 9 Law J. K.B. 326, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 257.

It is no answer to a plea of the Statute of Limitations, that the contract, upon which the plaintiff sues, was made in a foreign country; and that, by the law of that country, the plaintiff's proceeding to enforce the contract, would be in time to save the operation of that part of the foreign law, which is analogous to the Statute of Limitations in this country. The British Linen Company v. Drummond, 9 Law J. K.B. 213.

By a local paving act it was provided that all actions for anything done in pursuance of the act should be brought within six months after the doing or committing thereof. The defendants, in digging a sewer under the powers of that act, injured the foundation and cracked the walls of the plaintiff's house, and to prevent further mischief supported the house with shores. The sewer was completed, and consequently the damage done to the house more than six months before the commencement of the suit; but the shores remained up within that time:—Held, that the plaintiff's right of action for the actual injury was barred by the lapse of time, and that the permitting of the shores to remain (a cause of action which the declaration was not framed to meet) was not a continuance of the damage. Lloyd v. Wigney, Wilds, and two others, 8 Law J. C.P. 161, s. c. 6 Bing. 489, s. c. 4 M. & P. 222.

Where an act of parliament authorises certain things to be done, and in a particular clause limits the time for bringing an action for anything done "in pursuance" of the act:—Held, that this clause applies to an action at the suit of a person who has sustained damage by the negligence of the persons who were doing that which, if done properly, would have been done "in pursuance" of the act. Smith v. Shaw, 8 Law J. K.B. 111, s. c. 10 B. & C. 277.

(b) In Equity.

A, who was entitled by act of parliament to all the surplus water, and such as was not necessary for the purpose of a canal, brought an action against the canal company for an illegal abstraction of water, and alleged in his declaration continuing acts of commission and omission from an antecedent period, by which he was deprived of the water for nine weeks in the year 1825, and for seventeen weeks in the year 1826:—Held, that the company were within the protection of the limitation clause of the statute 30 Geo. 3. c. 32. s. 79, which enacts that any action for anything done in pursuance of the act, shall be brought within six calendar months next after the fact committed, unless there be a continuation of the damage; and also that there was no continuation of damage, inasmuch as there was a cessation of injury, though the cause from which the injury proceeded was continuing.

Quære, whether acts of omission would be within the limitation clause. Blakemore v. Glamorganshire Canal Company, 3 Y. & J. 60.

A testator gave his estate of T calling it freehold, to trustees, to pay his debts, if his personal estate was deficient, and then over. The estate was leasehold:—Held, that the trust would prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations. Jones v. Scott, 9 Law J. Chanc. 252.

A debt is not taken out of the Statute of Limitations by an advertisement published by the administratrix, requesting all persons, having claims on the estate, to send in statements of their demand to A B, in order to their being approved and paid, or rejected, if such latter course be deemed expedient:—Held, by the Lord Chancellor, (overruling the judgment of the Master of the Rolls,) that, if a testator bequeath personalty to trustees, on trust, among other things, to pay his debts, the operation of the Statute of Limitations is thereby excluded. Jones v. Scott, 8 Law J. Chanc. 83, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 253.

Where a suit was instituted before the passing of 9 Geo. 4. c. 14, but not brought to a hearing, until that act came into operation:—Held, that the act applies, and that a bill will be dismissed, and the plaintiff ordered to pay the costs of the suit, incurred since the time when the act came into operation. Lockley v. Mansel, 9 Law J. Chanc. 248.

The Statute of Limitations, notwithstanding it is a defence at law, may be pleaded to a bill of discovery in aid of an action brought, provided it has been pleaded to the declaration. Mac Gregor v. East India Company, 2 Sim. 452.

(B) Computation of Time.

Semble—that the Statute of Limitations does not begin to run against an attorney's bill on his client for costs in a cause, until the termination of the cause. But, where the action is not brought until after six years from the termination of the cause, a few items, arising out of the cause, and within six years, will not serve to take the demand out of the statute. Rothery v. Munnings, 8 Law J. K.B. 386, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 15.

To an action for goods sold and delivered, the plea of the Statute of Limitations is no answer, unless the plaintiff could have maintained his action in that form, more than six years before the commencement of the suit. Accordingly, where goods were sold at six months' credit, to be paid for by bill, at two or three months, at the option of the buyer,—Held, by Lord Tenterden, Mr. Justice Littledale, and Mr. Justice Patteson, that the action for goods sold and delivered, brought within six months from the expiration of the nine months, was in time: Dubitante Mr. Justice Parke, who inclined to the opinion, that the action might have been brought at the end of the six months, if no bill were then given. Helps v. Winterbottom, 9 Law J. K.B. 258, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 431.

The assignee in possession of an equitable life-estate from tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, holds over after the death of the tenant for life, against the trustee holding the legal estate both for tenant for life and remainder-men: his adverse possession, as against the trustee, does not commence till the death of the tenant for life, and till then the Statute of Limitations does not begin to run. Fauset v. Carpenter, 2 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 232.

C. Promise or Acknowledgment.

The statute 9 Geo. 4. c. 14. enacts, that no acknowledgment or promise by words only, shall be deemed sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract, whereby to take a case out of the Statute of Limitations, unless the promise be in writing, and signed by the party. The act came into operation on the 1st January 1829:—Held, that an action commenced in Hilary term, 1829, could not be maintained upon a written promise made before the passing of the act. Tanner v. Chaverton, 8 Law J. C.P. 30, s. c. 6 Bing. 258, s. c. 3 M. & P. 618.

Evidence of a parol promise, will not take a case out of the Statute of Limitations, in a cause tried after Jan. 1, 1829, though at issue before that day. Somers v. Lewis, 1 M. & M. 297. [Tenterden]

A letter sent by a debtor to a creditor, respecting a debt which contains in the introductory part these words, "which is not to be used in prejudice of my rights now, or in any future arrangement that may be made or instituted," cannot be given in evidence in an action for the debt, for the purpose of taking the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Cory v. Freeman, 4 C. & P. 462. [Tindal]

Parol evidence may be given of a written promise to take a case out of the Statute of Limitations, where the writing is lost, notwithstanding the 9 Geo. 4. c. 14. Where a promise relied upon to take a case out of the Statute of Limitations is conditional, "to pay when of ability," the plaintiff must prove the defendant's ability.—Quære, whether such promise should be declared on specially, where made after the expiration of the six years? Hayden v. Williams, 9 Law J. C.P. 10, s. c. 4 M. & P. 811, s. c. 7 Bing. 163.

On the defendant's being applied to for payment of a debt, barred by the Statute of Limitations, he said that he "would help the plaintiff to 5*l.* if he could."—Held, that this was a conditional promise only, and that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to show that the defendant was of ability to pay. Gowan v. Shorey, 7 Law J. C.P. 117, s. c. 2 M. & P. 351.

The defendant wrote to a third person as follows: "I shall feel indebted to Mr. Fearn (the plaintiff) to wind up his authority, and as soon as my situation will allow, Mr. Fearn's claim, with that of others, shall receive that attention which, as an honest man, I consider them to deserve, and it has been and is my intention to pay them. I must be allowed time to manage my affairs; and, if I am prosecuted against, any exertion of mine will be rendered abortive."—Held, that this was not such an unconditional acknowledgment as to warrant the jury in implying a promise to pay, to avoid the Statute of Limitations. Fearn v. Lewis, 8 Law J. C.P. 33, 4 C. & P. 175, s. c. 6 Bing. 349, s. c. 4 M. & P. 1.

A. having become bankrupt in August 1819, wrote in November 1820, a letter to B, in which he spoke of a debt of 98*l.* 15*s.*, due from him to B, and said, inter alia as follows: "By the end of next month I shall have my bankers' account here, and I shall remit the sum due to you in a draft to them:"—Held, in subsitatus assumpsit by B against A for the sum mentioned, that the letter contained a sufficient promise to answer a plea of the Statute of Limitations, and a plea of bankruptcy, and also, that to render the plea of bankruptcy applicable to the case, it must be shewn that the debt existed prior to the bankruptcy. Lang v. Mackenzie, 4 C. & P. 463. [Tindal]

An administratrix sued for a debt due to the intestate. It appeared that the debt accrued more than six years before the commencement of the action; but that, within six years, the defendant and the agent of the administratrix went through the account together, and struck a balance, which the defendant promised to pay as soon as he could:—Held, that the administratrix was entitled to recover on a count upon an account stated with her, and that the Statute of Limitations was no bar. Smith, administratrix of Smith, v. Forty, 4 C. & P. 126. [Vaughan]

A verbal acknowledgment of the payment of part of a debt within six years is not sufficient within the stat. 9 Geo. 4. c. 14, to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Willis v. Newham, 3 Y. & J. 518.

A payment of interest within six years by one of the makers of a joint and several promissory note, more than six years old, will take the case out of the Statute of Limitations, as against the other maker of the note; and the stat. 9 Geo. 4. c. 14. has not altered the law in this respect. And if this interest was one of the items in an account of which the party paid the balance, that is a sufficient payment of interest. Chippendale v. Thurston, 4 C. & P. 98, s. c. 1 M. & M. 411. [Parke]

Where a note is joint and several, and one of the makers dies, payment by his executor is not sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations, in an action against the survivor. Slater v. Lawson, 9 Law J. K.B. 4, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 396.

Payment on account of a debt by one joint-contractor will bind the other, so as to deprive him of the benefit of the Statute of Limitations, although he may have no notice of such payment. But where an acknowledgment of a debt by one joint-contractor is relied upon to charge the other, and the terms of the acknowledgment are such as to leave it doubtful, whether it applies to the joint or to some other debt—semble, that the onus of shewing to what debt it applies, will lie upon the plaintiff. Manderston v. Robertson, 7 Law J. K.B. 251, s. c. 4 M. & R. 440.

Several persons joined in a note payable to a banking house, or order on demand. The object was to open an account for one of them on the credit of the note. The account went on for several years; the debtor paying interest in account, but the amount of the note never charged:—Held, that the persons who joined in the note as sureties were liable by reason of the payment of the interest; although the Statute of Limitations had intervened; and although the balance on the account was at one time in favour of the debtor.

A change took place in the members of the banking firm; some of those composing it, when the note was given, going out, and new members coming in. More than six years elapsed between the coming in of the new members and the bringing of the action: —Held, that the action might be maintained in the name of the members of the old firm for the benefit of the new firm; and that the payment of interest to the new firm prevented the Statute of Limitations from barring the remedy by action. Pease v. Hirst, 8 Law J. K.B. 94, s. c. 10 B. & C. 122, s. c. 5 M. & R. 88.

(D) PLEADINGS.

[Pratt v. Swaine, 2 M. & R. 350, Dig. Law J. 334.]

The Statute of Limitations must be replied specially to a plea of set-off, and cannot be taken advantage of under the general replication of nil debet. Chapple v. Darston, 1 C. & J. 1.

If an action was commenced before a bill was filed, the plea to the bill must aver that the cause of action did not accrue within six years before the action was brought. A plea of the Statute of Limitations to a bill need not deny the usual allegation that the defendants have books, &c. in their custody, unless it is alleged that those books, &c. would shew that a promise had been made within six years. Mac Gregor v. East India Company, 2 Sim. 454.

LORD'S DAY.

[See BILL OF EXCHANGE.]

LUNATIC.

[See ASSAULT.]

(A) PRIVILEGES.
(B) COMMISSION.
(C) COMMITTEE.
(D) PROPERTY.

(A) PRIVILEGES.

To justify the acquittal of a prisoner indicted for murder, on the ground of insanity, the jury must be satisfied that he was incapable of judging between right and wrong, and at the time of committing the act did not consider that it was an offence against the laws of God and nature. Rex v. Offord, 5 C. & P. 168. [Lyndhurst]

(B) COMMISSION.

[10 Geo. 4. c. 18. amends and explains 9 Geo. 4. 7 Law J. Stat. 30.]

The Lord Chancellor cannot act under the 9 Geo. 4. c. 41. s. 39 & 42, upon petition. In re Knight, 9 Law J. Chanc. 230.

Under a commission of lunacy, the jury found, "that the party is not a lunatic, but that, partly from paralysis, and partly from old age, his memory is so much impaired as to render him incompetent to the management of his affairs, and consequently of unsound mind, and that he has been so for the term of two years last past:"—The inquisition was quashed, and a new commission was ordered to issue. In re Holmes, 4 Russ. 182.

(C) COMMITTEE.

A committee of the person and estate of a lunatic appointed without a reference, where the property was small. Ex parte Farrow, in re Adams, 1 Russ. & M. 112.

A committee should have the previous sanction of the Court for not passing his accounts annually. Anon. 1 Russ. & M. 113.

(D) PROPERTY.

[Property of Lunatic, see 1 Will. 4. c. 65, 8 Law J. Stat. 134.]

The Court will protect the property of a supposed lunatic in the interval between the presenting of a petition for a commission of lunacy, and the finding of the jury; but it will at the same time, take care, that ample means for resisting the commission be furnished to those who act, in the inquiry, on the alleged lunatic's behalf. In re Holmes. 4 Russ. 186.

An abatement in the rent paid by the tenant of a lunatic's estate, directed without a reference under the circumstances, on the application of the committee. In re Fitch, 1 Russ. & M. 354.

Will of a testator subsequently found a lunatic, directed to be deposited in the custody of the Master. 1 Russ. & M. 355.

A mother, whose only daughter, a lunatic, was entitled to a large real and personal estate under her father's will, bequeathed the residue of her estate and effects to trustees, upon trust to apply the interest, amounting to about 1,600*l.* a-year, towards the maintenance and support of her daughter, and otherwise for her comfort and advantage, as they should think proper, without being liable to account; and after her decease to pay the principal, and also such interest as should not have been actually so applied, to the testatrix's nieces:—Held, that the allowance of the lunatic ought to be borne exclusively by the maternal estate, as that arrangement, in the event of her recovery, would be most beneficial for her. In re Ashley, 1 Russ. & M. 371.

MACHINERY.

If a person has had a threshing-machine taken to pieces, he expecting a mob to come and destroy it, and the mob come and destroy the different parts of the machine when thus separated—this is a felony within the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30. s. 4. Rex v. Mackerel, 4 C. & P. 448. [Park]

A had a threshing-machine worked by water, the water-wheel having been put up for the sole purpose of working this machine, and never having been used for anything else. A, fearing the destruction of the machine by a mob, took it down, leaving the water-wheel standing. The prisoners broke the water-wheel:—Held to be felony under the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30. s. 4; and the fact that A sometimes worked the threshing machine by horses, will make no difference. Rex v. Fidler, 4 C. & P. 449. [Park]

On an indictment on the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30. s. 4, for breaking a threshing-machine, the Judge allowed a witness to be asked whether the mob by whom the machine was broken did not compel persons to go with them, and then compel each person to give one blow to the machine; and also whether, at the time when the prisoner and himself were forced to join the mob, they did not agree together to run away from the mob, the first opportunity. Rex v. Crutchley, 5 C. & P. 133. [Patteson]

MALICIOUS AND VEXATIOUS ARREST.

(A) Action for.
(B) Costs.

---

(A) Action for.

An action for a malicious arrest cannot be maintained where the former cause was terminated by a stet processus by the consent of the parties. Wilkinson v. Howel, 1 M. & M. 495. [Tenterden]

Where a cause (in which the defendant had been arrested) is referred to arbitration, and the award is given in favour of the defendant, he cannot on that ground maintain an action against the plaintiff for a malicious arrest. Habershon v. Troby, Peo. A.C. 181. [Kenyon]

The plaintiff was arrested by the indorsee of a bill of exchange, purporting to be drawn on him, and accepted. In fact the acceptance by him was not his. This is not sufficient to support an action for a malicious arrest, the defendants having acted under mistake, without malice. Spencer v. Jacob, 2 M. & M. 180. [Tenterden]

In an action on the case for a malicious arrest, evidence that the plaintiff in the action in which the arrest was made suffered a judgment of non pros. is not, of itself, primâ facie evidence of the want of probable cause.

Aliter, if the plaintiff in that action discontinue by rule of court.

An allegation by the plaintiff in his declaration in such an action, that the plaintiff in the action complained of "did not promote his suit, but therein wholly failed, and made default, and thereupon it was considered that he should take nothing by his bill, &c. as by the record, &c. appears," is not proved by the production of a rule to discontinue, taken out by the plaintiff, together with proof that the plaintiff paid the costs.

Semble—That even had there been no reference to the record, the termination of the suit as alleged would not have been proved by the evidence adduced.

The reference to the record mentioned in the last paragraph, held to be essential in the statement as there made; and therefore, that it could not be rejected as surplusage.

Such a variance in setting out the termination of the suit, held to be not such a variance as to admit of amendment at Nisi Prius under the 9 Geo. 4. c. 15. Webb v. Hill, 7 Law J. K.B. 244, s. c. 2 M. & M. 253, s. c. 3 C. & P. 485.

Semble, that, in an action on the case for having maliciously arrested the plaintiff, and caused him to be taken in execution after his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act, the defendant cannot discharge his liability, by shewing that he was ignorant of the proceedings of his attorney. Jones v. Nicholls, 7 Law J. C.P. 167, s. c. 3 M. & P. 12.

In an action for arresting a party, and holding him to bail without a reasonable or probable cause, whatever was admissible in evidence to defeat the action on which the arrest took place, is also admissible on the question of the right of the party arrested to recover for the injury sustained. Hadden v. Mills, 4 C. & P. 486. [Tindal]

By a cognovit, A confessed the action, and that B had sustained damage to the amount of 3,000*l.*, and that in case A should make default in payment of 259*l.* on the 7th of May, B should be at liberty to enter up judgment for 3,000*l.*, and sue out execution for 295*l.* and costs, which would have left a principal sum of 1,650*l.* due to B. A not having paid the 259*l.* on the 7th of May, B entered up judgment, and sued out execution for 3,011*l.*, indorsed with a direction to the sheriff, requiring him to levy 1,267*l.*, and A was arrested, and detained in prison for that sum:—Held, that A might maintain an action against B for having caused him to be arrested and imprisoned for a larger sum than he ought. Westwood v. Bullen, 9 Law J. K.B. 33, s. c. 9 B. & C. 640.

(B) Costs.

A defendant who removes into one of the superior courts a cause commenced in an inferior court, is not entitled to the remedy given by the 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. s. 3. when it appears the plaintiff has arrested him without probable cause for a larger sum than he has recovered. Hawtley v. Levy, 7 Law J. K.B. 90, s. c. 8 B. & C. 637, s. c. 3 M. & R. 57.

In order to entitle the defendant to his costs, under the 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. s. 3, where the plaintiff has been arrested for a larger sum than he recovers, it is sufficient for the defendant to shew that there was no reasonable or probable cause for arresting for so much. It is not necessary (as in the case of an action for the malicious arrest,) to shew malice, as well as the want of probable cause. Denton v. Brett, 8 Law J. K.B. 94, s. c. 10 B. & C. 117, s. c. 5 M. & R. 29.

The plaintiffs held the defendant to bail for 1,125*l.*, holding in their hands at the same time a sum of 407*l.* for which they ought to have given him credit:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to costs under the 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. s. 3. Foster v. Weston, 8 Law J. C.P. 210, s. c. 6 Bing. 709, s. c. 4 M. & P. 589.

Where a sum of money, less than sufficient to justify an arrest, paid into court after perfecting bail and pleading the general issue, had been taken out in the usual manner by the plaintiff:—Held, that it was not a case for costs within the 43 Geo. 3. c. 46.

The Court, under the circumstances disclosed by the affidavits, discharged the rule without costs.

Held, on the authority of the cases, that the word "recover" in the act, implies by verdict.

Where malice can be shewn, the party may proceed at common law. Weaver v. Birdsall, 11 Price, 734.

The defendant was arrested for 100*l.*; he paid 10*l.* into court, and at the trial a verdict was entered for the plaintiffs, subject to an award, and the costs were to abide the event. The arbitrator awarded 40*l.* only to be due. The Court refused to allow the defendant his costs under the stat. 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. s. 3, it appearing before the arbitrator, that there was a complicated account between the parties, and that the defendant was entitled to claim certain deductions from the plaintiff's original demand. Turner v. Prince, 7 Law J. C.P. 75, s. c. 5 Bing. 191, s. c. 2 M. & P. 305.

The defendant tendered to the plaintiff 250*l.* in the balance of an account of 3,174*l.* The plaintiff refused to accept the sum tendered, and arrested and held the defendant to bail for 327*l.* The cause was referred, and the arbitrator found 250l. only to be due to the plaintiff:—Held, that there was nothing to shew that the proceeding of the plaintiff was malicious, or without reasonable or probable cause; and, consequently, that the defendant was not entitled to costs under the 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. s. 3. Sherwood v. Taylor, 8 Law J. C.P. 60, s. c. 6 Bing. 280, s. c. 3 M. & P. 641.

A plaintiff had sold goods to defendant, to be paid for half in ready money and half by bill at three months. The defendant having refused to pay the half in ready money or to give the bill, the plaintiff arrested him for the full price of the goods:—Held, that he had no reasonable or probable cause for so doing, and that defendant was entitled to his costs, pursuant to 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. Day v. Picton, 10 B. & C. 120, s. c. 5 M. & R. 31.

MALICIOUS INJURY.

[See 10 Geo. 4. c. 38, for the more effectual punishment of attempts to murder, &c. in Scotland, 7 Law J. Stat. 74.]

If a pistol be loaded with gunpowder and balls, but its touch-hole be plugged, so that it cannot by possibility be fired, this is not "loaded arms" within the stat. 9 Geo. 4. c. 31. ss. 11, 12. Rex v. Harris, 5 C. & P. 159. [Patteson]

If an indictment for shooting another with intent to murder, &c. in all the counts aver that the pistol was loaded with powder and a leaden bullet, it must appear that the pistol was loaded with a bullet, or the prisoner will be entitled to an acquittal. Rex v. Hughes, 5 C. & P. 126. [Bolland]

Inflicting a wound on a person by throwing a sledge-hammer at him, is a wounding within the stat. 9 Geo. 4. c. 31. ss. 11, 12, although the sledge-hammer, from being blunt, was not an instrument calculated to inflict a wound. Rex v. Withers, 4 C. & P. 446. [Vaughan & Alderson]

If a person strike another with a bludgeon, and break the skin and draw blood, this is a sufficient wounding to be within the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 31. s. 11 & 12. Under that stat. it is not at all material what the instrument is, with which the party is wounded. Rex v. Payne, 4 C. & P. 558. [Patteson]

Breaking a person's collar-bone, and bruising him, is not a wounding within the stat. 9 Geo. 4. c. 31. s. 12. Rex v. Wood, 4 C. & P. 381. [Park]

Two private watchmen, seeing the prisoner and another person with two carts laden with apples, went up to them, intending, as soon as they could get assistance, to secure them; one of the watchmen walked beside the prisoner, and the other watchman beside the other person, at some distance from the other prisoner. The other person wounded the watchman who was near him:—Held, that the prisoner could not be convicted of this wounding, unless the jury should be satisfied that the prisoner and the other person had not only gone out with a common purpose of stealing apples, but also had the common purpose of resisting with extreme violence, any person who might attempt to apprehend them. Rex v. Collinson, 4 C. & P. 565. [Garrow]

An indictment on the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30. s. 10, for damaging a vessel, need not state that the damage was done "otherwise than by fire," if it state how it was done. Whether a small pleasure-boat eighteen feet long, is a vessel within the meaning of that stat.—quære: semble, that it is. Rex v. Bowyer, 4 C. & P. 559. [Patteson]

An indictment for setting fire to a barge, the property of another, ought to contain an averment that it was done with intent to injure the owner. Rex v. Smith, 4 C. & P. 569. [Alderson]

The malicious damage contemplated by the statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30. s. 20. is, that which is committed for "mischief's sake"; and therefore any injury arising from the exercise of a supposed right is not within its provisions. Rex v. Jenner, 7 Law J. M.C. 79.

In 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 38, the words "adjoining any dwelling-house," import actual contact; and therefore, ground separated from a house by a narrow walk and paling with a gate in it, is not within their meaning.

Whether ground be properly described as a "garden," within the same section, is a question for the jury. The words "plant" and "vegetable production," in s. 42, do not apply to young fruit trees. Rex v. Hodges, 1 M. & M. 341. [Parke]

To justify the apprehension of an offender under the Malicious Injury Act, 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30, the offender must be taken in the fact, or on a quick pursuit. Hanway v. Boultbee, 4 C. & P. 350, s. c. 2 M. & M. 15. [Tindal]

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

Whether a party indicted and acquitted is entitled as of right to a copy of the indictment, or whether the Judge who tries the defendant has the power legally to grant or withhold the copy — quære. Browne v. Cumming, 8 Law J. K.B. 89, s. c. 10 B. & C. 70, s. c. 5 M. & R. 118.

If C be intrusted to receive money for A, with a written direction for its application, and C write a letter to A stating that he has not received it, when in fact he has, this is sufficient evidence of probable cause to render a prosecution of C, under the statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 49, not malicious. Eagar v. Dyott, 5 C. & P. 4. [Tenterden]

In an action on the case against parish officers for maliciously taking the plaintiff before a magistrate, and procuring him to be convicted of an act of vagrancy, and imprisoned and kept to hard labour, the conviction being afterwards quashed, it is not necessary that the convicting magistrate should be made a party defendant, under the 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. Simpkin v. French, 12 Price, 394.

In an action for a malicious prosecution against A and B, if it appear that both A and B entered into a joint recognizance to prosecute and give evidence, but if it also appear that A only employed the attorney, and that B attended before the magistrate and the Grand Jury, at the request of the attorney, the Judge will direct the acquittal of B. Eagar v. Dyott, 5 C. & P. 4. [Tenterden]

In an action on the case for a malicious prosecution, where the circumstances of the case out of which the action arises were within the knowledge of the defendant, very slight primâ facie evidence given on the part of the plaintiff, will throw on the defendant the onus of shewing that he had probable

A. WRIT.

[illegible] writ of mandamus, improved [illegible] v. [illegible] 21, 9 Law J. Stat. 20.]

[illegible] given to certain persons [illegible] and requires them to [illegible] purposes, the Court in its [illegible] will [illegible] means to exercise it, although [illegible] for the act for its exercise may [illegible] v. [illegible] and Commonalty of the [illegible], 3 Law J. K. B. 359, s. c. 1 B. & [illegible]

The Court will grant a mandamus to the inhabitants of a parish [illegible] to contribute to the church rate, [illegible] assemble together with the minister, [illegible] churchwardens. Rex v. the Inhabitants [illegible] 2 B. & Ad. 157.

(B) RETURN.

[See VESTRY.]

On a mandamus to the commissary, commanding him to admit and swear in a person "duly elected" as churchwarden, he returned, that the person was "not duly elected." The return was held to be good, as the applicant had his remedy by action if the return was false; the use of the word "duly" being considered, not as an assumption of a right to decide the validity of the election, but only as the traverse of a material allegation, upon which the mandamus was founded. Rex v. Williams, 7 Law J. K.B. 48, s. c. 8 B. & C. 681.

The return to a mandamus to elect churchwardens, stated an immemorial custom in the parish to have no churchwardens, and that the duties appertaining by law to the office of churchwardens had been, from time out of mind, discharged by the overseer of the poor:—Held, that inasmuch as overseers had not existed time out of mind, and as there were necessary duties appertaining to churchwardens, and there must have been some persons bound by law to discharge those duties, the custom set out in the return was bad. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Wix, 2 B. & Ad. 197.

To a mandamus to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, to admit and swear in A B to the office of alderman, they returned certain proceedings towards an election at a wardmote court, when A B was declared to be elected, and a return thereof made to the Court of Lord Mayor and Aldermen, and that that Court has had from time immemorial cognizance and jurisdiction to inquire into and adjudicate upon all elections at wardmote courts to city offices, upon the petition of any party interested; that petitions, by several parties interested, were presented against the return of A B; that the merits were inquired into, and the election declared null and void by the said Court of Lord Mayor and Aldermen; and that A B was not duly elected, wherefore, &c. Traverse of the allegation, that A B was not duly elected. At the trial of the issue, it appeared, that at first the Lord Mayor appointed three clerks to take the poll, but on the second day he dismissed two of them. After the number of voters was declared, a scrutiny was demanded and granted, and then the Lord Mayor dismissed the suitors at the wardmote, "to meet again upon a fresh summons." After this, the Lord Mayor went out of office, and his successor issued a fresh summons for holding a wardmote, and there took the scrutiny, and declared A B duly elected, which was returned to the Court of Lord Mayor and Aldermen, who, upon petitions being presented, declared the election void, as stated in the return. Upon a special case, stating these facts, it was held, first, that the return was good in form; secondly, that the custom set out, for the Lord Mayor and Aldermen to inquire into and adjudicate upon elections, did not oust the jurisdiction of this Court; thirdly, that the election was not invalid, on account of the dismissal of two of the poll-clerks, or the change of the presiding officer; lastly, that the wardmote court was not dissolved, but only adjourned, by the dismissal of the suitors, to meet again on a fresh summons. Rex v. the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London, 9 B. & C. 1, s. c. 4 M. & R. 36.

(C) Costs.

The operation of the statute 1 Will. 4. c. 21. s. 6, (authorizing the Court, at their discretion, to grant the costs of applications for mandamus, and of the writ, if issued and obeyed,) is confined to cases where the application was originally made before the act came in force. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Wix, 2 B. & Ad. 197.

MANOR.

[See Copyhold.]

The plaintiff claimed a right to a slip of land, lying between the highway and the land of a stranger. The defendant claimed it as lord of the manor, and proved acts of ownership over similar slips adjoining his own land, and then proposed to give evidence of the exercise of like acts of ownership over other slips of waste in other parts of the manor, adjacent to the inclosures of other persons. This evidence was rejected:—Held, that it ought to have been received. Doe d. Barrett v. Kemp, 9 Law J. C.P. 102, s. c. 7 Bing. 332, s. c. 5 M. & P. 173.

Upon a question as to the right of the lord of a manor to minerals, under lands held by a peculiar customary tenure, and denominated "conventionary tenements," it is competent to the lord to prove the existence of customary estates bearing the same denomination in other manors. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & R. 143.

Upon a question as to the right to minerals, between the lord of the manor and his tenants, holding by a peculiar customary tenure pervading a district which embraces several manors, held for many centuries by the same lord in capite, and during that time governed and administered by persons acting under a commission issued by the lord at stated intervals, and extending to the whole district, acts of ownership exercised over the minerals in a customary tenement in another manner within the district, are admissible in evidence, although within time of legal memory the manors may have been held by different lords, and under a subject. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & R. 230.

MANSE.

Finally decided, that the minister of a parish, partly burghal and partly landward, is de jure entitled to a manse under the act, 1663. Auld v. Hamilton, 1 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 43.

(A) Validity.

(C) Evidence of.

(A) Validity.

[Marriages solemnized in certain churches and chapels rendered valid, 11 Geo. 4. c. 18, 8 Law J. Stat. 30.]

The lex loci contractûs as to marriage, will not prevail, when either of the contracting parties is under a legal incapacity by the law of domicile, and therefore a second marriage, had in Scotland, on a Scotch divorce (à vinculo) from an English marriage between parties domiciled in England at the times of such marriage and divorce, is null. Quære, whether such divorce would be invalid, if the parties were then bonâ fide domiciled in Scotland; still more, if the first marriage took place during a mere casual visit to England, both parties being at all domiciled in Scotland. Conway v. Beazley, 3 Hag. Ec. 639.

A marriage de facto, solemnized under circumstances of clandestinity, inferring fraud and circumvention between a person of weak and deranged mind, and the daughter of his trustee and solicitor, (who had great influence over him, and by whom he was clearly considered and treated as of unsound mind,) pronounced null and void; and the pretended wife condemned in costs. Countess of Portsmouth v. Earl of Portsmouth, 1 Hag. Ec. 356.

Lapse of time offers no bar to a suit for nullity of marriage, by licence, by reason of minority and want of consent of the father. Duins v. Donovan, 3 Hag. Ec. 301.

A marriage, which would be void by reason of its being by licence, without the consent of the parent of the woman, and which, by the terms of 3 Geo. 4. c. 75. s. 2, was rendered valid, does not afterwards become invalid by reason of the woman marrying again during the lifetime of her husband; the 3rd section of the above act being, for that purpose, retrospective only. Rex v. the Inhabitants of St. John Delpike, 9 Law J. M.C. 79, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 226.

A marriage by banns, where, by the consent of both parties, one of the christian names of the man (a minor) was omitted for the purpose of concealment, is null and void under stat. 4 Geo. 4. c. 76. ss. 7, 22. Quære—if only one of the parties knew of the false publication. Wiltshire v. Prince, 3 Hag. Ec. 352.

On a publication of banns of marriage the woman was married by a name which had been entered by mistake in the register-book of baptisms when she was baptized; but which was not her name, nor had she ever been known by it. The mistake in such entry was not discovered, until search was made in order to have the banns published. No fraud was intended. Held, nevertheless, that the publication of the banns was void; and, consequently, the marriage invalid. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Tibshelf, 8 Law J. M.C. 120, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 190.

A citation issuing as "in a suit of nullity of marriage, by reason of a former marriage," will not found a sentence of separation, "by reason of an undue publication of banns," the woman being therein described as spinster, the first husband having died subsequent to the publication of banns, but prior to the marriage. Wright v. Ellwood, 2 Hag. Ec. 598.

To found a sentence of nullity by reason of impotency, the impediment must be sworn to have existed at the marriage, and to be incurable—impediment not proved incurable. Semble, that an impediment not natural, but supervening, is no ground of nullity. Brown v. Brown, 1 Hag. Ec. 523.

In a suit of nullity, by reason of the impotency of the man, a certificate (twelve years after marriage,) that the woman was virgo intacta viro, coupled with two several confessions by the man of his incapacity to two medical witnesses, and with proof that the woman's health had suffered, though the man had not given in his answers, had removed into France, and refused to undergo surgical examination: Held sufficient. Pollard v. Wyburn, 1 Hag. Ec. 725.

In May 1816, a marriage ceremony between M and G (according to the evidence of one witness, who spoke positively to the performance of the ceremony, and the indentity of the parties, confirmed by another witness, who spoke with less firmness as to the indentity,) was performed by a minister of the church of Scotland, upon the production of an instrument, purporting and proved to be a certificate of a proclamation of banns, which proclamation, from the date of the certificate, as compared with a registrate of the marriage and the evidence of the witnesses, could not possibly have been made. But it was proved to be the usual certificate, and that, according to the practice in Scotland at the time, banns were in fact scarcely ever proclaimed, when such certificate was given. The minister who performed the ceremony had afterwards been banished for forgery and collusion in effecting a marriage, and became incompetent to give evidence; but a book kept by him, in which the marriage in question appeared to be regularly entered, was produced, and proved by the wife and daughter of the minister, who also proved the performance of the ceremony.

M, who had afterwards married another husband, upon a suit to establish the first marriage, in her defence admitted, that one evening in May 1816, by means of threats, and particularly of personal injury to a rival suitor, who afterwards became the second husband, she was induced to go, and went, with G to the house of the minister before mentioned, but, from the agitation of her mind, that she was incapable of paying attention to what then passed, and was convinced that she did not consent to the marriage. She also admitted, that after the ceremony she returned with G to her father's house, but denied the consummation.

It was in evidence that M was in the habit of calling upon G at his printing-office, late in the evening and alone; and that after the ceremony of marriage, in speaking of it, she said "it was not binding: what could two or three words of an outlawed man do?" It was also in evidence, that on two occasions, in the presence of her father, she was addressed, and her health drunk by the name of Mrs. G, which salutation was in one instance returned, and in another received without observation, by her or her father. It was also in evidence, that upon two occasions, I, the second husband, after his marriage, came to the house of M, when G was there, and went secretly to an upper room, where he remained alone.

The marriage with G, as alleged, took place in May 1816. In June 1816, a marriage was regularly solemnized between M and I. It was proved that G before his alleged marriage with M, had admitted that I was a more favoured suitor; that upon the marriage between M and I, he had accepted a present of a pair of gloves; that he had been frequently present in social parties with I and M, to whom he drank by the name of Mrs. I; that he slept in the same room where M and I were in bed together as man and wife, and in all his intercourse with them, which was very frequent, recognized them as such.

Two years after the marriage of M and I, and their cohabitation, G raised an action in the Commissaries Court against M, of declarator of marriage and adherence. There was issue of the marriage between M and I; but neither the children nor I were made parties:—Held, (reversing the judgment below) that if a celebration of the ceremony of marriage took place between M and G, it was to be presumed, under the circumstances before stated, that there was no real consent to marry. Whether it is necessary that the second husband and the children should be parties to the suit—quære.

Semble—that according to the practice of the ecclesiastical court, it is only necessary to make the principal a party; but that the other parties interested may intervene, if they think fit, at any stage of the suit.

Supposing that the evidence had been deemed sufficient to warrant a declarator of marriage between M and G, whether a sentence of adherence ought also to have been pronounced—quære.

Upon a summons which alleges an irregular marriage, followed by consummation, and a regular marriage celebrated with a view to complete the irregular marriage, whether proof of the latter marriage, no proof being given of the former, would be a sufficient proof of marriage—quære.

Whether, after judgment upon such a summons, and proof negativing the alleged regular marriage, a new action could be brought to establish the regular marriage—quære.

Whether, according to the law of Scotland, entries made in a book kept by a minister of the Church of Scotland, in the manner above described, are admissible in evidence to prove a marriage; and how marriages are to be proved, supposing the minister and witnesses to be dead or incompetent—quære.

Whether, the admissions of a woman, who may be claimed as a wife by two persons, under such alleged ceremonies of marriage, and circumstances as above stated, are admissible in evidence, as proof of the first marriage—quære.

Whether a marriage celebrated by a minister of the Church of Scotland, upon such certificate as above mentioned, without actual publication of banns, is to be deemed, according to the practice, a regular marriage in Scotland—quære.

Assuming it to be an irregular marriage, previous and subsequent conduct of the parties is admissible evidence upon the question of consent. Macneill v. Macgregor, 2 Bligh, N.S. 393, s. c. 1 D. & Cl. A.C. 208.

(B) Breach of Promise of.

Declaration on a promise of marriage need not state the settlement of the fortune. Atchinson v. Baker, Pea. A.C. 124. [Kenyon]

A general promise to marry, is a promise to marry on request; and, therefore, evidence of a promise to marry after a future uncertain event, will not support a declaration stating a general promise.

Bodily infirmity, arising after the contract, is a good reason for either party to break it off. Atchinson v. Baker, Pea. A.C. 103. [Kenyon]

(C) Evidence of.

In an action for crim. con. at the suit of a Quaker, proof of a marriage according to the forms of that society is sufficient to sustain the action. Deane v. Thomas, 1 M. & M. 361. [Tenterden]

An entry of baptism in 1820, (the marriage taking place in 1813,) reciting that the party was "said to be born in 1795," is not admissible, either as proof of the non-age, or in order to prevent a suspicion of suppression of evidence. A letter from the father, two months after the marriage, expressive of his anger at the marriage, is admissible as part of the res gestæ; and a subsequent de facto marriage of the woman with another man is pleadable, to shew that the parties did not live together as husband and wife. Duins v. Donovan, 3 Hag. Ec. 301.

In a suit for a declarator of marriage, founded on a promise subsequente copulæ, there was no direct evidence of the promise; but, from facts and circumstances, and chiefly from letters written by the defender to the pursuer, (the defender having destroyed the letters written by the pursuer to him,) the Commissary Court and Court of Session thought that there was sufficient to warrant the inference that a promise of marriage had been given and accepted previous to the concubitus, and declare for the marriage. The judgment affirmed by the Lords. Honyman v. Campbell, 2 D. & Cl. 266.

A acted as the owner of premises, and made a contract with a water company to supply the premises with water at a certain height. In his absence his men, to the injury of the company, fixed the pipe at a higher level. After it was done, A knew of it. A was not, in fact, the owner of the premises:—Held, that he was liable in an action on the case, brought by the company. West Middlesex Waterworks Company v. Suwerkrop, 4 C. & P. 87, s. c. 1 M. & M. 408. [Tenterden]

A had several of his children residing in a house distant from his own, in the charge of B, a servant:—Held, that if an accident happened to one of the children, A was liable to pay for its cure, although he did not know the surgeon who was called in, and although the accident might have arisen from the carelessness of the servant. Held, also, that if B, the servant, becoming ill in consequence of the service, call in C, a surgeon, and after this A send his own surgeon, and the wife of A know of C's attendance, and expresses no disapprobation, A is liable to pay C for this attendance.

A servant, who hurt her foot in getting over a gate, called in a surgeon, who was not the regular medical attendant of the family, without the knowledge of her master or mistress:—Held, that the master was not liable to pay the surgeon's bill. Cooper v. Phillips, 4 C. & P. 581. [Tenterden]

A master is liable in trespass for any act done by his servant in the course of executing his orders with ordinary care: and therefore, where a master ordered a servant to lay down a quantity of rubbish near his neighbour's wall, but so that it might not touch the same, and the servant used ordinary care in executing the orders of his master, but some of the rubbish naturally ran against the wall:—Held, that the master was liable in trespass. Gregory v. Piper, 9 B. & C. 591, s. c. 4 M. & R. 510.

Where a trader harbours and conceals smuggled goods, he is liable in penalties for the illegal act of a servant, done in the conduct of the business, with a view to protect the smuggled goods, though the master be absent at the time, and the act be done by the servant upon the exigency of the occasion, when the goods are discovered. Attorney General v. Seddon, 9 Law J. To justify a master in dismissing a yearly servant before the expiration of the year, there must be, on the part of the servant, either moral misconduct, pecuniary or otherwise, wilful disobedience, or habitual neglect. Callo v. Brounsker, 4 C. & P. 518. [J. Parke]

A clerk and traveller, hired by the year, assaulted his employer's maid servant, with intent to ravish her:—Held, to be good cause for his dismissal without any notice.

Semble, that a person dismissed under such circumstances is not entitled to wages, even for the time during which he has served. Atkin v. Acton, 4 C. & P. 208. [Tenterden]

A servant, being engaged for a year at thirty guineas and a suit of clothes, was provided with a livery suit on his entering the service. He was wrongfully turned away within the year:—Held, that he could not maintain trover for the clothes, that not being the proper form of the action. Crocker v. Molyneux, 3 C. & P. 470. [Tenterden]

If a servant has left his service for a considerable time, the presumption is, that all his wages have been paid. It seems that a master is not bound to provide a menial servant with medical attendance and medicines during sickness; but if a servant fall ill, and the master call in his own medical man to attend such servant, the master will not be allowed to deduct the charge for such medical attendance out of the servant's wages, unless there be a special contract between the master and servant that he should do so. Sellon v. Norman, 4 C. & P. 80. Quære—Whether a silk-weaver is within the statute 4 Geo. 4. c. 34.

To bring a person within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate, under the 4th section of that statute, he must have contracted to serve under a written contract, or must actually have entered the complainant's service before the time of the complaint made, and in such a manner as will create the relationship of master and servant.

Therefore, a silk-weaver, who had agreed to wind up, at his own house, certain materials for a manufacturer,—held to have been improperly convicted under the above act. Hardy v. Ryle, 7 Law J. M.C. 118, s. c. 9 B. & C. 603, s. c. 4 M. & R. 235.

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction under the 4 Geo. 4. c. 34, or any of the acts the powers of which are thereby enlarged, unless the relation of master and servant subsist between the parties to the subject matter of his proceeding.

Accordingly, where a person contracted with another to do some work on a road for a specific sum,—Held, that this was not a case in which the Magistrate had jurisdiction.

The merely describing the person, who is proceeded against under the above act, as a "labourer," will not give jurisdiction to the Magistrate.

A conviction under sec. 3. of the above-mentioned act, ought not to adjudge that the servant be dismissed from his service, and be also imprisoned,—the act authorizing a punishment of this nature in the alternative only. Lancaster v. Greaves, 7 Law J. M.C. 116, s. c. 9 B. & C. 628.

MEASURES.

[See Weights and Measures.]

MESNE PROFITS.

The costs of an ejectment may be recovered in an action for mesne profits, though the defendant has appeared and pleaded in the ejectment, and no costs have been taxed. Symonds v. Page, 1 C. & J. 29.

Although a judgment in ejectment is conclusive in an action for mesne profits of the title of the lessor of the plaintiff, from the day laid in the demise, such judgment is no evidence in such an action as to the time for which the defendant occupied the premises. Consequently, it is no objection to the right of a plaintiff in ejectment, that the day of the demise is carried back to a time before the defendant entered into possession; provided the plaintiff, at the time he has himself chosen to lay the demise, had the title. Doe d. Fildes v. Ferne, 8 Law J. K.B. 174.

MISDEMEANOR.

A woman was delivered of a child, whose dead body was found at her father's house, in a bed, among the feathers. There was no evidence to shew who placed it there; but, it being proved that the woman had sent for a surgeon at the time of her confinement, and had prepared child's clothes,—the learned Judge directed an acquittal on the charge of endeavouring to conceal the birth. Rex v. Higley, 4 C. & P. 366. [Park]

An indictment charged an assault with intent to commit a felony, and a common assault. The verdict found the defendant guilty of the misdemeanor and offence charged in manner and form as by the indictment was alleged. The judgment was, that the defendant should be imprisoned and kept to hard labour; the latter part of the judgment not being warranted, unless the verdict could be underood as affirming the first count:—Held, that the ord "misdemeanor" might properly be understood a nomen collectivum; that the finding of the jury pplied to the whole of the indictment; and consequently, that the judgment was warranted by the erdict.

Where a misdemeanor at common law is punishble by statute, by a punishment not warranted by ommon law, it is not necessary, in order to warrant he statute punishment, that the indictment should e founded upon the statute, or in any manner rer to it. Rex v. Powell, 9 Law J. M.C. 71, a. c. B. & Ad. 75.

By statute 9 Geo. 4. c. 31. s. 27, two Justices may onviet summarily of a common assault, and convicion or acquittal before them bars further proceedigs. Section 29. precludes them from exercising heir jurisdiction, if they find the assault to have een accompanied by any attempt to commit felony. wo Justices convicted summarily, as of a common ssault, where it appeared by the deposition that the efendant had laid hands upon the prosecutor in an ndecent manner, but without violence. A certiorari ving moved for, on the ground that the offence, if ommitted, was accompanied by a felonious attempt, nd therefore within s. 29,—the Court refused to nterfere, inasmuch as no excess of jurisdiction ppeared on the face of the conviction, and the vidence (of which the Magistrates were the judges) id not clearly shew an intention to commit felony.

And, semble, that although this had appeared by he deposition, and the conviction had been consequently illegal, the Court of King's Bench would not ave interposed by certiorari. Anon. 1 B. & Ad. 382.

MONEY COUNTS.

(A) MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED.
(B) MONEY PAID.

(A) MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED.

A gave a sum of money into the hands of B, to y to C; B had not paid it over to C:—Held, that C had not consented to receive this sum of B, A ght countermand the authority, and recover it back om B. Owen v. Bowen, 4 C. & P. 93. [Tenterden]

If A agrees to sell an estate to B, and is afterards disabled from doing so, B may recover back s money deposited, in an action for money had and eived, although the contract for sale be under seal. ssille v. Da Costa, Peo. A.C. 113. [Kenyon]

A remitted to B a bank bill indorsed, "Pay to order of B, under provision for my note in favour C, payable at the house of B, 1st January 1830." received the proceeds of the bill, and refused to y them over to C; in an action for money had and eived by C,—Held, that B was not liable to C, cause B had never assented to hold the bill or ney to the use of C. Wedlake v. Hurley, 1 C. & 33.

The plaintiff entered into an agreement with the endant to let him certain land on a building lease, and to lend him 4,000*l.* for the purpose of erecting twenty houses; the money to be repaid on the 24th of June 1828: and the defendant agreed to build the houses, and to convey them to the plaintiff, as a security for the sum to be advanced. The plaintiff advanced the defendant 1,168*l.*, and the latter built six houses, and then, at the request of the plaintiff, discontinued the building:—Held, that, at the expiration of the time stipulated for re-payment of the money advanced, the plaintiff might recover the 1,168*l.* on the common money counts. James v. Cotton, 9 Law J. C.P. 55, a. c. 7 Bing. 266, a. c. 5 M. & P. 26.

The defendants entered into an agreement with one J C, appointing him their agent, for purchasing and working mines in Peru, for which he was to receive a certain salary, and a fifth of the profits. J C proceeded accordingly to South America, furnished with a letter of instructions, a letter of credit empowering him to draw upon them for 10,000*l.*, and also a general power of attorney to enter into, transact, complete, and execute contracts for obtaining a grant or lease of any mine, or for the purchase of ore, &c., or of the right to open, dig, or work any mine; and also to enter into, make and execute any deeds, conveyances, &c.; and generally to do all such acts, &c., as the defendants themselves could do if personally present and acting therein. The 10,000*l.* having already been raised on the letter of credit, the plaintiffs (in ignorance of that fact) made further advances to J C on bills drawn by him upon the defendants. The letter of credit and power of attorney were not shewn to the plaintiffs when they advanced the money, nor did it appear that they asked for them. The bills being refused acceptance:—The Court held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the amount as money had and received. Withington v. Herring, 7 Law J. C.P. 172, a. c. 5 Bing. 442, a. c. 3 M. & P. 30.

A was indebted to B in a sum of 868*l.*, for which he was arrested. C, who was clerk to B's attorney, directed him to be discharged on paying 700*l.* only. B threatened to complain to C's employers, to prevent which C advanced 100*l.*, B agreeing that it should be repaid whenever the balance of 168*l.* should be recovered from A. After the death of B and C, the balance was recovered:—Held, that the representatives of C might recover the 100*l.* from the representatives of B, on a count for money had and received to their use, and that there was no necessity to declare specially. Platts, Administratrix of Mantle, v. Lean, 3 C. & P. 561. [Tenterden]

If an attorney sue out a writ against A at the suit of B, without any authority, expressed or implied, from B, for so doing, and A pay the costs of such writ to the attorney, A may recover back the amount of those costs, by bringing an action for money had and received against the attorney; but if the attorney had any authority either express or implied, from B, to sue out the writ, such a count for money had and received will not lie against the attorney, even though B had no cause of action against A. Dupen v. Keeling, 4 C. & P. 102. [Parke]

The defendants received money to the use of A and B, assignees of a bankrupt. B afterwards removed, and A became the sole assignee, the money still remaining in the hands of the defendants. He may well declare as for money had and received to his own use as assignee, without mentioning B at all. Steward v. Lee, 1 M. & M. 158. [Tenterden]

In an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, the bill is not admissible as evidence of money had and received. Eales v. Dicker, 1 M. & M. 324. [Littledale]

(B) MONEY PAID.

An action for money paid to the use of the defendant may be maintained by a sheriff's officer who has paid the debt and costs on an attachment against the sheriff, bail above not having been put in through the misconduct of the defendant in imposing insufficient bail on the sheriff, and the defendant having promised to indemnify the officer, both before and after the payment: but the officer cannot recover beyond the debt. White v. Leroux, 1 M. & M. 347. [Tenterden]

The plaintiff accepted a bill for the accommodation of H, who deposited it with the defendant as a security for goods bought of him. H afterwards paid for the goods; but, he being further indebted to the defendant, the latter refused to restore the bill, and subsequently indorsed it for value to a third person, who sued the plaintiff thereon, and recovered from him the amount with costs:—Held, that the plaintiff might sue the defendant for the amount of the bill, as for money paid to his use. Bleaden v. Charles, 9 Law J. C.P. 82, s. c. 7 Bing. 246, s. c. 5 M. & P. 14.

MORTGAGE.

[See SURRENDER.]

(A) WHAT CONSTITUTES A MORTGAGE.
(B) RIGHTS OF THE MORTGAGOR.
(C) RIGHTS, INTERESTS AND LIABILITIES OF THE MORTGAGEE.
(D) REDEMPTION.
(E) FORECLOSURE.
(F) ACCOUNTS.
(G) COSTS.

(A) WHAT CONSTITUTES A MORTGAGE.

A mere deposit of deeds, even without a word, may constitute an equitable mortgage, but it can only occur as against strangers, in cases where the possession of the title deeds can be accounted for in no other manner, except from their having been deposited by way of equitable mortgage, or the holder being otherwise a stranger to the title and to the lands. Bozon v. Williams, 3 Y. & J. 150.

(B) RIGHTS OF THE MORTGAGOR.

The mere circumstance of a person being the mortgagor in possession does not create such a tenancy between the mortgagor and mortgagee as to entitle the former to a notice to quit, or even to a demand of possession, before ejectment be brought against him at the suit of the latter. Doe d. Griffith v. Mayo, 7 Law J. K.B. 84.

(C) RIGHTS, INTERESTS, AND LIABILITIES OF THE MORTGAGEE.

By a mortgage deed, the mortgagor covenanted, that, if the principal sum advanced was not repaid, with interest, on a given day, the mortgagee might enter and sell the premises without the assent or concurrence of the mortgagor; the mortgagor having remained in possession, and the principal sum not having been repaid on the day mentioned in the deed:—Held, that the mortgagee might maintain ejectment without a notice to quit, or a previous demand of possession. Doe d. Fisher v. Giles, 7 Law J. C.P. 134, s. c. 5 Bing. 421, s. c. 2 M. & P. 749.

A mortgagee is entitled either to affirm or disaffirm a tenancy created subsequent to the mortgage, between the mortgagor and his tenant. If he affirm it, he is entitled to all rent which may become due after he gives notice of his affirming the tenancy.

Whether, in case of his affirming it, the tenant be justified in paying him not only the rent which may become due subsequent to the notice, but also rent which had become due before the notice, but had not been paid—quære. Semble, that he would; but at all events he would, if the mortgagee added a threat to proceed in case of non-payment. The tenant, being liable to ejectment, and to payment of the amount of such rent as mesne profits, is not bound to incur the expense of an ejectment. Pope v. Biggs, 7 Law J. K.B. 246, s. c. 9 B. & C. 245, s. c. 4 M. & R. 173.

A mortgagee has no title to the rents of the mortgaged premises, which have been paid into court by a receiver, appointed in a suit for establishing the will of the mortgagor, notwithstanding that, after the appointment of a receiver, he gave notice to the tenants to pay the rents to him. He ought to have followed up that notice by moving to discharge the receiver. Thomas v. Brigstocke, 4 Russ. 64.

Where a tenant, having mortgaged his lease, has neglected to pay rent and costs, or file his bill, according to the provisions of the tenancy acts, within six months from the time of execution executed, on an ejectment brought by the landlord, the mortgagee has a further period of three months within which he may, by payment of rent and costs, or filing his bill and lodging the money in court, save the lease from forfeiture. O'Reilly v. Featherston, 2 D. & Cl. 39.

A, having the fee simple of an estate, on his marriage settles it to the use of self for life, remainder to trustees for 100 years to secure wife's jointure; remainder to other trustees for 500 years, for raising portions; remainder to the use of first and other sons of the marriage in tail male; remainder to first and other sons in tail male of any other marriage; remainder to the use of divers persons for life, &c.; with ultimate remainder to A, his heirs and assigns for ever.

A, having no issue, executed a mortgage of part of the estate to B, and created a term of 500 years for securing the money lent; A died without ever having had any lawful issue; and B filed his bill to have the limitations, subsequent to those for the benefit of A's issue, declared voluntary as against him:—The Court made a decree in favour of the security. Gray v. Legard, 9 Law J. Chanc. 80.

A mortgagee petitioned for the sale of his security, and to be permitted to prove the full amount of his debt in a suit for the administration of the assets of the deceased mortgagor:—Held, that he could prove only for so much of his debt as might remain unpaid by the produce of the mortgaged estate. Greenwood v. Taylor, 1 Russ. & M. 185.

A mortgagee of a term is liable to the ground rent, though he does not take possession. If the original lessee is obliged to pay ground rent, he may recover it from the assignee in possession. Stone v. Evans, Peo. A.C. 94. [Kenyon]

A mortgagee having refused to reconvey and deliver up the title deeds, though the amount of the mortgage money and interest was tendered to him on the day on which the mortgage was redeemable, a decree was made against him, with costs; and the money having been paid into court, no interest was allowed to him subsequent to the tender. Roberts v. Jefferys, 8 Law J. Chanc. 136.

(D) Redemption.

N, being entitled to certain lands as issue in tail, conveys them in 1749, by lease and release to a mortgagee, in fee, to secure 800*l.* borrowed, and levies a fine of the lands pursuant to covenant, for the purpose of perfecting the security. In 1762, N borrows 450*l.*, and charges it upon the same lands by deed-poll. N died in 1764, leaving the charge upon the lands of the aggregate sum of 1,250*l.*, with an arrear of interest, and he by his will devised all his lands to M, his wife. In 1766, M having married A B, they, by lease and release, reciting the mortgage, and that A B had paid the interest, grant and confirm the mortgaged lands to the mortgagee, reserving the equity of redemption to A B, his heirs, &c. By a deed in 1789, 300*l.*, an arrear of interest, is added to the principal, and the aggregate sum of 1,550*l.*, is charged on the lands, subject to redemption, as by the former deed. M died in 1794, leaving R H, a son by the first husband, her heir-at-law. In 1797, A B sold part of the mortgaged lands, and in consideration of 200*l.*, principal and interest, paid to the mortgagee, and 600*l.* paid to A B, he and the mortgagee conveyed such part of the lands to R R, the purchaser. The rest of the lands was conveyed by the mortgagee to A B, who died in 1799. Under these circumstances the heir-at-law of M filed a bill in the Exchequer to redeem the lands, and the Court decreed that he was entitled to redeem on payment of the principal money due upon the mortgage, and interest calculated from the death of A B. Upon appeal to the House of Lords from this decree, it was declared that R H, as heir-at-law of M, was entitled, notwithstanding the proviso for redemption reserved to A B, by the deed made between him and the mortgagee, to redeem the lands, "on payment of the principal money and interest, due at the death of M, on the aggregate sum of 1,250*l.*—such interest to be computed according to the proviso in the indenture of release and mortgage." A B, being entitled in equity to have the interest due at the death of his wife added to the principal, and considered as an aggregate sum with the principal, A B and M his wife not being bound to keep down the interest during her life, for the benefit of her heir-at-law, &c., and that an account should be taken of what was due for principal and interest on the mortgage at the death of M. The decree of the Exchequer being varied, according to this order, it was referred to the Master to take the accounts so directed; and it appeared in evidence before him, that A B and M his wife, during her life, paid to the mortgagee, on account of interest, 1,500*l.*; but the Master, in his report did not include this sum; but reported, that there was due upon this account for principal 1,250*l.*, and for interest at the death of M, 286*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* On this ground exceptions were taken to the report, which being in this respect confirmed, and decree made upon further directions accordingly, a further appeal was presented to the House of Lords. But the decree was affirmed, the House being of opinion that the representative of the husband was not entitled, as against the heir of the wife, to an allowance of interest actually paid by the husband during the life of his wife; and that the former order of the House, directing the account of interest due on the mortgage, at the death of M, meant interest actually due. Ruscombe v. Hare, 2 Bligh, N.S. 192.

A having deposited leases with B, to secure monies borrowed at different times, from 1805 to 1813, in the latter year signed an agreement, giving up all his interest to the mortgagee; it was proved that the sum due to the mortgagee was a very inadequate consideration on a bill to redeem, and that the agreement should stand only as a security:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to relief in equity, and bill dismissed. Purdie v. Millett, 1 Tam. 28.

To a bill for the redemption of a mortgage term, all the cestui que trusts interested in the produce of the term, as residuary legatees, under the mortgagee's will, are necessary parties, although they are numerous and the property small, and although the trustees have power to give a discharge to purchasers. Osbourn v. Fallows, 1 Russ. & M. 741.

(E) Foreclosure.

[Nenny v. Edwards, 4 Russ. 124, Dig. Law J. 351.]

An insolvent mortgagor, even where his assignees disclaim all interest in the equity of redemption, ought not to be made a party to a suit for foreclosing the mortgage. Collins v. Shirley, 1 Russ. & M. 638.

(F) Accounts.

A mortgagee is entitled to be allowed, in account against the mortgagor, all expenses properly incurred for the recovery of the mortgage money. Ellison v. Wright, 3 Russ. 458.

(G) Costs.

Costs of proceedings at law, commenced after the institution of the suit, are proper to be included in the reference to the Master to take the account. Dawkins v. Evans, 9 Law J. Chanc. 179.

Where, upon a bill of redemption and foreclosure, the mortgagee assigns his mortgage, after a decree for the usual accounts, the mortgagor is not to pay the costs of the supplemental bill, which is necessary to bring the assignee of the mortgagee before the Court. Barry v. Wray, 3 Russ. 465.

A first incumbrancer having a power of sale, but having lost the title deeds, institutes a suit to have the estate sold, the subsequent incumbrancers are entitled to be paid their costs, although the proceeds of the sale are not sufficient to pay what is due to the plaintiff. Wentner v. Wright, 2 Sim. 543.

MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER.

A was fighting with his brother; to prevent this B had hold of A, and held him down upon a locker on board the barge in which they were, but struck no blow: A stabbed B:—Held, that if B did nothing more than was sufficient to prevent A from beating his brother, and had died of this stab, the offence of A would have been murder; but that if B did more than was necessary to prevent the beating of A's brother, it would have been manslaughter only. Rex v. Rowse, 5 C. & P. 120. [J. Parke]

A was charged with suffocating B, by placing both her hands about the neck of B:—Held, that A might be convicted on this indictment, if B was suffocated in any manner, either by A, or by any other person in her presence, she being privy to the commission of the offence. The phrase "about the neck," in an indictment for murder, is good, and is not open to the same objection as "about the breast." Rex v. Culkin, 5 C. & P. 121. [J. Parke]

In an indictment for murder, committed by a British subject abroad, it must be averred that the prisoner and the deceased were subjects of His Majesty. To prove the allegation that the prisoner was a subject of His Majesty, his own declaration is evidence to go to the jury, and it will be for them to say, whether they are satisfied that he is a British born subject. A bill of indictment for this offence ought not to state it to have been committed "at Boulogne, in the kingdom of France, to wit, at the parish of St. Mary-le-Bow," &c.; and it being so stated, the Court directed the London venue to be struck out, before the bill was found by the grand jury. Rex v. Helsham, 4 C. & P. 394. [Bayley and Bosanquet]

A was indicted for the murder of H. It was opened that A, having malice against P, hired H to murder him, and that H did so, but that, H being detected, A had murdered H to prevent a discovery of his (A's) guilt, respecting the murder of P. Evidence was given of expressions of malice used by A towards P; and it was held, that the prosecutor might also give evidence to shew that H was, in fact, the person by whom P had been murdered. Rex v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221. [Littledale]

A person acting as a medical man, whether licensed or unlicensed, is not criminally responsible for the death of a patient, occasioned by his treatment, unless his conduct is characterized either by gross ignorance of his art, or gross inattention to his patient's safety. On an indictment for manslaughter, whether the death is occasioned by the application of a lotion to the skin, evidence may be given of the effect of the lotion, when applied to other patients. Rex v. Long, 4 C. & P. 398. [Park]

Where a person, undertaking the cure of a disease (whether he has received a medical education or not,) is guilty of gross negligence in attending his patient after he has applied a remedy, or of gross rashness in the application of it, and death ensues in consequence of either, he is liable to be convicted of manslaughter. Rex v. Long, 4 C. & P. 423. [Bayley, Bolland and Bosanquet]

If a person bonâ fide and honestly exercising his best skill to cure a patient, perform an operation which causes the patient's death, he is not guilty of manslaughter; and it makes no difference whether such person be a regular surgeon or not, nor whether he has had a regular medical education or not. Rex v. Van Butchell, 3 C. & P. 629. [Hullock]

An indictment for manslaughter charged, that A gave the deceased divers mortal blows at P, in the county of M, and that the deceased languished and died at D, in the county of K; and that the prisoner was then and there aiding in the commission of the felony:—Held, that the indictment was good, and that the word there referred to P, in the county of M. Rex v. Hargrave, 5 C. & P. 170. [Patteson]

Although all persons at and sanctioning a prize-fight, where one of the combatants is killed, are guilty of manslaughter, as principals in the second degree; yet they are not such accomplices as require their evidence to be confirmed, if they are called as witnesses against other parties charged with the manslaughter. Rex v. Hargrave, 5 C. & P. 170. [Patteson]

A was indicted for the manslaughter of B, by a blow of a hammer. No proof was given of the striking of any blow, only of a scuffle between the parties. The appearance of the injury was consistent with the supposition, either of a blow with a hammer, or of a push against the lock or key of a door:—Held, that if it was occasioned by a blow with a hammer, or any other hard substance held in the hand, it was sufficient to support the indictment; but otherwise, if it was the result of a push against the door. Rex v. Martin, 5 C. & P. 128. [J. Parke]

An indictment for manslaughter charged, that the deceased was on horseback, and that the prisoner struck him with a stick, and that the deceased, from a well-grounded apprehension of a further attack, which would have endangered his life, spurred his horse, which became frightened, and threw him, giving him a mortal fracture. The evidence was, that the prisoner struck the deceased with a small stick, and that the latter rode away, and the former rode after him; whereupon the deceased spurred his horse, which then winced and threw him, whereby he was killed:—Held, that this evidence sufficiently supported the indictment. Rex v. Hickman, 5 C. & P. 151. #### (a) In general.

On a verdict for plaintiff, and motion by defendant for a new trial—semble, that the argument, that f the defendant should obtain a verdict, the plaintiff must, by matter on the record, have judgment non obstante veredicto, will not induce the Court to efuse a new trial, if in other respects proper to be ranted.

The ground suggested (and undecided) was, that he bye-laws were bad on the face of them, in giving he penalty, or part of it, to a stranger to the corporation, and in giving the power of recovering it o a stranger. Davies v. Morgan, 9 Law J. Exch. 53, s. c. 1 C. & J. 587, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 457.

(b) Amount of Damages.

The plaintiff importuned the defendant for charity, nd, refusing to quit the premises when desired, he defendant gave him in charge to a constable, who detained him a night, and on the following morning brought him again to the defendant, who, after some altercation, gave him 2*l.* and afterwards 2*s.* 6*d.*, with which the plaintiff went away. In an action for the false imprisonment, the jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 100*l.* The Court directed a new trial for excessive damages. Price v. Severn, 9 Law J. C.P. 99, s. c. 7 Bing. 316, s. c. 5 M. & P. 125.

The Court adhere so rigidly to their rule, not to hear a motion for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being contrary to the facts, where the verdict is under 20*l.*, that they refused to hear such a motion, although it was made upon affidavit, disclosing fraud not discovered by the unsuccessful party until after the trial. Cannon v. Lamb, 8 Law J. K.B. 501.

Although the Court, it seems, will grant a new trial, where the verdict is perverse, in a cause wherein the matter in dispute is below 20*l.*, they will not grant it if there be evidence on both sides, though greatly disproportionate. Scott v. Watkins, 8 Law J. C.P. 158, s. c. 4 M. & P. 237.

(c) Against Evidence.

Where, on an issue in a suit in equity for small tithes, instituted by a lay impropriator, claiming against persons who set up a title by grant in another, also claiming by lay title, to the tithes of the particular lands in their occupation, the jury found a verdict for the defendants, the Court refused to disturb it, on motion for a new trial, made upon the ground that the evidence, chiefly documentary, was wholly with the plaintiffs, and that the learned Judge had misdirected the jury in respect of the legal doctrine of presumption of right, as applied to tithe cases. Ringrose v. Todd, 12 Price, 650.

(d) Admission and Rejection of Evidence, and Absence of Witnesses.

The Court refused to direct a new trial on the mere ground that a principal witness in the cause was admitted to give evidence, though he had disobeyed an order made by the Judge for the exclusion of the witnesses during the trial. The admission or rejection of a witness in such a case is in the discretion of the Judge. Parker v. M'William, 8 Law J. C.P. 276, s. c. 6 Bing. 683, s. c. 4 M. & P. 480.

Where an interested witness is examined, but his evidence is not material, or the facts proved by him are borne out by other witnesses, the solitary fact of interest, no ground for a new trial. Williams v. Beaumont, 9 Law J. Exch. 16.

The admission of inadmissible evidence on the trial of an issue directed by a court of equity, is not such an objection to a verdict, where there was other evidence given in support of the case of the successful party, as to afford ground for a new trial, if the court of equity, or the Judge who heard the cause, be satisfied with the verdict upon the unobjectionable evidence with reference to the object of the issue. Pulley v. Hilton, 12 Price, 625.

Where a particular piece of evidence has been improperly admitted, but there is otherwise sufficient to sustain the verdict, independently of that which was so improperly admitted, the Court will not grant a new trial. Doe d. Lord Teynham v.

Tyler, 8 Law J. C.P. 222, s. c. 6 Bing. 561, s. c. 4 M. & P. 377.

Semble, that although, on an application for a new trial for rejection of evidence, the Court may be of opinion that such evidence ought to have been received; yet, if it also appears, that from a defect of evidence on the part of the applicant, he would not have been entitled to a verdict, if the rejected evidence had been received, they will refuse the new trial. Davis v. Morgan, 9 Law J. Exch. 153, s. c. 1 C. & J. 157, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 457.

In an action on a bill of exchange, the Court set aside (on payment of costs,) a nonsuit which was occasioned by the non-attendance of the witnesses subpœnaed for the purpose of proving the handwriting of the defendant, the acceptor. Shillito v. Thee, 8 Law J. C.P. 293, s. c. 6 Bing. 753, s. c. 4 M. & P. 575.

The Court will not permit a party to move for a new trial, on an objection to the applicability of evidence, unless the objection be taken before the Judge commences his summing up. Abbott v. Parsons, 7 Bing. 563, s. c. 5 M. & P. 521.

The Court will not relieve a plaintiff by setting aside a nonsuit on payment of costs, where the nonsuit has been suffered in consequence of his being, by mistake, unprepared on the trial. Swayne v. Ingilby, 8 Law J. K.B. 121, s. c. 5 M. & R. 125.

The Court refused to grant a new trial, on payment of costs,—where the cause had been suffered to pass as undefended,—on an affidavit that it so passed through the neglect of the clerk who had the management of the cause. Breach v. Casterton, 9 Law J. C.P. 48, s. c. 7 Bing. 224, s. c. 4 M. & P. 867.

Motion for a new trial on the ground of surprise, refused; it appearing that the defence proposed to be set up was infancy, under circumstances which shewed the merits were against the defendant. Grimsby v. Billing, 9 Law J. K.B. 260.

Where a defendant omitted to appear at the trial in an action for crim. con. with his sister-in-law, and the jury gave more damages than were laid in the declaration, the defendant assigning no good reason for not appearing to defend; the Court refused to grant a new trial on any terms. Masters v. Barnwell, 7 Bing. 224, n.

Where, on the first trial, the defendant, under the general issue, set up a particular defence, the Court on granting a new trial, moved for by him, confined him to the same defence. Thwaites v. Sainsbury, 9 Law J. C.P. 167, s. c. 7 Bing. 437, s. c. 5 M. & P. 321.

Where the plaintiff has died after verdict, the Court may grant a new trial on the application of the defendant, and would in such case impose terms on him to prevent his taking advantage of the plaintiff's death. Griffith v. Williams, 1 C. & J. 47.

(B) Motion for.

A motion for a new trial must be made before the same jurisdiction as directed the former trial, although the Judge may have resigned. Footner v. Figes, 2 Sim. 319.

A motion for a new trial cannot be entertained under the 5 Geo. 4. c. 106, until the transcript has been transmitted to the court above. Davis v. Jones, 8 Law J. K.B. 88.

Where a cause is tried at the sittings in term, a motion may be made for a new trial, at any time within four days after the return of the distringas, although more than four days have elapsed since the trial. Mason v. Clarke, 1 C. & J. 411, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 554.

Where a party wishes to obtain a new trial of an issue, he must first, on an ex parte application, satisfy the Judge in equity, that there is a reasonable ground for sending to the Judge who tried the issue for his notes of the trial. Morris v. Davies, 3 Russ. 318.

(C) Costs.

In an action upon a statute which gives double costs, if a new trial be granted, nothing being said upon the subject of costs, the party who succeeds upon both trials is entitled to double costs of both trials.

By the practice of the Court of Exchequer, where a new trial is granted, the party who succeeds upon both trials is entitled to the costs of both trials, if the rule for the new trial is silent upon the subject of costs. Loader v. Thomas, 1 C. & J. 54.

On the trial of an action a verdict was found for the defendant. The Court set aside that verdict upon an objection by the plaintiff, that an unstamped paper had been laid before the jury. The plaintiff did not then carry the cause to a second trial; but took out a rule to discontinue on payment of costs. The Master, on taxation, allowed the defendant the costs of the trial; and the Court held that the defendant was entitled to them. Sweeting v. Hales, 7 Law J. K.B. 339, s. c. 4 M. & R. 544.

Where a venire de novo is awarded, the successful party is not entitled to the costs of the first trial. Edwards v. Brown, 9 Law J. Exch. 84, s. c. 1 C. & J. 307, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 182.

NONSUIT.

Where the Judge on the trial is of opinion that the plaintiff ought to be nonsuited, but the plaintiff's counsel refuses to be nonsuited, and the jury find a verdict for the plaintiff—semble, that the Court cannot order a nonsuit to be entered, but will order a new trial. Barber v. Stokes, 7 Law J. K.B. 206.

Where some issues are found for the plaintiff and others for the defendant—a nonsuit may be entered by the Court on the whole case, the point being reserved by the Judge. Shepherd v. Bishop of Chester, 8 Law J. C.P. 141, s. c. 6 Bing. 435, s. c. 4 M. & P. 130.

Where a Judge, in his charge to the jury, leaves to them two questions, upon their deciding either of which in a particular way, he tells them they are to find for the defendant, and are to state to him upon which of the questions they decide, and the plaintiff thereupon chooses to be nonsuited;—the Court will not afterwards set aside the nonsuit, although they may think the Judge was wrong upon one of the questions. Vacher v. Cooke, 8 Law J. K.B. 341, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 148.

[See ACTION and TRESPASS.]

NUISANCE.

A person whose land is occasionally liable to injury by the overflow of river water, has no right, in his mode of protecting himself against that injury, to produce injury or damage to his neighbours in respect of the course of the same water. Rex v. Trafford, 9 Law J. M.C. 66, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 874.

Whether, upon an indictment for nuisance by obstructing a highway, it be a proper question for the jury, whether the general benefit to the public by the obstruction be equivalent or superior to the inconveniences which thereby result to some of the public—quære. Rex v. Sir John Morris, 9 Law J. K.B. 55, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 441.

A man carrying on a noxious business in a place where it has been long established, is indictable for a nuisance, if the mischief is increased by the manner or extent in which he carries it on; not otherwise, although the business has increased in amount. Rex v. Watts, 2 M. & M. 281. [Tenterden]

OCCUPANCY.

A rent-charge pur autre vie, where the grantee lies, cestui que vie surviving, passes, by operation of the Statute of Frauds, to the executor of the grantee. Bearpark v. Hutchinson, 9 Law J. C.P. 1, s. c. 7 Bing. 179, s. c. 4 M. & P. 848.

OFFICE AND OFFICER.

[11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 58, explained and amended by 1 Will. 4. c. 35, 9 Law J. Stat. 64.

Receipt and appropriation of fees and emoluments of officers of superior courts of common law, regulated by 1 Will. 4. c. 58, 8 Law J. Stat. 117.]

Where a bishop's registrar had a right to appoint a deputy, "to be approved of by the bishop;" and in case no one so appointed was approved and allowed, the bishop was to be at liberty to appoint:—Held, that the bishop, refusing to approve of and allow A B as a deputy, stating, that he so refused "for good and sufficient reasons," was justified in so refusing; and that he was not bound to state his reasons. Rex v. the Bishop of Gloucester, 9 Law J. K.B. 228, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 158.

The office of clerk to the deputy registrar in the Prerogative Court, Canterbury, is not an office connected with the administration of justice within the meaning of statute 5 & 6 Edw. 6. c. 16, so as to prevent its being aliened or charged. Nor is an alienation of or charge on the profits of the office, contrary to the policy of the law, restricting the alienation of the income of a public officer. Aston v. Gwinnell, 3 Y. & J. 136.

The salary of an assistant parliamentary counsel to the Treasury is not assignable, and the Court will not appoint a receiver of it. Cooper v. Reilly, 2 Sim. 560, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 569.

OUTLAWRY.

[See SEQUESTRATION.]

Where to a special capias utlagatum the sheriff returns an inquisition, finding that the defendant has benefices, but no lay fee, this Court will award a writ of sequestration upon reading the transcript of the outlawry and inquisition. Rex 4. Hind, 1 C. & J. 389.

PALACE COURT.

[See MALICIOUS AND VEXATIOUS ARREST.]

PARENT AND CHILD.

[See INFANT and GUARDIAN AND WARD.]

Interest at 4*l*. per cent, directed to be computed on advancements made by a father to his children from the time when the father's property was divisible amongst them. Andrewes v. George, 3 Sim. 393.

Where a father has deserted his children, and is not of ability to maintain them, the Court will make an order, referring it to the Master to approve of a proper person to act in the nature of a guardian, and to inquire whether it will be for the benefit of the infants that a certain sum should be raised out of property to which they are absolutely entitled under a will; and upon the Master's report, that it is for their benefit, and with the consent of the executors of that will, the Court will order the sum to be raised accordingly. In re Mary England, 1 Russ. & M. 499.

The Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian for infants, being wards of the Court, excluding the father: and upon evidence that the father was living in a state of adultery, and had encouraged his children in swearing, keeping low company, &c.; it was held a fit case to exercise the power to exclude him from the guardianship. Wellesley v. Wellesley, 2 Bligh, N.S. 124, s. c. 1 D. & Cl. 152.

PARLIAMENT.

[See 10 Geo. 4. c. 7, enabling Roman Catholics to vote at elections, and to sit and vote in parliament, and 10 Geo. 4. c. 8, relative to election of members of parliament in Ireland, and the qualification of voters, 7 Law J. Stat. 13, 19.]

Persons accepting the offices of governor or deputy governor in the East Indies, excluded from being members of the House of Commons, 10 Geo. 4. c. 62, 7 Law J. Stat. 145.

5 Eliz. c. 1 and 7 Jac. 1. c. 6, repealed so far as they require certain oaths to be taken by members of the House of Commons, 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 9.

The Treating Act, 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 4. only applies to candidates and their agents. Hughes v. Marshall, 5 C. & P. 150. [Patteson]

Semble, that this Court will not assist a party in getting back an estate conveyed by him for an illegal purpose, as, to enable the grantee to vote at an election, or to sit in parliament, even though it has not been used for the illegal purpose. Groves v. Groves, 3 Y. & J. 163.

Quære—Whether an action will lie for refusing to take the oath of a voter at an election for members of parliament:—Clearly it will not, unless the defendant has acted wilfully wrong. Williams v. Lewis, Pea. A.C. 157. [Kenyon]

PARTIES TO SUITS.

[See COMPANY (C).]

(A) WHO MAY BE.
(B) OBJECTION FOR WANT OF.
(C) WHAT PARTIES NECESSARY.
(D) INTEREST OF.

(A) WHO MAY BE.

[See EQUITY.]

[The King of Spain v. Machado, 4 Russ. 225, 360, Dig. Law J. 362.]

A foreign sovereign may sue as a plaintiff in equity. Hullett v. the King of Spain, 2 Bligh, N.S. 31, s.c. 1 D. & Cl. 160.

(B) OBJECTION FOR WANT OF.

Where a defendant in a bill thinks he can rely on an objection of want of parties to the bill, he must make that objection in the court below, and will not be allowed to make it for the first time when the case comes before the House of Lords. Mullins v. Townsend, 2 D. & Cl. 430.

By a treaty between the governments of France and Spain, it is agreed, that France shall pay to the King of Spain, a certain sum of money to be distributed by him among his subjects having claims against the government of France. This sum, by the terms of the treaty, is made payable to an agent to be appointed by the King of Spain. He accordingly appoints an agent, who received the sum stipulated, and afterwards deposits part of it in the hands of merchants in London, in the name of his secretary. But accounts of the money so deposited are rendered by the merchants to the depositor, and not to his secretary.

Upon a bill filed in equity, in the name of the King of Spain as plaintiff, against the depositories and the depositor, stating these facts, and praying a discovery, account, and payment of the money into court, &c. the defendants demurred upon the grounds of a defect of parties, and that a foreign sovereign cannot sue in a court of equity in England:—Held, affirming the order of the Court below, that the demurrer was properly overruled; that a foreign sovereign may sue as plaintiff in equity: and that, under the circumstances of the case, it was not necessary that the cestui que trusts (the Spanish claimants) or the nominee of the agent should be parties to the suit. Hullett v. the King of Spain, 2 Bligh, N.S. 31, s.c. 1 D. & Cl. 109.

(C) WHAT PARTIES NECESSARY.

One party interested in a debt, cannot file a bill for his share without making all the other parties interested in that debt, parties to the suit—Contra as to legatees. Alexander v. Mullins, 9 Law J. Chanc. 3.

If one of two persons named trustees and executors, disclaims and renounces, and afterwards possesses himself of assets as the agent of the other, who has accepted the trust and proved the will, he does not thereby become accountable as a trustee and executor, and ought not to be made a party to a suit for the administration of the estate. Dees v. Everard, 1 Russ. & M. 231, s.c. 1 Tam. 376.

Where a bill was filed against the devisee of the lease, praying that the lease might be declared void, and the defendant insisted that, if the lease was set aside, the plaintiff ought to repay the monies expended by his devisor in the improvement of his premises:—Held, that the executor of the devisor, who had assented to the devise of the lease, was not a necessary party to the suit. Malpas v. Ackland, 2 Russ. 273.

Semble, where the cestui que trusts convey their beneficial interest in a portion of the property to the purchaser, the purchaser may file a bill against the trustee for a conveyance of the legal estate, without making the cestui que trusts, who sold to him, parties to the suit. Goodson v. Ellisson, 3 Russ. 583.

Persons having prior incumbrances on freeholds and copyholds, of which a trader, who died intestate, was seised at the time of his death, ought not to be made parties to a bill for payment of his debts out of his real estate. Parker v. Fuller, 1 Russ. & M. 656.

The mortgagor is a necessary party to a bill by a second mortgagee to redeem the first mortgage, and foreclose the equity of redemption. Farmer v. Curtis, 2 Sim. 466.

A second mortgagee may file a bill of foreclosure against the mortgagor and third mortgagee, without making a first mortgagee a party. Ross v. Page, 2 Sim. 471.

In a bill for raising legacies charged on real estates, the annuitants are necessary parties. Garrett v. Hayter, 9 Law J. Chanc. 197.

To a bill for a commission to ascertain boundaries, all persons having any interest in the property, are necessary parties. Rayley v. Best, 1 Russ. & M. 659.

(D) INTEREST OF.

[Harvey v. Cooke, 4 Russ. 34, Dig. Law J. 364.]

On a bill filed by the King of Spain, against the depositor and depositories of a sum of money, paid by the King of France, to be distributed amongst the subjects of the former, whether, after the money has been brought into court, the parties having an interest in the final distribution could sustain a bill to effectuate their claims—quære. Hullett v. the King of Spain, 2 Bligh, N.S. 31, s.c. 1 D. & Cl. 169.

The Court will not hear a person who is not a party to the suit, though he be materially interested in the subject matter. Delegal v. Naylor, 9 Law J. C.P. 167, s.c. 7 Bing. 460, s.c. 5 M. & P. 443.

(A) PARTNERSHIP.

(a) How constituted.

Nerot v. Burnand, 4 Russ. 247, Dig. Law J. 364, 366.]

Quære—Whether an agreement to give an agent yearly salary, and also a certain share of the profits of a particular adventure, will constitute him partner. Withington v. Herring, 7 Law J. C.P. 72, s. c. 5 Bing. 442, s. c. 3 M. & P. 30.

(b) Dissolution.

Pemberton v. Oakes, 4 Russ. 154, Dig. Law J. 336.]

An advertisement of the dissolution of a partnership in the London Gazette, is not per se notice to parties having had dealings with the firm, resident abroad; but to fix them with a knowledge of the fact, express notice must be given to them. Etievant v. Lyon, 8 Law J. C.P. 3.

The plaintiff and defendant held some powder-mills on a lease, which would expire in 1831, the plaintiff filed his bill for a dissolution of the partnership; it was objected by the defendant, that the partnership must last during the lease; but the Court held the partnership dissolved from the time stated in a notice given by the plaintiff to the defendant. Alcock v. Taylor, 1 Tam. 506.

A person made a contract with one partner alone, not knowing of the other; it was to be a continuing contract, for the hire of a carriage; the partnership was afterwards dissolved, and the partner, with whom the contract was made, left the business, which was continued by the other:—Held, that the person making the contract, was not bound to go on upon it with the other partner. Robson v. Drummond, 9 Law J. K.B. 187, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 303.

If A and B, being partners, dissolve their partnership, and in the deed of dissolution it be stipulated that A shall receive all debts due to the firm, and afterwards, C, a debtor of the firm, accept a bill of exchange drawn by B, for the amount of the debt due to the firm:—Held, that this stipulation in the deed of dissolution is no defence to an action by B against C on this bill of exchange.

Either partner, after a dissolution of partnership, may receive debts due to the firm, notwithstanding such a stipulation in the deed of dissolution; and, after a dissolution of partnership, either party may give a release to a debtor of the firm. King v. Smith, 1 C. & P. 108. [Tenterden]

A general dissolution of partnership between A and B, does not operate to discharge A from his responsibility for the subsequent conduct of B, in respect of the engagements of the partnership with third persons, made prior to the dissolution. Anet v. Goodrich, 4 Russ. 430.

(B) PARTNERS.

(a) Rights and Interests.

[See post (C, a).]

A and B being in partnership, and A residing in England, and B in America, A may bind B by a bill of exchange drawn in their joint names, though B had no notice of the bill, nor is at all interested in the transaction, provided the holder do not know of the fraud. Sutton v. Gregory, Pea. A.C. 150. [Kenyon]

One of two partners having, after the dissolution of the partnership, given a cognovit for a partnership debt due before, and for costs as between attorney and client—The Court set aside a judgment and execution thereon. Rathbone v. Drakeford, 8 Law J. C.P. 117, s. c. 6 Bing. 375, s. c. 4 M. & P. 57.

A deposit of private deeds by one partner, made under a written agreement, to secure payments made for him, will cover payments made on behalf of the firm, if there be evidence that the deposit was really made in respect of the partnership debts. Chuck v. Freen, 2 M. & M. 259. [Tenterden]

A, having undertaken to negotiate for the purchase of certain property, on behalf of an intended partnership, which was to consist of himself and B and C, and a contract for the purchase of the property having been concluded by A, B, and C, with the vendors, those vendors at the same time agree to give, and they afterwards pay to A, 12,000*l.*, for his private benefit, without the knowledge of B and C:—Held, that A was to be considered as having received that sum for the benefit of the new partnership, and that B and C were entitled each to a third part of it. Fawcett v. Whitehouse, 8 Law J. Chanc. 50, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 132.

One of two partners after the dissolution of the partnership, received the rents of a debtor to the partnership, and retained out of them the amount of the debt; and he stated, that he did this on an understanding that the debtor should have credit for the sum so retained, and that he considered the debt to have been satisfied by these monies; but no account had been settled between him and the debtor:—Held, that, as against the other partner, the debt to the partnership was not to be considered as satisfied. Pritchard v. Draper, 1 Russ. & M. 191, s. c. 1 Tam. 332.

Plaintiff and defendant being partners, and defendant being indebted to plaintiff on a separate account, it was agreed between them, that plaintiff should take 2½*l.* per cent. interest on his separate account for six months, from March the 1st, 1827, and 5*l.* per cent. afterwards; that the partnership accounts should be made up, and the defendant's share of the proceeds go towards the liquidation of his separate debt; that plaintiff should receive sums due to the firm, discharge partnership debts, and apply the balance towards discharging the defendant's separate debts; that the partnership might be dissolved any 1st of January, on six months notice being given; but that, in consequence of the plaintiff's concessions as to interest, it was expected there should be no dissolution on the 1st of January next ensuing:—Held, that this agreement did not suspend the plaintiff's right to sue the defendant for the separate debt due from him to the plaintiff. Simpson v. Rackham, 7 Bing. 617, s. c. 5 M. & P. 618.

(b) Liabilities.

The subscribers who attend a committee for managing the concerns of an hospital, are liable to the creditors of the hospital. Burls v. Smith, 7 Bing. 705, s. c. 5 M. & P. 735.

If A and B, as partners, engage in a speculation with C, A is answerable to C, in respect of the dealings of B in the joint speculation. Ault v. Goodrich, 4 Russ. 430.

Where a lease of mines is taken by six persons, for the purpose of working them in partnership, and the managing partner becomes, in the course of such management, indebted to the concern, his interest in the partnership is in the first place applicable to satisfy his debt to the concern. Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. & M. 45, s. c. 1 Tam. 250.

A secret partner is not liable for contracts made by the firm, after he has retired, with a person who did not know, until after those dealings, that he ever had been a partner. Carter v. Whalley, 8 Law J. K.B. 340, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 11.

Where a bill professes by its acceptance to charge a partnership, apparently consisting of two, a third partner, who has recently joined, and is a secret partner, is liable, if the business of the firm continued to be carried on under the name of the two. Lloyd v. Ashby, 9 Law J. K.B. 144, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 23.

Where one of several partners receives money in the ordinary course of the partnership business, and misappropriates it, a secret partner, as well as an ostensible partner, is liable for the amount:—Held, that the produce of bills wrongfully indorsed by one of the partners in the name of the firm, discounted by the bankers of the firm in the ordinary course, and misappropriated by the partner who so indorsed the bill, could be recovered against the firm, including a secret partner.

But where a person does not become a partner until a given day, although it is arranged that he shall be considered as having been a partner from a previous day, this arrangement between the partners does not render the new partner liable to the engagements of the others with the rest of the world, incurred between the previous day, and the day of his actually becoming a partner. Vere v. Ashby, 8 Law J. K.B. 57, s. c. 10 B. & C. 288.

A, B, and C, (separate merchants in Hull,) engaged in a joint speculation to purchase and import corn. They established no joint fund, but were to contribute money, as wanted, in equal thirds. They appointed an agent, who was to purchase, and to draw on A, and the consignments were to be made to A. This was done accordingly. A accepted the bills payable at his bankers' London agents, and he advised his bankers of the acceptances, in the course of his general dealings, as if his individual transactions; always paying them cash, bills and notes, to a similar amount, which were placed to his credit. They caused all his acceptances to be paid, without ever knowing of the joint speculation. Bills, amounting to 626*l.* part of the paper paid in by A, was accommodation paper between A and B, and was dishonoured; and that amount (part of a larger cash balance, due from A) was ascribable to the advances made to honour A's acceptances. C had always duly paid his third share of the current outlay and demands to A and B, who managed the concern, and he knew nothing of the method by which the bills were met. C, by the bankruptcies of A and B, was obliged to answer joint liabilities besides his share. The bankers discovered that C was concerned, and endeavoured to recover from him, as dormant partner, the 626*l.*, as money advanced to the use of the joint concern:—Held, that the action did not lie, C having given no authority, express or implied, to A to obtain such advances, not being actually nor impliedly privy thereto, and in fact, the bankers having advanced on the credit of A alone, and as his agents. Smith v. Craven, 9 Law J. Exch. 174, s. c. 1 C. & J. 500, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 389.

A carried on business on his own account as a broker and slopseller at X—at which place B & Co. also carried on business as linen-drapers, and arising out of those trades A and B & Co. had transactions together. A, in conjunction with D, a coal-merchant at Y, also carried on business in the coal trade at X, in which latter business B was a secret partner, A having liberty to use the firm of A & Co. for the purposes of that trade. A took bills drawn by him in the partnership firm of A & Co. to B & Co., who were unacquainted with the fact of the secret partnership, for discount. On one occasion B & Co. delivered up to A two separate acceptances of his, which they held on his own private account, as part of the consideration of such discount; and the remainder of the discounts were paid to A, under circumstances not impeaching the bona fides of the transaction as to B & Co. The jury at the trial negatived fraud or collusion on the part of B & Co., and the plaintiffs B & Co. abandoning their verdict to the extent of the amount of the two separate acceptances given up by them to A:—Held, that the liability of D extended to the residue of the bills, there being so far no facts to impeach the title of the plaintiffs. The principle regulating the liability of secret partners being, that, where the partnership firm is pledged, the partnership, consist it of whom it may, and whether the partners are named in the firm or not, and whether they are known partners, or whether they are sleeping or secret partners, will be bound, unless the conduct of the person who seeks to charge such partnership can be impeached. Wintle v. Crowther, 9 Law J. Exch. 65, s. c. 1 C. & J. 316, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 210.

(C) Actions and Suits.

(a) In general.

Where A was indebted to B, and afterwards C entered into partnership with B, and A contracted a further debt with both, and then settled an account with both, as well upon what was due to B before his partnership with C, as upon the debt contracted afterwards:—Held, that B and C might join in an action on an account stated. Moor v. Hill, Pea. A.C. 10. [Kenyon]

Persons trading abroad in such mode as to constitute a partnership here may sue here as partners, for consignments sent to this country, though they cannot sue at the place of trading, by reason of the particular law of that country. Shaw v. Harvey, 1 M. & M. 526.

Where one of the partners in a distillery carried on the business of a retailer of spirits within two miles of the distillery, and his name was not inserted in the entries made and Excise licences taken out by the firm, but the duties had been regularly paid; it was held, in a joint action by all the partners, that they were not precluded from recovering in respect of sales made by them as distillers, by reason of a violation of the statutes 4 Geo. 4. c. 94. ss. 131, 2, and 5 Geo. 4. c. 81. s. 71. Browne v. Duncan, 8 Law J. K.B. 60, s. c. 10 B. & C. 93, s. c. 5 M. & R. 114.

Where the facts of the case are such, that one of several plaintiffs could not recover against the defendant, if the cause of action were considered as accruing to him alone, he cannot sue in conjunction with the other plaintiffs, although they may not have been parties to the facts, which would deprive the other plaintiff from suing alone. Therefore, where a partner in a banking house, for his own accommodation, drew bills upon the defendant, and caused the defendant to accept them, he (the partner) undertaking to provide for them; and afterwards, being indebted to the firm, of which he was a member, he indorsed them for a valuable consideration to the firm:—Held, that an action on the bill could not be maintained by the firm, of which that partner was one. Sparrow v. Chisman, 7 Law J. K.B. 173, s. c. 9 B. & C. 241, s. c. 4 M. & R. 206.

Money, or other property, belonging to two partners, misapplied by one of them, cannot be recovered back in an action in the names of the two. Jones v. Yates, 7 Law J. K.B. 217, s. c. 9 B. & C. 532, s. c. 4 M. & R. 613.

Where one of several partners takes from a debtor to the firm a bill of exchange, the latter cannot in the interim be sued by the firm for the original debt. Tomlins v. Lawrence, 8 Law J. C.P. 29, s. c. 6 Bing. 276, s. c. 3 M. & P. 555.

If a person colludes with one partner in a firm to injure the other partners, those others can maintain a joint action against the person so colluding. Longman v. Pole, 2 M. & M. 223. [Tenterden]

Where two persons joined in the purchase of a policy of insurance upon a life; and on the dropping of the life, one of them received the whole of the money from the insurance office:—Held, that the other might maintain an action at law against his companion for his half of the money; there being no other transaction in which they had a joint interest. Bywater v. Miller, 9 Law J. K.B. 64.

Three firms agreed to be jointly interested in a purchase to be made by one of them. That one accordingly made the contract, and that one alone was known to the vendor in the transaction;—but in an action against the vendor,—Held, that the three might join as plaintiffs. Cothay v. Fennell, 8 Law J. K.B. 302, s. c. 10 B. & C. 671.

Not joining a party, who holds himself out and appears to the world to be a partner, as a plaintiff in the action, is no objection to the plaintiff's recovering: although he might be liable to all the responsibility of being a partner. Kell v. Nainby, 8 Law J. K.B. 99, s. c. 10 B. & C. 20, s. c. 5 M. & R. 76.

(b) Evidence.

A person who held himself out to the world as a partner, and who appeared to the defendant and was believed by him to be a partner with the plaintiff, held to be competent in an action by the plaintiff to prove that he was not one. Kell v. Nainby, 8 Law J. K.B. 99, s. c. 10 B. & C. 20, s. c. 5 M. & R. 76.

In an action brought against one of several partners, either of the partners is a competent witness to prove the liability of the defendant as a partner, although the liability of the witness himself appears by evidence other than his own. Hall v. Curzon, 7 Law J. K.B. 303, s. c. 9 B. & C. 646, s. c. 4 M. & R. 565.

Where, in an action of assumpsit, the defendant pleads in abatement the non-joinder of other persons, who, he contends, were his partners, and the plaintiff takes issue upon the plea, it is not sufficient for the defendant to shew a partnership in fact between him and those other persons. He must shew that the plaintiff knew, or from the circumstances must have believed, that the defendant had partners. De Mantort v. Saunders, 9 Law J. K.B. 51, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 398.

Declarations of one partner, as to the payment, subsequently to a dissolution, of a debt due to the partnership, are admissible against the other partner. Pritchard v. Draper, 1 Russ. & M. 191, s. c. 1 Tam. 332.

Where one of the defendants in a cause informed a third person of the partnership of the defendants, reports of such information by that person are admissible in evidence, though not made to the plaintiff, or in the presence of a defendant. Shott v. Streatfield, 2 M. & M. 8. [Tenterden]

PATENT.

A patentee is bound to state in his specification any matter which has occurred to him between the date of the patent and the enrolling of the specification, the making known of which will tend to effect the desired object with greater facility. Crosley v. Beverley, 7 Law J. K.B. 127, s. c. 9 B. & C. 63, s. c. 3 C. & P. 513, s. c. 1 M. & M. 283. [Tenterden]

A patent was granted "for certain improvements in copper and other plate printing:" from the specification, it appeared, that the invention consisted in communicating to paper a glazed surface, by which the fine lines of the engraving were better exhibited:—Held, that the invention was well described in the patent, and that the specification agreed sufficiently with the title. Sturz v. De la Rue, 7 Law J. Chanc. 47.

A specification of an invention for which a patent had been granted, stated the invention to be an improved apparatus to extract gas from pit-coal, tar, or any other substance, from which gas, capable of being used for illumination, could be extracted by heat:—Held, that the words "other substance" must mean substance ejusdem generis, and that oil was not meant to be included in it; it being shewn, that, at the time in question, oil was considered much too expensive to be used for the making of gas for the lighting of streets and buildings, though it was known to afford an inflammable gas. If in the specification of an improved gas apparatus no direction is given respecting a condenser, which is a necessary part of every gas apparatus, this will not invalidate the patent, if it appear, that every one capable of constructing a gas apparatus must know that a condenser must form a part of it. Crosley v. Beverley, 3 C. & P. 513, s. c. 1 M. & M. 283. [Tenterden]

The patentees of a shearing machine claimed in their specification four things, among which was a brush for raising the pile of the cloth. It was proved that the brush had only been used once by the patentees themselves, and that they had not sold one with a brush; and, that, as to some cloths, it was entirely useless:—The Court held, that, inasmuch as the brush had not been claimed as essential, the mention of it in the specification did not affect the patent; for that every substantive part of a patent need not be useful, although every part claimed must be new.

The patentees claimed that they were the inventors of a machine for shearing cloth from list to list by means of a rotatory cutter. It was proved that the idea could be extracted from the specification of an older patent—that a specification of it had been received from America, and shewn to several persons—that a model of such a machine had been in England before this patent, and seen by several persons, but no machine had been made from it—and also, that a similar machine had been made and used for a very short period, a long time ago:—The Court held, that these circumstances did not amount to a publication, and consequently that the patent was valid. Lewis v. Marling, 8 Law J. K.B. 46, s. c. 10 B. & C. 32, s. c. 5 M. & R. 66, s. c. 3 C. & P. 502.

If A, in 1818, take out a patent for "improvements in a machine for which J L took out a patent in 1815," it is necessary for A, on the trial of an action for the infringement of his patent, to put in J L's patent and specification; but it is not material whether a machine made according to the specification of J L would be useful or not, if it be shewn that a machine constructed according to A's specification would be so. Lewis v. Davis, 3 C. & P. 502. [Tenterden]

A patent was granted for a machine to sharpen knives and scissors, and, in the specification, this was directed to be done, by passing their edges backward and forward in an angle formed by the intersection of two circular files; and in the specification it was also stated, that other materials might be used according to the delicacy of the edge. It was proved that, for scissors, there ought to be one circular file, and a smooth surface, but that two Turkey stones might also succeed:—Held, that the specification was bad, as it neither directed the machines for scissors to be made with Turkey stones, nor to be made with one circular file and a smooth surface. Felton v. Greaves, 3 C. & P. 611. [Tenterden]

Where two patents have been taken out by different persons, at different times, for the means of effecting the same object, it is no objection to the patent last taken out, that, according to the strict construction of the language used in the specification, the object and the means are the same, and the improvement in the latter patent is given by way of illustration only, if, in substance and meaning, the illustration is a distinct specific improvement. Hullett v. Hague, 9 Law J. K.B. 212, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 370.

Injunction granted generally to restrain the sale both before and after the term limited by the patent of machines piratically manufactured while the patent was in force. Crossley v. Beverley—Crossley v. Derby Gas Light Company, 1 Russ. & M. 166, n.

The king, by letters patent, granted to B and B, their heirs and assigns, to be his only printers in Scotland for forty-one-years, to use and enjoy with all its profits and privileges, so far as the same were consistent with the articles of the Union, and especially the sole privilege of printing in Scotland, Bibles, (Biblia Sacra,) Testaments, the Psalms, the Book of Common Prayer, Confessions of Faith, the greater and lesser catechisms in the English tongue. The letters prohibited all other persons, subjects and foreigners, to print in or import into Scotland from any parts beyond the seas, any of the said books, without the authority of B and B, their heirs, assigns, and substitutes, under pain of confiscation:—Held, that the patentees had, under this patent, the exclusive right of printing in Scotland, all the books enumerated in the patent, and that the received English translation of the Bible was within the terms of the patent, and could not be sold in Scotland without the authority of the patentees, although the prohibition in terms extended only to importation from parts beyond seas. Manners v. Blair, 3 Bligh, n. s. 391.

PAUPER.

[See POOR.]

A party may commence a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court in formâ pauperis. In the Goods of Ann Jones, 1 Hag. Ec. 81.

A respondent may be admitted as a pauper in the Court of Appeal; and the Court looks at his faculties at the time of his application, not at what he may have been possessed of at a former time. Taylor v. Morse, 3 Hag. Ec. 179.

In pauper suits, the Court will not compel a solicitor to act for the pauper: but the course is, to assign to him counsel and a six-clerk; and it is the duty of the six-clerk to appoint one of the sixty clerks of his office, to act on the part of the pauper. Lewis v. Kennett, 3 Russ. 466.

Pauper plaintiffs who had been guilty of vexatious conduct in the suit, ordered to be dispaupered. Wagner v. Mears, 3 Sim. 127.

PAVING AND LIGHTING.

[11 Geo. 4. c. 27, 8 Law J. Stat. 58.]

The commissioners under the 57 Geo. 3. c. 29, (the Metropolitan Paving Act) have no power to make a rate for lighting and watching the footpaths on the side of any turnpike road within the operation of the act. Loveridge v. Hodsall, 2 B. & Ad. 602, s. c. 9 Law J. K.B. 285.

The power of the commissioners under the 57 Geo. 3. c. 29. s. 72, (the Metropolitan Paving Act,) is confined to the removing of such things affixed to houses as project over the public way. Bennerie v. Miles, 8 Law J. K.B. 338, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 38.

The limitation clause (s. 136) in the general paving act, 57 Geo. 3. c. 29, overrides those in the various existing local paving acts. The time of commencing actions, therefore, for anything done in pursuance of ny local paving act, is confined to three months from he time of the fact committed. Burns v. Carter, Law J. C.P. 161, s. c. 5 Bing. 429, s. c. 3 M. & P. 1.

PAWNBROKER.

A pawnbroker advanced 200*l.* to a needy trader, upon a deposit of goods, entering the transaction in his books as a loan of several sums each under 10*l.*, a order to obtain the larger rate of interest. The rader becoming bankrupt—Held, that the assignee might recover in trover the goods deposited, the ransaction being usurious and void. Tregoning v. Fitzenborough, 9 Law J. C.P. 28, s. c. 7 Bing. 97, s. c. M. & P. 722.

PAYMENT.

(A) In general.
(B) Of Money into and out of Court.

(A) In general.

A, being the creditor of B, and having an account with C, directs B to remit the money to him. B, keeping cash with a banking-house wherein C is a partner, (though he also carried on a separate business,) gives an order to the banking-house to place to the credit of C the money due, so as to make the same as a payment by a bill at a month to A. The banking-house accordingly writes to C, on account of the order; who answers, that on that day month he will credit A, and on the same day writes in the same manner to A. Before the day on which the credit was to be given, and before any credit actually given, C and the banking-house become bankrupt. This is no payment. Pedder v. Watt, Ses. A.C. 41. [Kenyon]

A tenant who paid rent to certain persons as trustees claiming the legal title, was afterwards evicted by ejectment, and forced to pay again, to persons who had a title paramount to the trustees; and it turned out that they had no title:—Held, that the tenant might recover back from the trustees, in an action for money had and received, the rent he had so paid them; notwithstanding the general rule, that title cannot be tried in that form of action. Newsome v. Graham, 8 Law J. K.B. 100, s. c. 10 B. & C. 153, s. c. 5 M. & R. 64.

The plaintiff employed the defendant, a sworn broker of the city of London, to purchase goods for him. The defendant made the purchases, but charged the plaintiff a profit beyond the amount of his brokerage. In an action to recover back the surcharges, the declaration alleged that the defendant had charged, and the plaintiff had paid, a larger price than the cost price of the goods. To prove the allegation of payment, an account current between the parties, containing various entries both on the debit and credit sides, was given in evidence:—Held, that the credits in this account sufficiently proved payment of the debits therein, according to priority of date. Proctor v. Brain, 7 Law J. C.P. 66, s. c. 2 M. & P. 284.

An allegation that the plaintiff had been forced and obliged to pay, and had paid money, is satisfied by proof that the money was paid for him by his attorney, although he himself did not repay it until after the commencement of the suit. Adams v. Dansey, 8 Law J. C.P. 165, s. c. 6 Bing. 506, s. c. 4 M. & P. 245.

(B) Of Money into and out of Court.

[Furnival v. Bogle, 4 Russ. 142, Dig. Law J. 374.]

[Monies paid into court under acts, afterwards repealed, relating to turnpike roads, canals, bridges, &c., to be appropriated as directed by those acts. 10 Geo. 4. c. 13, 7 Law J. Stat. 27.]

Where the cause of action entitles a plaintiff to interest, and the defendant determines to pay money into court, he must pay in enough to cover interest, not only down to the commencement of the action, but down to the time of paying the money into court. Kidd v. Walker, 9 Law J. K.B. 303, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 705.

Where a declaration consists of several counts, and among them one upon an account stated, against which latter count the defendant pays money into court, the plaintiff will not be allowed to recover upon the other counts, unless he prove a demand exceeding the sum paid in upon the specific count. Churchill v. Day, 7 Law J. K.B. 78, s. c. 3 M. & R. 71.

It is competent to the Court, on the hearing of exceptions, at the same time it allows an exception taken by the defendant, and directs the Master to review his report generally, to order the defendant to pay a sum of money into court, if it is satisfied ultimately that sum will be found due from the defendant. Brown v. De Tastet, 4 Russ. 126.

A new trial having been granted, on the ground of the absence of a material witness, and upon condition of defendant's paying money into court, the defendant was not permitted to take the money out of court, upon a suggestion that, though the witness was now accessible, the plaintiff had refused to answer, and was in contempt for not answering a bill in Chancery, filed by defendant for a discovery, which would have been an answer to the action. Jackson v. Hopkinson, 7 Bing. 557, s. c. 5 M. & P. 511.

In an interpleading suit, the Court will order the money, which has been brought in by the plaintiff, to be paid to a person having authority from all the defendants to receive it, though some of the defendants have not appeared; and for that purpose a reference will be directed to the Master, to inquire whether a sufficient authority to receive the money has been given. Powell v. Sonnet, 3 Russ. 556.

Where an order directing money to be paid out of court is appealed from, the Accountant General is justified in delaying to comply with the order till there has been time for the appellant to make a special application for a stay of proceedings to the Court below. Ferguson v. Tadman, 1 Russ. & M. 331.

Where a decree was made, directing a fund to be paid out of court to a defendant, and afterwards another defendant to the same suit, who claimed an interest in the fund, moved to stay that fund in court, until his claim could be determined,—the Court refused the motion with costs. D'Alton v. Lord Trimleston, 9 Law J. Chanc. 202.

PEER.

The grant of honours is not regulated by the same law as the grant of lands; and therefore, where the Crown granted a peerage to a certain person et hæredibus suis masculis in perpetuum, and the grantee died without issue, the title was held to descend to the male heir of a collateral branch of the family. The Earl of Devon's case, 2 D. & Cl. 200.

Where three Irish peerages are considered extinct, and a new creation takes place, after which one of these peerages is revived, the new creation is valid under the Act of Union with Ireland; but the Crown's right again to create a new peerage will be suspended till the full number of vacancies has occurred. Bloomfield Peerage, 2 D. & Cl. 344.

A peer is privileged from arrest under process from the Ecclesiastical Courts. Westmeath v. Westmeath, 9 Law J. Chanc. 177.

A lord of parliament having pleaded in abatement, that he ought to be sued by original writ, without swearing that he was not so sued, when in fact he was,—judgment was given notwithstanding plea. Baldwin v. Earl of M—, 9 Law J. C.P. 227.

Copies of wills are not evidence to support a claim of peerage. The originals must be produced. Netterville Peerage, 2 D. & Cl. 342.

PENALTY.

[See CONTRACT and COSTS.]

PERJURY.

(A) OFFENCE.
(B) INDICTMENT.
(C) EVIDENCE.

(A) OFFENCE.

Perjury cannot be assigned on an answer in Chancery denying a promise absolutely void by the Statute of Frauds. Rex v. Benesech, Pea. A.C. 93. [Kenyon]

A party filing a bill for an injunction, and making an affidavit of matters material to it, is indictable for perjury committed in that affidavit, though no motion is ever made for an injunction. Rex v. White, 2 M. & M. 271. [Tenterden]

(B) INDICTMENT.

In an indictment for perjury, the supposed perjury arose upon evidence given in reply to the testimony of one of the defendants on the former trial, who was acquitted, and examined as a witness. The indictment did not state his acquittal, nor did the minute of the verdict produced shew it:—Held, that this was immaterial, parol evidence being given to shew that he was not in fact examined. Rex v. Browne, 2 M. & M. 315, s. c. 3 C. & P. 572. [Tenterden]

Indictment for perjury. The material question was stated in the indictment to be, "whether Kenworthy had been arrested by Lister; and whether Lister, on occasion of the said alleged arrest, had put his arms round Kenworthy, and embraced him." The allegation of perjury was, that the defendant falsely swore, on the trial of the issue, that "Lister put his arms round Kenworthy, and embraced him." But there was no previous allegation that the evidence was given of and concerning the alleged arrest. An innuendo followed in these words: "meaning, that Lister had, on the occasion to which the said evidence applied, touched the person of said Kenworthy:"—Held, that the indictment was defective, in not shewing that the occasion to which the evidence applied was the occasion of the alleged arrest. Rex v. Nickole, 8 Law J. M.C. 112, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 21.

(C) EVIDENCE.

To support an indictment for perjury, committed on a trial at the quarter sessions, three witnesses, who heard the party examined, stated what he swore on that trial; and the party was convicted, although neither of the witnesses took down the evidence as it was given, and neither of them professed to state the whole of the evidence that he gave.

To shew that the perjury was wilful and corrupt, evidence may be given of expressions of malice used by the party towards the person against whom he gave the false evidence. Rex v. Munton, 3 C. & P. 498. [Tenterden]

Perjury was assigned on an answer in Chancery to a bill before it was amended:—Held, that to support the allegations respecting the bill, it was sufficient to put in the amended bill, and prove that the amendments were in the hand-writing of a clerk in the Six Clerks' Office, whose duty it would be to make them; but that it was not necessary to call the person who wrote the amendments. Rex v. Leycock, 4 C. & P. 326. [Tenterden]

PHYSICIAN.

The statute of 14 & 15 Hen. 8. c. 5, appointing and regulating the College of Physicians, is a public act. College of Physicians v. Harrison, 2 M. & M. 191. [Tenterden]

PLAYERS.

The statute 28 Geo. 3. c. 30. extends to Justices at Sessions, in respect of provincial players, the licensing power which was previously, by the 10 Geo. 2. c. 28. s. 1, in the King and Lord Chamberlain as to players in Westminster and places of royal residence. And a person who has not obtained a licence under the latter act, is liable to the penalty under the former. Rex v. Neville, 9 Law J. M.C. 107, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 299.

PLEADING.

1. AT LAW.
   (A) DECLARATION.
   (B) TRAVERSE.
2. IN EQUITY.
   (A) BILL.
   (B) ANSWER.
   (C) PLEA.
   (D) IMPERTINENCE AND SCANDAL.
3. IN THE ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

1. AT LAW.

(A) Declaration.

A plaintiff may, on the trial, abandon any count or counts in his declaration, and rest his case entirely upon other counts, inconsistent with those he has abandoned.

Accordingly, where a tenant, in an action for an excessive distress, had inserted in his declaration two counts, setting out the tenancy, and complaining of an excessive distress, and had added a count in trover, he was allowed, on the trial, to abandon the two first counts, rest his case entirely on the third, and leave the defendant to prove the tenancy. Spargo v. Brown, 7 Law J. K.B. 16.

A declaration consisted of one special and several general counts. To the special count there were several special pleas; to the general counts, the general issue. The plaintiff entered a nolle prosequi on the special count, and joined issue on the others:—Held, that he was entitled to recover on the general counts, though the matters proved might have been given in evidence on the special count and the pleas to it. Hayward v. Kain, 1 M. & M. 311. [Tenterden]

(B) Traverse.

A traverse which is too large, is bad upon general demurrer. Seymour v. Frances, 7 Law J. K.B. 18.

2. IN EQUITY.

(A) Bill.

[Dunn v. Dunn, 2 Sim. 329, Dig. Law J. 381.]

A bill filed to restrain an action at law, brought against the plaintiff by a party to an agreement, who had delivered it up to him, to be returned again as an operative instrument (as he alleged) on the occurrence of an event, which had happened, praying a declaration that the contract was void, and an order that it might be delivered up to the plaintiff to be cancelled, and for general relief:—Held, to be demurrable to generally, for want of equity to the relief, the agreement being in the possession of the plaintiff.

Demurrer allowed with costs.

Leave given to amend.

The bill being amended, by striking out a part of the prayer, which sought a declaration that the agreement was void, and ought to be delivered up to be cancelled, without striking out the prayer for further relief,—Held to be still demurrable to. Mellish v. Richardson, 12 Price, 530.

The plaintiff is entitled, under a prayer for general relief, to such remedy as the statement of his case entitles him to. Topham v. Constantine, 1 Tam. 135.

A vendor sells certain property, and afterwards, in order to perfect his title, enters into an agreement with B for the release of certain rights which B has over the property: afterwards he files a bill against the purchaser, stating also the agreement with B, and praying that B may be decreed to execute the release:—Held, that such a bill was multifarious. Reynolds v. Johnston, 7 Law J. Chanc. 45.

A, B, and C, being the next of kin, and B and C the co-heirs of an intestate, file a bill against D for an account of the real and personal estates of the intestate:—The bill is multifarious. Maud v. Acklom, 2 Sim. 331.

(B) Answer.

The original bill sought to set aside an appointment, on the ground of fraud. The plaintiff then amended his bill, and inquired as to the mode in which the appointment was executed and attested:—Held, that the plaintiff's case, being one of legal validity, and equitable invalidity, the inquiries were irrelevant, and therefore need not be answered. Codrington v. Codrington, 3 Sim. 519.

(C) Plea.

[Makepeace v. Haythorne, 4 Russ. 244, Dig. Law J. 382.]

It is a good plea to a bill, that a defendant, who is stated in it to be out of the jurisdiction, was, at the time of filing the bill, within the jurisdiction. Bean v. Teed, 8 Law J. Chanc. 34.

A, being tenant for life of an estate unimpeachable of waste, except as to the demesne lands, a bill is filed, alleging that Blackacre is part of the demesne lands, and that he had committed both legal and equitable waste on the demesne lands; and praying relief accordingly. By the decree it was declared, that Blackacre was not part of the demesne lands, and an account of the timber felled on the demesne lands was directed, which account had not yet been taken: afterwards the same plaintiffs filed a bill against A, alleging that he had committed equitable waste on Blackacre, and praying relief accordingly:—Held, that a plea of the pendency of the former suit, was not a good plea to this second bill. Newdigate v. Newdigate, 8 Law J. Chanc. 35.

To a bill by a party claiming under an equitable assignment of a fund by the Spanish government, it is not a sufficient defence to say, that the fund was furnished by France, in compliance with treaties to which Great Britain was a party, and for specific purposes mentioned in the treaties; that those purposes remain unsatisfied; and that the defendant has no claim under the treaties.

Semble, a plea to the whole of a bill, except certain specific portions, is good in form.

Such a form of pleading may, however, often be very inconvenient. Mendizabal v. Machado, 8 Law J. Chanc. 57.

To part of the discovery sought by a bill, a defendant pleaded clauses of an act of parliament inflicting certain penalties for doing the acts to which the discovery related: but, in the interval between the filing and the arguing of the plea, the period elapsed within which the penalties could be sued for:—The plea was overruled. The Corporation of Trinity House, Stroud, v. Burge, 7 Law J. Chanc. 44, s.c. 2 Sim. 411.

To a bill filed by persons claiming title to an estate as the co-heirs of A, ex parte maternâ, the defendants pleaded that another person was the heir of A, ex parte paternâ, but did not set forth the pedigree of that person. Semble—that such a plea is good. Emerson v. Harland, 3 Sim. 490.

A plaintiff, claiming as heiress-at-law of L, who had devised real estates to various persons in tail, reserving the ultimate reversion to his own right heirs, alleged, by her bill, that the several estates tail had determined by failure of issue; that no valid recovery had been suffered, or, if it had, that the property had been so settled that she was entitled as right heir of L; and, that so it would appear, if the defendant would produce the deeds creating the tenant to the præcipe, and leading or declaring the uses of such recovery:—A plea, which set forth the substance of the deeds making the tenant to the præcipe, and leading the uses of the recovery (under which uses the plaintiff had no title), and of the recovery, was held to be a good defence, though not supported by any answer. Plunkett v. Cavendish, 1 Russ. & M. 713.

(D) Impertinence and Scandal.

An answer is impertinent in so far as it brings forward a case which can be of no use with respect to the order or decree to be made on the bill to which the answer is put in.

If any part of the matter included in one exception for impertinence, can be shewn to be not impertinent, the whole exception must fail, however impertinent all the rest of the matter included in that exception may be.

Exceptions for impertinence need not set forth the matter complained of; but it is enough to describe the passage included in each exception as extending from such a word in such a folio, to such another word in another folio. Wagstaff v. Bryan, 8 Law J. Chanc. 41, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 28.

An affidavit, verifying a short-hand writer's notes of a trial at Nisi Prius, which involved the same question as is raised on a petition in bankruptcy, is wholly impertinent. Ex parte Palmer, 4 Russ. 188.

3. IN THE ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

[Dew v. Clarke, 4 Russ. 511, Dig. Law J. 383.]

In criminal suits, articles must be so specific as to afford a fair opportunity of defence. Oliver and Tell v. Hebart, 1 Hag. Ec. 43.

In an allegation of faculties, the amount of capital embarked, or the particulars of partnership concerns, are not to be set forth, but only the income. Higgs v. Higgs, 3 Hag. Ec. 472.

The præsertim of articles is construed to set forth the nature of the principal charges; the general words only to include subordinate charges ejusdem generis. Bennett v. Bonaker, 3 Hag. Ec. 25.

In considering the admissibility of pleas, the Court must be cautious not to exclude matter essential to a due decision, nor allow proceedings to extend to an unnecessary length: but if a serious doubt arises as to the ultimate effect of any averment, it should be admitted. Croft v. Croft, 3 Hag. Ec. 311.

Where fraud is charged, the Court allows greater latitude of pleading than in ordinary cases; but even then, remote facts must not be so minutely stated as those which bear directly on the point at issue. Marsh v. Harding, 1 Hag. Ec. 133.

In a criminal suit, a defensive plea tending to shew the promoter's motives to be malicious or vindictive, is admissible, as bearing on the credit of his witnesses, and on costs; but it must be specific, and confined to his conduct with reference to the defendant.

A defensive plea in a criminal suit having imputed to the promoter malicious motives, the Court is bound to admit a plea repelling such imputations; and presentments, by the churchwardens and vestry, of the clergyman's misconduct, are admissible for such purpose, though not as matters of charge or proof in the original articles. Bennett v. Bonaker, 3 Hag. Ec. 17, 19.

An allegation pleading a verdict in ejectment, and the remarks of the Judge thereon, and the names of the witnesses examined,—rejected. Grindall v. Grindall, 3 Hag. Ec. 259.

A verdict in an action of ejectment cannot be pleaded in a testamentary cause.

On appeals from definitive sentences, matter which could have been pleaded below, and which directly contradicts the plea on which witnesses have been examined below, is not admissible: but matter more generally responsive may, with caution, be received, especially where the cause has not been properly conducted in the court below. Price v. Clark, 3 Hag. Ec. 265.

A party cannot plead the contents of an instrument, unless it is destroyed, or in the possession of the adverse party. Morse v. Morse, 2 Hag. Ec. 608.

POISONING.

If a servant put poison into a coffee-pot which contains coffee, and when her mistress comes down to breakfast, the servant tells the mistress that she has put the coffee-pot there for her (the mistress's) breakfast, and the mistress drink the poisoned coffee: this is a "causing the poison to be taken," within the statute 9 Geo. 4. c. 31. s. 11, and the servant is therefore indictable under the act. Semble, that this is also an "administering" within that act; as, to constitute administering, it is not necessary that the poison should be delivered by the hand of the party. Rex v. Harley, 4 C. & P. 369. [Park]

A prisoner was indicted for mixing sponge with milk, and administering it with intent to poison. The indictment was held insufficient, because it did not aver that the sponge was of a deleterious or poisonous nature. Rex v. Powles, 4 C. & P. 571. [Alderson]

(A) RELIEF.

[Provision for relieving parishes from the expense of the wives and families of smugglers, 11 Geo. 4. c. 10, 8 Law J. Stat. 6.

Churchwardens and overseers empowered to provide land to a certain extent, for the employment of the poor, 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 42, 9 Law J. Stat. 84, and to inclose crown lands for their benefit, 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 49, 9 Law J. Stat. 107.]

Semble—That, under the 43 Eliz. c. 2, Justices have a discretion, whether they will make an order upon the grandfather rather than on the father of a poor impotent person, to contribute towards his support. But, whether they have such a discretion or not, an order which is made upon the grandfather, need not state upon the face of it that the father is dead or unable to support the pauper. Rex v. James Cornish, 9 Law J. M.C. 86, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 408.

A local act, for the relief of the poor of the parish, provided for an election in every third year, of trustees, in the room of those who should have died, removed, become disqualified, or relinquished office, so that the number should every third year be filled up to fifty-one, over and besides the vicar, churchwardens, and overseers for the time being, who were to be trustees by virtue of their office:—Held, that where a person was a trustee, and was afterwards chosen churchwarden, his being so did not disqualify him, or render it necessary to elect another in his room, to make up the stipulated number. Rex v. St. Mary Abbotts, Kensington, 9 Law J. M.C. 129.

Where relief is given under circumstances which do not lead to the inference, that the parish officers knew enough of the facts to form an opinion as to their own liability, such relief is not even primâ facie evidence to charge a parish.

Accordingly, an overseer of parish E, at a public-house, on a market-day, seven miles from his own parish, was applied to by a woman for relief. He gave her 3*s*., and said, if she wanted further relief, she must apply to him again at his parish. On a second application, she was refused further relief, and was told she must throw herself on parish M. The Sessions held, that this was primâ facie evidence of an admission by the parish of E that the pauper was there settled. The Court were of a different opinion; but confirmed the order of Sessions, as the case was one peculiarly for their decision. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Edwinstowe, 7 Law J. M.C. 30, s. c. 8 B. & C. 671.

Relief given for any length of time to a pauper while in the relieving parish, is no evidence whatever against that parish upon the question, as to the pauper's settlement.

Nor is the fact of the relieving parish putting out one of the pauper's children as apprentice, while the pauper was in that parish, evidence upon which the Sessions would be warranted in presuming that the pauper was settled in that parish. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Coleorton, 8 Law J. M.C. 118, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 25.

Relief administered while the pauper is resident out of the parish which administers it, is a species of evidence exclusively for the Sessions to consider; and though they may, from such evidence, infer a settlement, they are not bound to do so; and the Court confirmed an order of Sessions which did not so infer, though the evidence was very strong. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Yarwell, 8 Law J. M.C. 8, s. c. 9 B. & C. 894, s. c. 4 M. & R. 684.

(B) SETTLEMENT.

[See BAPTISM.]

A woman pregnant, was removed from P to S. The parish of S appealed, and on the appeal shewed that she was settled at a third parish, M, and the Sessions quashed the order of removal. But before the appeal was heard, she was delivered in the parish of S, to which she had been removed, of a bastard:—Held, that the bastard thus born, was not removable to the parish of M, in which his mother was settled at the time of the removal. Semble, that he would be settled in the parish from which she had been removed. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Martlesham, 8 Law J. M.C. 49, s. c. 5 M. & R. 82, s. c. 10 B. & C. 77.

A single woman pregnant was removed to her place of settlement. Unknown to the parish officers of either parish, she returned to that from which she had been removed; and was there delivered. The time for appealing against the order of removal had not elapsed when the delivery took place:—Held, that this was within the general rule; and that the child was settled in the parish in which it was born, and not in that in which the mother was settled, and to which she had been removed. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Halifax, 9 Law J. M.C. 131.

Though a parish register is not conclusive evidence of the place of birth of the person baptized, it is admissible in evidence to be considered with other facts, upon the question as to the place of birth.

The declaration of a deceased mother as to the time of birth, is admissible in evidence upon a question as to the place of birth of the child, though the father be living. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Birmingham: called also, Rex v. the Inhabitants of Aston, 8 Law J. M.C. 41, s. c. 9 B. & C. 225, s. c. 4 M. & R. 691.

(b) By Marriage.

A wife was removed to her maiden settlement. It appeared, that the husband was born in a parish in Ipswich, but which parish could not be ascertained:—Held, that the order of removal was wrong; and that the appellant parish discharged themselves by shewing that the husband had a settlement. Rex v. St. Mary, Beverley, 9 Law J. M.C. 17, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 20.

(c) By Hiring and Service.

(1) Contract.

Whether, in case a contract were twofold,—for service, and also for improper intercourse,—service under such a contract would confer a settlement—quære. Rex v. the Inhabitants of North Wingfield, 9 Law J. M.C. 37, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 712.

Where the question is, whether a contract is a contract of apprenticeship, or a contract of hiring and service, the point to ascertain appears to be, what was the principal and what the subordinate object of the parties; and whether the service was not treated by them, as the means of effecting the purpose of apprenticeship. Upon such a question, the presence or the absence of certain facts usually found only in a contract of apprenticeship, or only in a contract of hiring and service, is not decisive of the question; though such presence or absence is a circumstance to be considered as bearing upon the question.

Accordingly, a contract being entered into, by which a person engaged to serve as an "articled servant" at certain wages; but the father was a party to the agreement, and engaged to provide the intended servant with board, lodging, and necessaries, and the master engaged to teach and instruct the servant in his own business; and it was also provided that the servant should be considered as an out-apprentice; and there were other provisions apparent of the same inconsistent character:—The Court held, that no one of those circumstances was to be taken as of itself decisive of the question, whether this was a contract of apprenticeship, or one of hiring and service; but, the Sessions having on the whole found it to be a defective contract of apprenticeship, the Court confirmed their order. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Tipton, 8 Law J. M.C. 52, s. c. 9 B. & C. 888, s. c. 4 M. & R. 703.

A cotton-weaver, by agreement with a lad and his father, hired the lad into his service for three years, to labour at the art and mystery of a cotton-weaver. In return, the master was to teach the lad, and give him one-half of his earnings; there were other provisions, usual in contracts of apprenticeship only. Nothing was said about Sundays, and in fact the lad did not do any work for his master on Sundays:—Held, that this was a defective contract of apprenticeship; and the Sessions having held it to be a contract of hiring and service, their order was quashed. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Nether Knutsford, 9 Law J. M.C. 52, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 726.

The pauper agreed to learn sawing for a twelvemonth; and was to have 7*s*. 6*d*. out of every 20*s*. he and his master earned. At the end of the year he agreed for another year; to receive 8*s*. out of every 20*s*. earned by his master and himself. Nothing was said about the hours he was to work, or about Sundays. On Sundays he was occasionally absent without permission. The Sessions held this to be a defective contract of apprenticeship; and not a contract of hiring and service; and the Court confirmed their order. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Crediton, 9 Law J. M.C. 89.

A tailor, on a treaty for taking a lad into his service, said he would not take him as an apprentice, because if he did he should offend the farmers; he would take him on an agreement for four years; and terms were afterwards agreed upon, similar to those generally agreed on in cases of apprenticeship; but the name "apprentice" was never used. The Sessions held this to be an imperfect contract of apprenticeship; and the Court held that they were right; the substance of the contract being the proper guide, and not the mere name which the parties, from interested motives, might choose to give to the transaction. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Edingale, 8 Law J. M.C. 81, s. c. 10 B. & C. 729.

(2) Hiring generally.

A hiring at weekly wages, with "a month's warning or a month's wages," infers a yearly hiring. Rex v. the Inhabitants of St. Andrew, Pershore, 7 Law J. M.C. 23, s. c. 8 B. & C. 697.

The pauper's mother went with her son to one Slater, and asked if he wanted a boy? He said "Yes." She then asked, "What wages he would give?" He said "Let him stop what time he will, I will give him satisfaction; if not in money, in clothes."—The Sessions held this not to be a general hiring; and the Court confirmed the order. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Rosliston, 7 Law J. M.C. 33, s. c. 8 B. & C. 668.

The pauper went with his father to Neale, an inkeeper, and informed him, that he heard he wanted a lad. Neale said he had got one coming in a fortnight; but that the pauper might stop for that fortnight until the other lad came. He was to fill the situation of boots and tap-boy; was to have his board and lodging in the house, and the vails which he might obtain in this employment. At the end of the fortnight, the other lad came, but was not engaged: and the pauper continued in the service (without anything further passing between him and Neale,) for three years and a quarter. At the end of that time, he engaged in another situation without consulting Neale, and went into it on the following day; Neale saying, that "if it was his mind to go, he believed he must:"—Upon these facts, the Sessions found, that there was an implied yearly hiring.

Mr. Justice Bayley held, that they were right. Mr. Justice Littledale did not concur; but, as it was a conclusion not repugnant to the fact, agreed that the order of Sessions should be confirmed. Rex v. the Inhabitants of St. Martin, Leicester, 7 Law J. M.C. 81, s. c. 8 B. & C. 674.

To obtain a settlement by hiring and service for a year, where the year consists of 366 days, as in leap-year, such hiring and service must be for that number of days.

Where a pauper was hired for a year, on the 13th of May 1819, and served until the 11th of May 1820, which was leap-year, when, wishing to visit his friends fifteen miles distant, and to attend some statutes on the 12th of May on the way there, and to avoid returning to his master, he obtained his master's permission to go altogether, and was paid his wages up to the 11th, a part being deducted for the time he had to serve; and he slept at his master's house that night, and quitted on the morning of the 12th;—it was held, that he obtained no settlement by virtue of such hiring and service. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Roxby, 8 Law J. M.C. 51, s. c. 10 B. & C. 51.

The Court will not quash an order of Sessions upon a question of yearly hiring, merely because, rom the facts stated, they would have drawn a ifferent conclusion. If there be any facts which ay warrant the conclusion, so as not to be repugant to the facts, the Court will confirm the order.

Accordingly, the pauper was hired for a fortnight r three weeks. Afterwards, she was told, by her istress, that she might sleep in the house, and hat when she wanted clothes, she, the mistress, ould find them. She was told by her mistress, wo or three times, while she stayed, that she might rovide a place for herself elsewhere when she could. 'he Sessions held this to be a general hiring; and he Court, for the above reason, confirmed the order. Rex v. the Inhabitants of St. Andrew the Great, 7 aw J. M.C. 28, s. c. 8 B. & C. 664.

(3) Conditional and exceptive Hiring.

A service for part of a year, not under a yearly iring, may be connected with a service for enough o make up a year, the latter service being under a early hiring defeasible on condition. And this vill be sufficient to gain a settlement, although the ondition take effect, and the service be accordingly letermined, provided there had been a full year's ervice, the preceding part of it under a hiring not early, and the subsequent part under the conditional iring. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Farleigh Wallop, 9 Law J. M.C. 9, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 336.

If, at the time of entering into a contract for a ear's service, a militia-man does not communicate he fact of his being in the militia, the hiring for a ear will not be sufficient for the purpose of conferring a settlement. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Taunon St. James, 8 Law J. M.C. 26, s. c. 9 B. & C. 831, . c. 4 M. & R. 698.

A contract for a year's service at yearly wages; ut it was agreed at the time, that when the misress had not work for the servant, he was to work or any one else for his own benefit. He accordngly worked during harvest time for another perion for about a fortnight, and was paid by that perion; but he continued to do the required work in he house of his mistress every day, and slept there very night:—Held, that this was an exceptive contract, the service under which did not confer a settlement. Rex v. the Inhabitants of South Killingholme, 8 Law J. M.C. 88, s. c. 10 B. & C. 80.

Service under a yearly hiring, by which the servant was to serve from six in the morning to seven in the evening, and might make as much overwork "as he chose":—Held, insufficient to confer a settlement; the servant not being under the controul and coercion of the master during the whole time. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Atherstone, 8 Law J. M.C. 44.

A contract by a female pauper, to work in a silk factory for four years, and "to observe and obey all the rules and regulations of the factory, as well with regard to the hours of attendance, and of work, as the mode and other particulars of working, and in all things to conduct herself faithfully, honestly, and diligently, in her said engagement, and as a good and faithful servant ought to do;"—is not a contract for an exceptive hiring, but will be sufficient to entitle the pauper serving under it to a settlement.

Semble—That if such a contract be in writing, a parol statement made by the foreman of the factory to the pauper, at the time of its execution, of the usual number of working hours, during the day, is not admissible in evidence, as explanatory of the terms thereof. Rex v. St. John, Devizes, 8 Law J. M.C. 24, s. c. 9 B. & C. 896, s. c. 4 M. & R. 680.

Service under a yearly hiring, to work at a certain trade, and for certain hours, insufficient to confer a settlement; the servant not being under the general controul of the master out of those hours. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Frome Selwood, 9 Law J. M.C. 7, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 207.

After a man had agreed with his intended master upon the terms of a yearly hiring, the master said he did not wish the man to get a settlement; and that if he would reserve three days, that would do. The man agreed to this. He had the three days at Willoughby Feast. He went away at the end of the year, and received his whole wages. The Sessions held this to be an exceptive hiring; and the Court confirmed their order. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Willoughby, 8 Law J. M.C. 101.

(4) Service.

If, at the time of hiring, the fact of being in the militia be communicated, and during the year the militia-man be called out for service in the militia:—Semble, that the service for that year will not be sufficient for the purpose of conferring a settlement. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Taunton St. James, 8 Law J. M.C. 26, s. c. 9 B. & C. 831, s. c. 4 M. & R. 698.

Service for less than a year, under a hiring not yearly; then a short interval, during which the service continued, but under no contract of hiring at all; then, the service still continuing, hiring for a year, and service, on the whole, for a year:—Held, that these services might be connected, and that they gained a settlement. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Harbury, 9 Law J. M.C. 42, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 360.

(1) Contract and Indenture.

An indenture of apprenticeship, or other contract of service with a chimney-sweeper, is altogether void, if it be not made in conformity with the 28 Geo. 3. c. 48. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Hipswell, 7 Law J. M.C. 4, s. c. 8 B. & C. 466, s. c. 2 M. & R. 474.

A person who, of his own accord, was about to bind himself as apprentice, applied himself to the parish officers, stating that his intended master objected that he had not sufficient clothes. The parish officers thereupon agreed to give him 2*l.* for clothes on the execution of the indenture, and 2*l.* more for the same purpose at the end of the year:—Held, that this was within the statute 59 Geo. 3. c. 139. s. 11; and that the service under this indenture did not confer a settlement. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Mattishall, 7 Law J. M.C. 26, s. c. 8 B. & C. 783.

A subscription was raised to apprentice a poor person, to which the parish officers of another parish were invited to contribute, and they did contribute, denying, however, that the person belonged to their parish, and three other parishes contributed, (the contributions of the latter being paid out of the parish funds,) the remainder of the money being raised by private subscription. None of the parish officers took any part in the treaty or the agreement for the apprenticeship, or in any way interfered in the transaction:—Held, that this was not a case within 56 Geo. 3. c. 139. s. 11, so as to require that the indenture of apprenticeship should be allowed by two Justices. Rex v. the Inhabitants of St. Peter, Hereford, 9 Law J. M.C. 58, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 976.

Where a parish apprentice is bound by indenture, according to the 56 Geo. 3. c. 139. s. 2, to serve in a county different from that from which he is bound, the allowance of the indenture must be by two different Magistrates of each county; and the allowance by the same Magistrates acting for both counties is insufficient. Rex v. Robert Shipton, 7 Law J. M.C. 21, s.c. 8 B. & C. 772, s. c. 2 M. & R. 217.

Where an apprentice is bound by indenture, to which the parish officers are parties, an allowance by the Justices, under the 56th Geo. 3. c. 139, will be sufficient, if it be under the hands (without the seals) of the Justices. But where an apprentice is bound, and a part of the premium, or any expense in respect of the indenture, comes out of the parish funds, and the parish officers are not parties to the indenture, the allowance, in conformity with the above act, must be under the seals, as well as the hands, of the Justices. Rex v. the Inhabitants of St. Paul, Exeter, 8 Law J. M.C. 45, s. c. 10 B. & C. 12, s. c. 5 M. & R. 24.

An indenture of apprenticeship was allowed by two Justices, describing themselves as "Justices of the Peace of the said county, dwelling in or near the said parish." The county last mentioned was a county in respect of which they would not have jurisdiction over the subject-matter; but the parish last mentioned had been described as in a county in respect of which they would have jurisdiction:—Held, that the expression, taken entire, sufficiently referred to the county which gave them jurisdiction; although, according to strict grammatical construction, the word "said" referred to the county last antecedent. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Countesthorpe, 9 Law J. M.C. 77, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 487.

A local act, passed in the reign of Will. 3, created a corporation of guardians of the poor for a parish, and gave them power in the workhouse to employ, detain, and keep in their service until the age of sixteen years, any poor child of the parish, or the child of any other person that should be willing or desirous to place or put them there; and, after they should have attained that age or sooner, they were empowered to bind such child or children apprentice for a term not exceeding eight years:—Held, that an indenture, made in pursuance of this power, did not require the allowance of two Justices of the Peace, under the 23 Geo. 3. c. 57, and 56 Geo. 3. c. 139; but, that where a child was brought into the workhouse, to sleep one night previous to being apprenticed, but was never employed by the guardians, the provisions of the act were not complied with, and the indenture of apprenticeship executed by them, professedly in execution of its powers, was void. Rex v. St. Margaret's, Lynn, 9 Law J. M.C. 14.

A sum was paid to the master upon the execution of an indenture of apprenticeship, but it was agreed by the mother of the apprentice that something more should be given; and only the sum actually paid at the time was inserted in the indenture as the consideration. The mother afterwards paid the master a further sum: but neither her husband nor the apprentice knew the fact of the agreement, nor that of the payment of the additional sum. The stamp affixed would have been sufficient if the additional sum had been mentioned:—Held, that under these circumstances, the indenture was not void for want of the insertion of the true consideration.

Whether, in general, the not inserting the true consideration, although the stamp be sufficient to cover it if inserted, would vitiate the indenture—quære. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Beerton-upon-Dunsmore, 8 Law J. M.C. 29, s. c. 9 B. & C. 872, s. c. 4 M. & R. 631.

The assignment of a parish indenture stated the consideration-money to the new master to have been paid by the old master:—Held, that nevertheless, parol evidence was admissible to shew that the money came out of the parish fund, in order to exempt the instrument from duty under the 55 Geo. 3. c. 184, schedule, part 1, title "Apprentice." Rex v. the Inhabitants of Llangunnor, 9 Law J. M.C. 99, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 615.

No indenture of apprenticeship, which is not stamped with the proper duty within the time limited by the 8 Ann. c. 9. can be lawfully stamped afterwards, even on payment of a penalty; and such indenture so stamped afterwards is unavailing, the indenture itself being void by the express provisions of that statute. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Church Hulme, 9 Law J. M.C. 83.

(2) Service and Residence.

The forty days' residence, in order to acquire a settlement by apprenticeship, need not be consecutive; and need not be within the compass of a year. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Alston, 9 Law J. M.C. 71, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 207.

A written consent of a master, that his apprentice shall serve another for the remainder of the term, does not require to be stamped, unless the subject-matter of the consent appear clearly to be of the value of 20*l.*: such a consent being exempted by the 48 Geo. 3. c. 149, and 55 Geo. 3. c. 184, as an agreement, where the matter thereof was not of the value of 20*l.* Rex v. the Inhabitants of Enderby, 9 Law J. M.C. 80, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 207.

(1) In general.

Where during a tenancy there was an interval, between Michaelmas 1824 and June 1825, (when the 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. came into operation) during which interval, the requisites of the statute 59 Geo. 3. c. 50. (then in force) were not complied with:—Held, that the provisions of the 6 Geo. 4. could not be called in aid at the end of the tenancy to confer a settlement under that statute, which tenancy had commenced while the old statute was in operation, and which last-mentioned statute would not have conferred a settlement. Semble, that the 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. is prospective only. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Ockley, 9 Law J. M.C. 123, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 818.

In 1813, the pauper went into a parish, and agreed to live in a house for nothing, upon trial. If he liked it, was to take it as a tenement. He liked it, and afterwards became tenant, and resided herein more than forty days. The value exceeded 10*l.*:—Held, that this was a coming to settle within the meaning of the statute 13 & 14 Chas. 2. c. 12; that he was irremovable; and that, by the forty days' residence, he gained a settlement. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Halsham, 9 Law J. M.C. 93, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 620.

(2) What is a sufficient Tenement.

A mill of wood, resting upon a foundation of brick, but not attached to the foundation, held not to be part of a tenement; and, consequently, being rented with a cottage and garden, which, with the mill, were worth 30*l.* a year, but without it less than 10*l.*:—Held, that no settlement was gained by renting the tenement. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Otley, 9 Law J. K.B. 32, M.C. 11, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 61.

To gain a settlement by the renting of a tenement in respect of the feed of cattle, it is necessary, not only that they should be pasture fed, but that it was a part of the contract that they should be so fed. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Llangriville, 8 Law J. M.C. 89, s. c. 10 B. & C. 899.

In 1809 a master agreed to give his servant certain wages, and the right of feeding his cow in his master's pasture. The servant was to serve as waggoner, and it was a part of the agreement that he should board his mate. Subsequently, in 1810, by another agreement, the servant was to have the right of feeding another cow on his master's pasture. The cows were fed alike, under these two agreements, for eighteen months. The value of the feeding exceeded 10*l.* per annum:—Held, that the servant thereby gained a settlement, by renting a "tenement" of the value of 10*l.* a year. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Newington next Hythe, 7 Law J. M.C. 25.

A gate-keeper, or toll-keeper, or renter of the tolls, residing in the toll-house, is prevented by the 54 Geo. 3. c. 170. s. 5. from thereby gaining a settlement, although the annual value of the house may exceed 10*l.* a year. And semble, that the renting of a house and land with an incorporeal hereditament (or other subject-matter not being house and land), at an entire rent, is insufficient for the purpose of a settlement under 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. Rex v. the Inhabitants of St. Andrew the Less, 8 Law J. M.C. 84, s. c. 10 B. & C. 742.

Where every requisite of 59 Geo. 3. c. 50, or of 6 Geo. 4. c. 57, has been complied with, the circumstance of the landlord agreeing to pay the taxes and rates out of a rent of 10*l.* a year, does not prevent the gaining of a settlement. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Thurmaston, 9 Law J. M.C. 53, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 731.

Where a tenement has been taken at an entire rent for a sum exceeding 10*l.* a year, part of the tenement being in one parish and part in another, the tenant has gained a settlement in the parish in which is that part wherein he resided: provided, apportioning the rent, it appears he paid 10*l.* a year for the part which is in that parish. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Pickering, 9 Law J. M.C. 106, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 267.

(3) Value.

The actual value of the tenement is immaterial, with reference to the act of 59 Geo. 3. c. 50, if the taking, &c. be bonâ fide. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Ashfield-cum-Thorpe, 8 Law J. M.C. 30, s. c. 9 B. & C. 939, s. c. 4 M. & R. 709.

In order to ascertain the value of a tenement taken before the 59 Geo. 3. c. 50. came into operation, improvements contracted by the landlord to be done, and afterwards done upon the premises in pursuance of that contract, may be taken into account; although they be not done until after the actual entry by the tenant. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Huntsham, 9 Law J. M.C. 88.

(4) Occupation.

Whether, in order to gain a settlement by the 6 Geo. 4. c. 57, the house should be entirely occupied by the tenant for the year, or whether an occupation of part, the remainder being occupied by lodgers, is sufficient? Held, by Mr. Justice Bayley, that the occupation should be entirely by the tenant. By Mr. Justice Littledale and Mr. Justice Parke, that an occupation of part, the remainder being occupied by lodgers, is sufficient.

A renting of a tenement for a year, and an occupation for a year, which year began before the 22nd of June 1825, (6 Geo. 4. c. 57.) but ended after that day, will be sufficient to confer a settlement, provided the other requisites of the 6 Geo. 4. be satisfied. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Ditcheat, 7 Law J. M.C. 110, s. c. 9 B. & C. 176, s. c. 4 M. & R. 151.

In order to gain a settlement under the 6 Geo. 4. c. 57, the house or land need not be entirely occupied by the tenant for the year. If he hold the whole, and underlet a part, he occupying the remainder, it will be sufficient. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Great Bentley, 8 Law J. M.C. 55, s. c. 10 B. & C. 520.

The Sessions having found that the parish officers of a parish in which a pauper was settled, fraudulently gave him money to enable him to pay his rent, in order that he might, under 6 Geo. 4. c. 57, gain a settlement in another parish:—Held, that no settlement was gained by renting the tenement and the paying of the rent under such circumstances. Rex v. the Inhabitants of St. Sepulchre, Cambridge, 9 Law J. M.C. 56, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 924.

Where the question of settlement depends upon the question, whether a transaction is fraudulent or not, the Sessions must themselves affirm or negative the fraud: they cannot obtain the opinion of the Court above on that question by merely stating the facts which raise the question; they must themselves draw the inference.

Where a man, being settled in one parish, was residing in another, and applied for relief to the parish to which he belonged, and the parish officers advanced him money to pay his rent, the effect of which payment would be to cause him to be settled in the parish in which he was then residing:—Held, that this fact would not prevent the gaining of the settlement, unless the transaction was fraudulent; and that the question by which fraud or no fraud was to be tried, was this—"Was the money advanced by the parish officers to assist the man, and enable him to go on; or was it done merely to throw him off one parish to another?" And the case was sent back to the Sessions for them to dispose of by the application of this principle. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Tillingham, 9 Law J. M.C. 1, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 180.

(f) By Estate.

The interest of a remainder-man, after an estate for life, will not entitle him to a settlement, by reason of forty days' residence during the continuance of the particular estate.

Testator, after devising certain real property to his heir-at-law, devised "to my daughter, E M, all that part of a messuage or tenement, with the appurtenances, which is now in the occupation of H L, situated in Ringstead, adjoining the tenement in the occupation of J M. to hold to her and her assigns, for and during the term of her natural life, if she shall so long continue a widow and unmarried; and, from and after the day of her decease, or day of marriage, which shall first happen, I give and devise the said part of a messuage or tenement, with the appurtenances; and also all that the aforesaid tenement, with the homestead and appurtenances, in the occupation of J M; and also, all that my close or orchard lying above the said homestead, &c. unto the four children of my late son:"—Held, that these four grandchildren of the testator, under this devise, did not take an immediate vested interest in any part of the premises mentioned therein, but a remainder expectant on the decease or second marriage of E M, and consequently that one of those grand-children, a pauper, did not obtain a settlement by forty days' residence in the parish where those premises were situate during the life and before the second marriage of E M. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Ringstead, 7 Law J. M.C. 103, s. c. 9 B. & C. 218, s. c. 4 M. & R. 17.

Where a parcel of land, and two unfinished dwelling-houses were conveyed to the use of a pauper's mother for life, or during widowhood, remainder to the use of the pauper in fee, the consideration being a sum of money which the pauper had before settled upon his mother for life or during widowhood, the principal after death to be paid to himself; and the pauper entered upon one of the houses at the time of the execution of the conveyance, and subsequently, by the permission of his mother, obtained possession of the other, and the land, and let them, and received the rent himself, and afterwards sold the premises, his mother being a party to the deed, but he receiving, and not accounting to her for the purchase-money,—it was held, that he obtained no settlement in the parish where the premises were situate, inasmuch as he had no present right of possession, and no freehold interest. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Willoughby-cum-Sloothby, 8 Law J. M.C. 32, s. c. 10 B. & C. 62, s. c. 5 M. & R. 32.

A residence on an estate at will, of less than 10*l.* a year, is not sufficient to confer a settlement. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Chew Magna, 8 Law J. M.C. 80, s. c. 10 B. & C. 747.

A freeman of a borough, in that character, was entitled to and received a share of the rents of certain estates, vested in the corporation at large, and the rents of which were reserved to and received by them. The rights of the freemen to these shares were subject to regulations by the corporation, and, in some instances, had been withdrawn:—Held, that the freeman did not gain a settlement by estate in respect of the receipt of the share of the rents. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Belford, 8 Law J. M.C. 33, s. c. 10 B. & C. 54, s. c. 5 M. & R. 174.

By agreement of reference between the lord, the lessee, and the leaseholders and copyholders of a manor, arbitrators were appointed for allotting the common fields and downs within the manor. The arbitrators awarded an allotment for the shepherd of the common sheep-flock of the place for the time being, in lieu of lands in the common fields, held by custom by the shepherd. The shepherd was appointed by the tenants, and held his situation as a yearly servant. The arbitrators directed that the shepherd should keep the fences in repair. The shepherd for the time being was no party to the agreement to refer:—Held, that a shepherd who was appointed subsequently, and filled the situation under a yearly hiring, did not gain a settlement by estate in respect of his occupation of this allotment. Rex v. the Inhabitants of South Newton, 8 Law J. M.C. 90, s. c. 10 B. & C. 838, s. c. 5 M. & R. 40.

Where land is taken by encroachment and inclosed, the occasional throwing down of the inclosures will not alter the character of the possession, so as to render it no longer adverse, if in all other respects the possession be adverse. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Wooburn, 8 Law J. M.C. 93, s. c. 10 B. & C. 40.

W B, about fifty years ago, went, on the invitation of W P, whose daughter he had married, to live in the house of W P. The house was held by W P for a term determinable upon lives. W P died thirty-eight years ago, intestate, leaving a widow, several sons, and a daughter, the wife of W B. No letters of administration to W P were ever taken out; but W B continued in possession of a part of the premises, which he had in the lifetime of W P parted off; the sons taking possession of the other premises; and he and the sons paid the rent in shares, but not bearing the same proportion to that of the shares of the father's property, in case there had been a legal distribution. One of the sons afterwards went away, and W P took possession of his portion, and paid his share of the rent:—Held, first, that this possession was not adverse: secondly, that no grant to W B could be presumed, as there had been no letters of administration; and there was no person who could legally make a grant. Consequently W B gained no settlement by estate. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Okeford Fitzpayne, 9 Law J. M.C. 12, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 254.

(g) By Payment of Taxes.

Land-tax is a "parochial rate," within the meaning of the 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. s. 2, the payment of which will not confer a settlement under the 3 & 4 Will. & Mary, c. 11. s. 6, unless the requisites of the former statute be also complied with. Rex v. the Inhabitants of East Teignmouth, 9 Law J. M.C. 24, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 244.

The being rated to and paying ward-rate for the city of London, under the 10 Geo. 2. c. 22. s. 2, held not to confer a settlement under the 3 Will. 3. c. 11. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Christchurch, London, 7 Law J. M.C. 24, s. c. 8 B. & C. 660.

The relation of landlord and tenant is not necessary, in order to a person acquiring a settlement by payment of rates. Nor does the fact of the landlord r owner repaying to the occupier the sum paid y the latter, for rates, prevent his gaining a settlenent by such payment. Accordingly, an attorney aving a cottage and land near his residence, allowd his clerk to occupy them, that he might the more onveniently attend to the business, and suffered im to hold them rent free, as an augmentation of is salary; the clerk was rated as occupier, but the ttorney was sometimes called on to pay, and did ay, the rates; and when the clerk paid them, the ttorney reimbursed him:—Held, that the clerk ained a settlement by paying the public parochial axes. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Lower Heyford, 8 aw J. M.C. 117, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 75.

(h) By serving an Office.

The office of assistant overseer, under the 59 Geo. . c. 12, is a "public annual" office, the service of hich may confer a settlement.

The appointment to such an office, with a salary, equires a stamp, under the 55 Geo. 3. c. 184, scheule, part 1, title "Grant." Rex v. the Inhabitants f Lew, 7 Law J. M.C. 18, s. c. 8 B. & C. 247.

The office of town crier for a city consisting of everal parishes, is sufficient to confer a settlement n the parish in which the officer resides.

Provided such an office be served for a year, it s immaterial whether the officer continue to reside n the same parish in the city during the whole ear. He gains a settlement in that parish in the ity in which he resided the last forty days of the ear. Rex v. St. Nicholas, Hereford, 8 Law J. M.C. 01, s. c. 10 B. & C. 832.

The office of parish clerk is sufficient to gain a ettlement, by reason of its being a freehold. Whether it is an annual office, according to the 3 William & Mary, c. 11. s. 6, and the 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 11—uære.

But where a person performed the duties of the ffice of parish clerk, and received a yearly salary or several years, not having been chosen to the ffice by the vicar, nor appointed in any manner hatever:—Held, that he had not executed the ffice according to the 3 William & Mary, so as to ain a settlement. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Stogurey, 9 Law J. M.C. 48, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 795.

In order to the gaining of a settlement by office, nder the 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, the person must be egally placed in the office, according to the 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 11, (although he be not residing in the arish under a certificate,) the two statutes being onsidered as in pari materiâ.

A constable or a tithingman may legally execute he duties of his office without being sworn in, alhough he may be liable to punishment for not being o sworn.

Consequently, a tithingman, who was legally appointed, had notice to be sworn in, but never was worn,—yet, having served the office for a year, ras held to have gained a settlement.

A tithingman was appointed on the 5th of October for one year, and his successor was appointed n the 4th of October in the following year:—Held, hat there was a service of the office for a full year, s the tithingman was in office on each of the days, here being for this purpose no fraction of a day. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Corfe Mullen, 9 Law J. M.C. 19, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 211.

(C) Certificate.

A person who is residing in a parish under a certificate, cannot obtain a settlement by the purchase of property in that parish, whatever may be the amount of the purchase-money. He can obtain a settlement there only by one of three modes:—by taking a lease of property there, of the value of 10*l.*; by executing some annual office in the parish, to which he shall be legally appointed; or, by acquiring property there, which shall come to him, not by his own act, but by descent, or other act of law. Consequently, no settlement is gained by a service under an indenture of apprenticeship to a certificateman, who has not acquired a settlement by one or other of the above modes. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Great Driffield, 7 Law J. M.C. 36, s. c. 8 B. & C. 684.

The son of a certificated person, residing with his father under the certificate, as one of his family, cannot acquire a settlement in the certificated parish by apprenticeship, unless he be of the age of twenty-one at the time of the binding.

Such a person, bound while he was under twenty-one, was removed to the certifying parish; the removal was acquiesced in; the pauper then returned to the certificated parish, and resided there under the indenture:—Held, that this did not cure the original defect in the binding; and that no settlement was gained even by the service after the return from the certifying parish. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Queenborough, 9 Law J. M.C. 96, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 219.

Where a certificate nearly eighty years old appeared to have been signed not by a majority of the parish officers for the time being, and the Sessions held it to be void, the Court would not support the certificate by presuming a supposed state of facts which were put in support of the certificate, but the existence of which facts was highly improbable, and was repugnant to the other established facts in the case. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Upton Gray, 8 Law J. M.C. 82, s. c. 10 B. & C. 807.

(D) Removal.

[New provisions for the removal of Jersey and Guernsey paupers, 11 Geo. 4. c. 5, 8 Law J. Stat. 5.]

When an unmarried Irishwoman is delivered of a child in England, and becomes chargeable to the parish, she is removable to Ireland, under the 59 Geo. 3. c. 12. s. 33; but her child is not removable with her, even for the purpose of nurture; it being entitled, by its birth in England, to the benefit of the poor laws. Rex v. Bennett and Broughton, 9 Law J. M.C. 95, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 71.

POPULATION.

[Account of, 11 Geo. 4. c. 30, 8 Law J. Stat. 71.

Provisions of 55 Geo. 3. relative to taking population of Ireland, extended, 1 Will. 4. c. 19, 9 Law J. Stat. 17.]

POST OFFICE.

A person employed, at a receiving-house of the general post office, to clean boots, &c., and to assist in tying up the letter-bag, is not a servant of the post office, within the statute 52 Geo. 3. c. 143. s. 2. A receiving-house is not a post office, within that statute; but it is "a place for the receipt of letters;" and the whole shop is to be considered as the "place for the receipt of letters," and not the mere letter-box; and, therefore, if a person take a letter and put it on the shop counter of the receiving-house, or give it to one of the persons belonging to the shop there, that is putting the letter into the post. In an indictment on this statute, it was alleged that a letter was "to be delivered at T." The letter was addressed T House, which was a house in the parish of T:—Held sufficient.

To constitute the offence of stealing a letter from a place for the receipt of letters under section 3. of this act, it is essential that the letter should be carried out of the shop which was the place for the receipt of letters; and, therefore, if a person take a letter and steal its contents, without taking the letter out of the shop, that is not an offence within this section of the act of parliament. Rex v. Pearson, 4 C. & P. 572. [Littledale]

S was employed by a post-mistress to carry letters from Dursley to Berkeley, at a weekly salary, paid him by the post-mistress, but which was repaid to her by the post office:—Held, that S was a person employed by the post office, within the statute 52 Geo. 3. c. 143. s. 2.

But a letter sent from Cardiff to Dudley, but which, it was alleged, was mis-sent to Dursley, if stolen by S, would not be a letter which came into his hands "in consequence of his employment."

Semble—That the words "whilst employed," in sec. 2. of the stat. 52 Geo. 3. c. 143, relative to stealing letters, merely mean that the party should be then in the employ of the post office; and not that the letter, when stolen, was in the party's hands in the course of his duty. Rex v. Salisbury, 5 C. & P. 155. [Patteson]

POWER.

(A) Construction.
(B) Execution.
  (a) Valid or void.
  (b) Defective, where aided.
(C) How extinguished or destroyed.

(A) Construction.

A power to "give and bequeath," held to be a power to be exercised by will only, and that, in default of appointment, or in the event of a void execution of the power, those parties alone take who were alive at the time of the decease of the donee of the power. Walsh v. Wallinger, 9 Law J. Chanc. 7, s. c. 1 Tam. 425.

In a partnership deed it was stipulated, that the testator's interest in the partnership concern after his death, and during the term of the partnership, should go to such persons as he should by will name or appoint; and in default of appointment, that it should devolve to his wife; and in case of her death, to his children in equal shares; and in case of the death of all his children, to his executors or administrators:—Held, that the true construction of this, is not to create a technical power of appointment, but to reserve to the testator an absolute power of disposition by will.

The testator made a will, not containing any allusion to the power, by which he gave all his estate and effects to one of his children:—Held, that his interest in the partnership passed by the bequest. Ponton v. Dunn, 1 Russ. & M. 402.

Testator gave to his widow a life interest in a fund, with a power of appointment amongst all his children living at her death; and, in default of appointment, directed the fund to be divided amongst all such children, with a gift over to the widow, in case all the children died before their shares became payable.

The widow appointed the fund to the two surviving children; one of them died in her lifetime:—Held, that the only surviving child took, upon the widow's death, the whole of the fund. Bielefeld v. Record, 2 Sim. 354.

Though, generally speaking, an instrument must be construed by the provisions contained in it, and not by anything dehors; yet under the circumstances of the case,—Held, that the Court might call the language of a second bond in aid, in construing the effect of the first. Fowler v. Hunter, 3 Y. & J. 506.

Marriage settlement to the use of M for life; remainder to the use of trustees to preserve; remainder to the use of such one or more of the sons of M on the body of the wife, and for such estates, &c., as M should by deed or will appoint; remainder to use of first son, and other sons of M on the body of the wife in tail; with the ultimate remainder to the use of the heirs of M. The marriage takes place; there are two sons; the wife dies; a commission of bankrupt is issued against M, and the commissioners execute bargain and sale to the assignees, who, with M, by lease and release, convey to P M in fee. Afterwards M, by deed-poll, appoints in favour of his elder son, R M, in fee:—Held, that R M took no estate under the appointment, but took an estate tail under the settlement. Badham v. Mee, 9 Law J. C.P. 213, s. c. 7 Bing. 695.

(B) Execution.

(a) Valid or void.

[Illusory appointments rendered valid in equity and at law, 1 Will. 4. c. 46, 8 Law J. Stat. 101.]

[Reith v. Seymour, 4 Russ. 263, Dig. Law J. 396. Grant v. Lynam, 4 Russ. 292, Dig. Law J. 396.]

A married woman had a power of disposing of property by deed, "to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of and attested by two or more credible witnesses thereto," or by her last will: she signed and sealed a deed of appointment, the only attestation to which was in the following words, "Witnesses A B and C D:"—Held, that there was no attestation of the delivery, and, therefore, that the power was not well executed. Butler v. Burt, 7 Law J. Chanc. 107.

Where a party, who has an estate, and also a power, executes a deed which is defective under the power, but which would be good at common law, the estate will pass, though the party contemplated only an execution of the power.

An appointment directed to be signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of two credible witnesses, is not well executed if signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of two persons, to one of whom an estate is appointed therein by way of remainder. Doe v. Keir, 4 M. & R. 101.

A will, manifesting on the whole an intention to execute a power, was held to operate as an appointment, notwithstanding that it contained expressions and made dispositions which would not have been used or made in a due exercise of the power.

Although a will does not state that it is made in execution of a power, yet, if it plainly refer to and comprise the subject of the power, it will be deemed a good execution. Baily v. Lloyd, 7 Law J. Chanc. 98.

A will is deemed a good execution of a power, if it dispose of the subject of the power, although it does not refer to the power.

The subject of the power will pass by the words of "all other my property," if it be plain, from the other expressions in the will, that, under these general words, the donee considered the property under the power to be included. Walker v. Mackie, 4 Russ. 76.

Testator gave 3,000*l.* to trustees, for C S for life; remainder to such persons as she should appoint. C S, by her will, disposed of all her personal estate, and then gave all sums, messuages, &c., and other interest to which she was entitled under the testator's will:—Held, that the latter gift was a good execution of the power. Maples v. Brown, 2 Sim. 327.

S S was seised of lands in the county of Surrey, as to one moiety in fee by descent. The other moiety was limited to her for her life, with a power to appoint an estate in fee by deed or will, with remainders over in default of appointment. S S by her will devised all her freehold estates in the county of Surrey to J R for life, on the condition, that out of the rents he should keep them in repair. At his death the lands chargeable with an annuity were by this will devised to the children of J R, with remainders over. S S died, leaving J R surviving; and she, at the respective times of making her will and her death, had no other lands in Surrey but those before stated. Upon the argument of a special verdict, stating these facts, held, in the Court of Common Pleas, that this was a valid execution of the power: but this judgment was reversed in the Court of King's Bench; and the judgment of the King's Bench was affirmed on a writ of error. Roake v. Denn, 4 Bligh, N.S. 1, s. c. 1 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 437, s. c. 6 Bing. 475.

An estate was devised to a trustee, with power to sell the same, and lay out the proceeds in the purchase of other lands, to be settled to the same uses, and with power, for the purpose of such sale, to revoke the original uses. The trustee revoked such uses, conveyed the land to a purchaser, and received the purchase-money for it, and applied it to the purposes of the trust. By the same conveyance, the tenant for life in possession (he being tenant for life without impeachment of waste) conveyed the timber growing on such land, and received the purchase-money for it, to his own use:—Held, that a tenant for life requiring an estate to be sold under such a power of sale, having in such case a qualified interest only in the timber, such powers were not well executed, and the uses not well revoked. Cholmeley v. Paxton, 8 Law J. K.B. 197, s. c. 10 B. & C. 564.

A woman, having a power under her marriage settlement to appoint certain leasehold estates and monies in the funds, in which she had a life interest, made a will, by which she bequeathed the whole of her property, real and personal, to A B; and she had no other property, except some arrears of the rents of the leaseholds and of the dividends of the stock:—Held, that the will was not an execution of the power. Lovell v. Knight, 8 Law J. Chanc. 44, s. c. 3 Sim. 275.

Where under a power lands are appointed to A, to the use of B, the legal estate remains in A. Doe v. Haddon, 4 M. & R. 118.

A general devise of all lands of which the testatrix had power to dispose, is not a good execution of a power to appoint monies, which were to arise from the sale of land. Adams v. Austen, 3 Russ. 461.

A deed by a son, releasing his right to a sum which was the subject of settlement,—held, coupled with expressions in the father's will, to amount to an appointment of the sum to the son. Holmes v. Holmes, 8 Law J. Chanc. 157, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 660.

Bonuses on bank stock are capital.—A had a power of appointment over 7,150*l.* stock: certain bonuses accrued thereon, which were laid out upon stock, upon the trusts and subject to the appointment; and after the accretion of these, A exercised his power, but only noticed the original stock and the first bonus, thus—"And also the said sum of 715*l.* five per cent. &c., together with all such further additions, in the nature of profit, to be made to the said bank stock in my lifetime:"—Held, that all the bonuses passed under the appointment. Carver v. Bowles, 9 Law J. Chanc. 91.

A testator gives the residue of his property to his sister for life, with a power of disposing of it by will: part of the residue consisted of 7,000*l.* bank stock: after his death, there was added to this a bonus of 1,750*l.*; the sister shortly after the grant of the bonus, but before she was aware of it, made her will, whereby, as to all the monies which constituted the residue of her brother's personal estate, and which she had power to dispose of by will, consisting of 7,000*l.* bank stock, &c., she appointed every part thereof to certain persons:—Held, that the bonus of 1,750*l.* passed to the appointees under the sister's will. Matthews v. Maude, 8 Law J. Chanc. 106, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 397.

A, having a power to appoint 10,000*l.* amongst his younger children, appoints it to them equally, reserving to himself a power of revocation as to 5,000*l.*, which he afterwards irrevocably appoints to E, one of the children, in consideration of her having agreed to apply part of it in payment of his debts. Afterwards A, by a deed, to which E is also a party, revokes, with her consent, the last appointment, as to 2,500*l.*, and, in pursuance of all powers, appoints that sum to a child by a second marriage, and confirms E's title to the remainder under the former appointment:—Held, that the appointment of the 5,000*l.* being void, the appointment of the 2,500*l.* must also fail. Farmer v. Martin, 2 Sim. 502.

By a marriage settlement, a fund was vested in trustees, in trust for all and every the child and children of the marriage, in such shares, at such age or ages, time or times, and subject to such conditions, restrictions, and limitations as the wife, in case she survived her husband, should appoint. There was one child only of the marriage. The wife appointed the fund to that child, for her separate use, for life, and after her decease, to such persons as the child should appoint; and, in default of such appointment, to the executors or administrators of the child:—Held, that the power in the settlement was well exercised. Bray v. Hammersley, 3 Sim. 513.

A, having power to appoint 700*l.*, which was to be raised under the trusts of a term, by her will appointed that sum to the persons whom she made her executors, in trust; but she did not declare expressly any trust of that sum. She then bequeathed her personal estate to the same persons, in trust, and subject to the payment of her debts and legacies:—Held, in a suit instituted by the legatees, that the 700*l.* ought to be raised and applied in the same manner as the testatrix's personal estate. Goodere v. Lloyd, 3 Sim. 538.

A testator gave a fund to his wife, trusting that at her decease she would give and bequeath the same to her children by him, as she should appoint. By will the widow appointed to five of her seven daughters:—Held, that the appointment was void, all the children being entitled to the benefit of the fund. Walsh v. Wallinger, 1 Tam. 425.

A testator, in designating the objects of a power of appointment given to his daughter, used the words "issue," and "child or children," synonymously. In a subsequent part of his will, he gave his son a power of appointment over a different part of his property, and, in pointing out the objects of it, used the words "issue" simply. The son had both children and grandchildren living at his death:—Held, that an exercise of the power in favour of the former only, was void. Dalzell v. Welch, 2 Sim. 319.

Power to appoint amongst children, or some or one of them, with limitations over for benefit of one or more of such children, or his or their issue. The donee of the power appointed equal shares to his daughters respectively for life, for their separate use; then to their issue, as they (the daughters respectively) should appoint; in default, amongst the issue equally:—Held, that, subject to the life-interest of the wives for their separate use, the shares appointed to the daughters belonged to them and to their husbands in their right. Carver v. Bowles, 9 Law J. Chanc. 91.

Where there is a general power of appointment among children, and the appointment by any circumstances becomes void, the children take as tenants in common.

A, having been indebted to the estate of B in a sum of money, but from which he had been discharged under a commission of bankrupt, voluntarily executed to C, the widow of B, a bond for the payment of part of such debt, for the use of herself and children, but at her disposal. Two years afterwards, A executed to C another bond, for the payment of the remainder of such debt, for the use and benefit of herself and children only, in what proportions among the latter she may think proper to direct, but for no other use, purpose, or intent whatsoever:—Held, that the widow took a life interest in the money secured by the bonds, and that the principal, after her decease, became payable among the children, in such manner and in such proportions as she should direct; and the widow, having made an exclusive appointment in favour of two of her children,—it was held, that such appointment was void, and that all the children took as tenants in common. Fowler v. Hunter, 3 Y. & J. 506.

J S M, being entitled to the dividends of 4,300*l.* for life, with a power to appoint by any deed or writing the principal after his death, and in default of appointment, to his next of kin, and being in prison for debt and in great distress, is prevailed upon by H C to enter into an agreement for sale of the principal after his death, in consideration of 1,000*l.* and other sums therein stated to have been previously lent and advanced to him by H C. By a subsequent deed, in consideration of 1,854*l.* therein stated to be due from J S M to H C, and of 1,000*l.* paid by J L M and others, J S M, by the direction of H C, appointed that the principal should, on his death, be transferred to J L M and others, with a proviso, that they should assign the same to H C, on payment of 1,000*l.* and interest, and all further advances. The 1,854*l.*, or any part of it, had not in fact been advanced by H C:—Held, that this was a clear fraud. Held, that the appointment was well executed; the next of kin of J S M had no claim; that H C was a trustee for the personal representatives of J S M, for the excess beyond the money received by J S M; that H C should pay costs. Miller v. Minet, 1 Tam. 481.

(b) Defective, where aided.

Semble—A plaintiff ought never to come into a court of equity to have an alleged defect in the execution of a power supplied, without admitting on the record, that, at law, the power has not been well executed. Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 3 Russ. 565.

A court of equity relieves against a defective execution of a power, only when the defect consists in the want of some circumstance in the manner of execution; and it will reform a deed, where the intention of the parties is mistaken by the drawer, but will not correct an error in an instrument occasioned by the ignorance of the parties in matter of law.

In order to work confirmation, the party said to confirm must know the law as well as the fact.

Where judgment had been given at law, that a power of sale had not been well executed, the defendants at law, claiming under the alleged execution of the power, filed a bill in equity to have the defect in the execution of the power supplied, and the instrument by which it had been executed rectified; and they at the same time prosecuted a writ of error on the judgment. The suit in equity having been brought to a hearing,—Held, that the plaintiffs in equity were bound to elect, either to have the bill dismissed, or to abandon the writ of error.

Lands were devised to a trustee and his heirs, to the use of A for life, without impeachment of waste, with divers remainders over; and a power was given to the trustee, with the consent of the tenant for life in possession, to sell the property, or any part of it, and to lay out the money in the purchase of other lands to be settled to the same uses; and, in the meantime, to invest it in the public funds; nd, for the purposes of such sale, to revoke the riginal uses, and appoint new uses. A contract was ntered into for the sale of the estate for 13,400*l.*, xclusive of the timber, which was to be taken at a aluation; and, it being conceived that the tenant or life, without impeachment of waste, was entitled o receive for his own benefit the amount of the aluation of the timber, a deed was executed, by hich he, in consideration of 2,448*l.*, conveyed the imber to the purchaser; and the trustee, in consideration of 13,400*l.*, conveyed the land, exclusive f the timber. Many years afterwards, the tenant or life, being advised that he was not entitled to he amount of the valuation of the timber, transerred to the trustee as much three per cent. stock s 2,448*l.* would have produced at the time of the ale. After the death of A, the next remainderan, though he had concurred in proceedings in hich the fund produced by the sale was treated as pplicable to the purposes of the testator's will, rought a writ of formedon, and obtained judgment, n the ground that the power of sale was not exeuted:—Held, that a court of equity could not reeve against that judgment. Cockerell v. Cholmley, Russ. & M. 418, s. c. 1 Tam. 435.

(C) How extinguished or destroyed.

What powers of appointment are capable of being xtinguished or released. West v. Berney, 1 Russ. : M. 431.

Semble—Where a tenant for life, having a power charge the estate after his death for the benefit f his children, levies a fine,—the power will be xtinguished.

By a marriage settlement, lands were limited to e use of the husband for life, remainder to the ife for life, remainder to trustees for a term of ur hundred years, to commence from the decease f the survivor of the husband and wife, remainder the heirs of the body of the wife begotten by e husband, remainder to the heirs of the husband. he trust of the term was, in case there should be sue of the marriage a son and one or more younger ild or children, who should live to attain his, her, r their age or ages of twenty-one years, to raise ch sum, not exceeding 200*l.* in the whole, as the usband and wife should by any deed or writing ppoint, or, in default thereof, as the survivor should y deed or writing, or his or her last will or testaent, appoint; and, in default of such appointent, or subject thereto, after the monies so appinted should have been raised, and the costs of e trustees paid, the term was to cease, or be asgned in trust to attend the inheritance. There ere younger children of the marriage, who attained enty-one. The wife died without having joined any appointment, and afterwards the husband vied a fine of the premises:—Held, that the power as extinguished by the fine. Bickley v. Guest, Russ. & M. 440.

POWER OF ATTORNEY.

A power of attorney authorising a surrender of opyhold premises for the purposes of sale, in order at the person authorized may be satisfied a debt, a power coupled with an interest, and therefore cannot be revoked. Gaussen v. Morton, 8 Law J. K.B. 313, s. c. 10 B. & C. 731.

(1) AT COMMON LAW.

(A) PROCESS.

(a) Indorsement.

An attorney, plaintiff in a cause, is not within the operation of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 71. s. 8, which requires the writ to be indorsed with the name and place of abode of the attorney, by whom it is issued. Hamilton v. Jones, 8 Law J. C.P. 279, s. c. 4 M. & P. 523.

(b) Service.

Service of a writ directed to the chamberlain of Chester is irregular, without his mandate to the sheriff. Earl of Shrewsbury v. Haycroft, 6 Bing. 194, s. c. 3 M. & P. 471.

Where the defendant eluded service of process, and it was given to his son, who promised to deliver it to his father—the Court refused to set aside proceedings, on an affidavit by defendant, that he was not served; because the defendant did not produce an affidavit of his son, nor shew what became of the writ, nor swear that he had had no knowledge of the writ. For anything that appeared in his affidavit, the son, by his father's order, might have put the writ into the fire. Rhodes v. Innes, 9 Law J. C.P. 116, s. c. 7 Bing. 329, s. c. 5 M. & P. 153.

Affidavit to obtain a distringas upon a venire without personal service, pursuant to 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 71. s. 5,—what it must shew. Pitt v. Eldred, 9 Law J. Exch. 23, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 128, s. c. 1 C. & J. 147.

Where it is sought to compel an appearance by leaving a copy of the venire facias at the premises of the defendant, on the ground that the defendant keeps out of the way, the affidavit for the distringas must distinctly disclose circumstances from which the Court cannot fail to conclude that the defendant keeps out of the way to avoid personal service. Winstanley v. Edge, 9 Law J. Exch. 61, s. c. 1 C. & J. 381, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 276.

The date of issuing a writ not indorsed on the copy—Court held the rule M. T. 1 W. 4. in that respect directory, and refused to set aside process. Miller v. Bowden, 9 Law J. Exch. 192, s. c. 1 C. & J. 563.

The Court will not grant a distringas, upon an affidavit of the belief of the deponent, that the defendant keeps out of the way to avoid personal service; but it must also be made to appear, to the satisfaction of the Court, that the defendant keeps out of the way to avoid service, and the grounds for the belief must be stated. Godkin v. Redgate, 1 C. & J. 401, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 287.

Requisites of affidavits in order to found a distringas. Dobell v. King, 1 Tyrw. 498, n.

Partners residing at Hamburgh had a warehouse in Manchester, where the business was carried on by managing agents. Plaintiffs issued a venire ad respond. against them, and served it at the warehouse. Afterwards they issued a distringas, on which the sheriff levied 40*l.*, and gave notice as a proceeding under the statute 8 Geo. 4. c. 71. s. 5:—Held, that the service was a nullity and the distringas irregular. Hall v. Gumpel, 9 Law J. Exch. 149. s. c. 1 Tyrw. 490, s. c. 1 C. & J. 539.

The Court will not increase issues upon a distringas at common law since the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 71. s. 5. has enacted a course of proceeding by distringas. Pennell v. Kingston, 9 Law J. Exch. 191, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 495, s. c. 1 C. & J. 548.

Quære, whether a distringas under the statute may issue immediately upon the return of the venire. Semble—that the time within which a distringas may issue, after the return of the venire, is in the discretion of the Court. Thomas v. Elder, 1 C. & J. 517, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 496.

(c) Return.

An attachment of privilege made returnable on "Wednesday next after fifteen days of St. Hilary," is irregular. Adcock v. Felton, 8 Law J. C.P. 146, s. c. 6 Bing. 441.

By 1 Will. 4. c. 3, writs, formerly returnable on general return days may be made returnable on any of the three days before, and on any day within the term, excepting the last three days of the term, the return day not being on a Sunday. Anonymous, 9 Law J. C.P. 228.

(d) Irregularity.

Where process is amendable of course, it will not be set aside for irregularity. Popkins v. Smith, 9 Law J. C.P. 173, s. c. 7 Bing. 434, s. c. 5 M. & P. 319.

A bailable bill of Middlesex, with an ac etiam clause, stating the cause of action to be "for 120*l.* according to the custom," &c., but without stating what was the nature of the action:—Held, to be irregular. Ewington v. Allen, 7 Law J. K.B. 87.

A writ tested in this court, "Sir Nicholas Tindal, Knight," instead of "Sir Nicholas Conyngham Tindal, Knight," is irregular, and the Court will set aside the service. Anonymous, 8 Law J. C.P. 150.

Subpœna, tested 9th May, to appear 21st of March instant. The Court considered that the defendant could not possibly have been misled, and that the words "of March," might be rejected as repugnant, whereupon the word "instant" would have a correct conclusion. Page v. Carew, 9 Law J. Exch. 192, s. c. 1 C. & J. 514.

A latitat duly issued, returned, and continued, to save the Statute of Limitations, is well connected with a bill of Middlesex, by which the defendant is ultimately brought into court; the description of process being the same; and the latitat always presupposing a bill of Middlesex. Page v. Newman, 7 Law J. K.B. 1; s. c. 8 B. & C. 489, s. c. 2 M. & R. 29.

(B) APPEARANCE.

To a subpœna issued at the suit of the Attorney

General, a defendant has a right to appear in person, and to have such appearance recorded in court, without payment of fees to, or the employment of, a clerk in court for such appearance. The Attorney General v. Carpenter, 9 Law J. Exch. 80, s. c. 1 C. & J. 289, 409, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 280.

(C) Declarations.

(a) When to declare.

Where a detainer for debt was lodged against a person in custody on a criminal charge, who was afterwards convicted and sentenced to a year's imprisonment:—Held, that the creditor was not bound to declare during that period. Altroffe v. Lunn, 9 B. & C. 395.

In a bailable action, the plaintiff may declare conditionally after the time for putting in and perfecting bail has expired, although the defendant has not put in bail. Windover v. Cooper, 8 Law J. K.B. 209, s. c. 10 B. & C. 614.

In a bailable action, if the plaintiff, on the return of the writ, declare "conditionally, until special bail be put in and perfected;" that expression is understood, "until the defendant be in court;" and where, in such a case, after the plaintiff had so declared, the defendant obtained a rule for cancelling the bail-bond on filing common bail, and did afterwards file common bail—it was held, that the plaintiff might proceed in the cause upon that declaration. Montgomery v. Garrett, 9 Law J. K.B. 2.

Where the writ was returnable in one term, and the defendants duly appeared, and the declaration was afterwards delivered, entitled of a subsequent term:—Held, by Mr. Justice Bayley and Mr. Justice Littledale, that this was not an irregularity, though the defendant might apply to have the title of the declaration altered.—Contrà, Mr. Justice Parke, who thought it was an irregularity. Beesten v. Beckett, 7 Law J. K.B. 193.

No person can deliver a declaration by the bye in the Court of Exchequer, except the original plaintiff. Griffith v. Humphreys, 3 Y. & J. 218.

(c) Form.

The rule of court which requires a plaintiff to insert in his writ the names of all the defendants in the action, does not prevent his issuing a writ against two, and declaring against one only, in case the other does not appear, and the plaintiff does not appear for him. Evans v. Whitehead, 7 Law J. K.B. 41, s. c. 2 M. & R. 367.

A venire was issued against one defendant, and a nuo minus against another—neither process being bailable:—Held, that serviceable process being merely to bring the parties into court, a delaration against both jointly was not irregular. Pitt v. Wilks, Law J. Chanc. 101, s. c. 1 C. & J. 388, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 303.

Where, of three defendants, two only are brought into court, the plaintiff cannot regularly declare; the irregularity is, however, waived by their pleading. Hamilton v. Jones, 4 M. & P. 456.

(d) Notice of.

A notice of declaration, whether the declaration be filed conditionally or in chief, must express the nature of the action. Sams v. Culham, 7 Law J. K.B. 171, s. c. 9 B. & C. 380.

Quære—Whether notice of declaration, de bene esse, can be regularly served on the day on which the process be served and the writ returnable?—Semble, that if it may, it is good service if any interval elapse between the delivery of the writ and the notice of declaration. Nock v. Southall, 13 Price, 800.

(e) Striking out Counts.

In an action against coach proprietors, for not conveying the plaintiff and his luggage, the declaration contained several counts, laying the breach of contract in various ways, but not materially altering the one from the other,—the Court would not order any of the counts to be struck out, as the plaintiff might be defeated at the trial, on the ground of a variance between the declaration and proof. Anonymous, 7 Law J. C.P. 115.

(D) Pleas.

(a) Rule to plead.

After demurrer, and amendment of the declaration, on payment of costs, in the vacation succeeding the term of which the declaration is delivered, the defendant is entitled to a new rule to plead. Addis v. Thomas, 8 Law J. C.P. 29, s. c. 6 Bing. 236, s. c. 3 M. & P. 560.

(b) In Abatement.

The plaintiff cannot sign judgment after plea in abatement, because the affidavit to verify the plea was sworn before the defendant's attorney. He should apply to the Court to set aside the plea. Such a plea, filed before common bail has been filed, is warranted by common bail filed on the same day; so that the plaintiff cannot sign judgment on a following day. Edwards v. Minchin, 7 Law J. K.B. 258.

Where an affidavit verifying a plea in abatement, which refers to a declaration, is sworn before the declaration is delivered, such plea is a nullity; and judgment may be signed by the plaintiff notwithstanding. Bower v. Kemp, 9 Law J. Exch. 80, s. c. 1 C. & J. 287.

(c) Special Pleas.

In assumpsit, the Court will not allow a party to plead specially (with the general issue) that which may be given in evidence under the general issue, unless the plea be simple, and tending to a single issue. Hammond v. Teague, 7 Law J. C.P. 263, s. c. 6 Bing. 197, s. c. 3 M. & P. 474.

(d) Puis darrein Continuance.

Notwithstanding his being under terms to rejoin issuably, a defendant is at liberty to plead puis darrein continuance. Bryant v. Perring, 7 Law J. C.P. 152, s. c. 5 Bing. 414, s. c. 2 M. & P. 760.

A plea puis darrein continuance stated, that, since the last continuance, the plaintiff had recovered a judgment for the same cause of action; the affidavit to verify this plea, stated the time at which the judgment was recovered, which by reference to the Nisi Prius record, appeared to be not since the last continuance:—Held, that this affidavit did not verify the plea, and that the plea could not be received. Minshall v. Evans, 4 C. & P. 555. [Patteson]

In an action for an assault and false imprisonment, the defendant pleaded the general issue, and, a verdict having been found for the plaintiff with 100*l.* damages, the defendant obtained a new trial on the ground of their excess, and afterwards obtained a Judge's order to withdraw the general issue, and plead accord and satisfaction. The Court discharged the order. Price v. Severn, 9 Law J. C.P. 101, s. c. 7 Bing. 402, s. c. 5 M. & P. 250.

(f) Sham Pleas.

Where a sham plea is so framed as to lead to two modes of trial, or is otherwise so out of the usual course, as to put the plaintiff's attorney to unusual delay, or to the necessity of consulting counsel, before he can reply,—the Court will set aside the plea, give leave to the plaintiff to sign judgment, and order the defendant's attorney to pay the costs of the application. Starling v. Pain, 7 Law J. K.B. 38.

The plaintiff declared on a bill of exchange due on the 5th of December; the defendant pleaded a judgment recovered as of the preceding Michaelmas term; the plaintiff treated the plea as a nullity, and signed judgment:—The Court refused to set aside the judgment, the plea being on the face of it false. Vere v. Carden, 7 Law J. C.P. 152, s. c. 5 Bing. 413, s. c. 2 M. & P. 763.

The defendant was by mistake arrested under a ca. sa. as the bail of one E M, instead of the real bail, a person of the same name. After the defendant (the plaintiff, in the original suit, and his attorney) had been informed of their mistake, they still detained the plaintiff in custody for several days. In trespass for the false imprisonment, the defendants pleaded in bar the recognizance of bail in the former action. The Court refused to strike out the plea, though evidently false within the knowledge of the defendants. M'Crandle v. Barwise, 8 Law J. C.P. 135, s. c. 6 Bing. 429, s. c. 4 M. & P. 120.

(E) Entering the Issue.

Where a cause has been at issue for more than four terms and no proceedings taken, the defendant must give the plaintiff a term's notice of his intention to proceed before he rules the plaintiff to enter the issue. Lord v. Hillier, 7 Law J. K.B. 307, s. c. 9 B. & C. 621.

(F) Particulars of Demand.

Where a plaintiff declares specially, as upon a special contract, adding counts for work and labour, and in his particulars does not expressly refer to the counts for work and labour, and on the trial fails upon the special counts, semble that he cannot then resort to the counts for work and labour. Read v. Rann, 8 Law J. K.B. 144, s. c. 10 B. & C. 438.

(G) Trial.

A suggestion ore tenus by the Attorney General, that the Crown is interested in a suit depending between subject and subject, is a sufficient ground for ordering a trial at bar. Rowe v. Brenton, 5 Law J. K.B. 137, Dig. 406, s.c. 3 M. & R. 133.

In a trial at bar, each of the presiding Judges makes such observations to the jury, upon the whole case, by way of direction, as he considers to be requisite. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & R. 364.

(b) Order of.

Application was made on the part of the plaintiff, to have a cause taken out of its turn, in order that it might be tried during the existing sittings, on the ground that the defendant had died since the commencement of such sittings. The application was opposed on the part of defendant's executors, and refused by the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, after time taken to consider. Isard v. Milner, 4 C. & P. 285. [Tindal]

(c) Putting off.

The Court will not put off a trial at the instance of the plaintiff, beyond the present sittings, on account of the smallness of the claim, and the alleged poverty of the plaintiff. Fendal v. Marriott, 2 M. & M. 1. [Tenterden]

It is not sufficient ground for the postponement of a trial, that a witness, rendered incompetent by bankruptcy, has had his certificate allowed by a number of his creditors, sufficient to enable him to be discharged on a particular future day, and that he is not in expectation of any opposition to its allowance by the Lord Chancellor. Tennant v. Strachan, 2 M. & M. 377, s. c. 4 C. & P. 31. [Tenterden]

(d) Mode of conducting in Court.

The plaintiff's counsel has a right to begin and state the facts, although by a rule of court the defendant is under obligation to admit the plaintiff's case. Thwaites v. Sainsbury, 5 C. & P. 68. [Tindal]

In an ejectment by the heir-at-law, the defendant is not entitled to begin by admitting the heirship and seisin of the ancestor, unless defeated by a conveyance made by the ancestor, under which the defendant claims. To entitle the defendant to begin, the plaintiff's whole primâ facie case must be admitted. Doe d. Tucker v. Tucker, 1 M. & M. 536.

In ejectment, where each party claimed as heir-at-law, and the real question was as to the legitimacy of the defendant, who was clearly heir, if legitimate, he proposed to admit that, unless he were legitimate the lessor of the plaintiff was the heir-at-law:—Held, that this admission did not give him the right of beginning. Warren v. Bray, 2 M. & M. 166. [Vaughan]

In trespass for entering plaintiff's dwelling-house, and taking his goods; on a plea, justifying the trespass, by proceedings under a commission of bankruptcy, and replication taking issue on the act of bankruptcy, the defendant is entitled to begin. Cotton v. James, 2 M. & M. 273, s. c. 3 C. & P. 505. [Tenterden]

In trespass, where there are special pleas of justification, but no plea of the general issue, the defendant is entitled to begin, although the declaration alleges special damage. Fish v. Traters, 3 C. & P. 578.

If a court of equity directs an action of trover to brought, and orders that the defendant shall lmit the finding and the conversion of the goods. his does not give the defendant the right to begin. urberville v. Patrick, 4 C. & P. 557. [Bosanquet]

In replevin, if there be any affirmative issue on e plaintiff, he is entitled to begin. Accordingly, an avowry for rent in arrear, plea, that the tenant had let other property to the defendant at a rger rent, and that it was agreed that the two nts should be set off against each other, and that consequence, a larger sum was due to the tenant, an the sum distrained for by the defendant. Replication, denying this agreement:—Held, that on ese pleadings, the defendant was entitled to begin. urtis v. Wheeler, 4 C. & P. 196, s. c. 1 M. & M. 93. [Tenterden]

In replevin, there was a cognizance for rent in rear. To this there were two pleas, the one stating that a certain agreement had been entered into atween the landlord and tenant, and that the tenant as subsequently induced by the landlord to enter ito another agreement; which second agreement as the demise in the cognizance mentioned; and that his latter agreement had been abandoned by mutual onsent, before any rent became due. The other lea was similar, except that it averred that the nant was induced to enter into the second agreement by fraud. Replication to the one, denying the baudonment, and to the other, denying the fraud: —Held, that on these pleadings, the plaintiff had o right to begin. Williams, administrator of Williams, v. Thomas, 4 C. & P. 234. [Bolland]

If, in an action for libel, the defendant plead justifications, without pleading the general issue, and he affirmative of the issue be on the defendant, he s entitled to begin, and the plaintiff has not, in uch case, a right to begin, with a view of proving he amount of his damages. Cooper v. Wakley, 3 C. & P. 474, s. c. 1 M. & M. 248. [Tenterden]

On a plea in abatement to an action on bills of exhange, of the non-joinder of a joint contractor, the lefendant is entitled to begin. Fowler v. Coster, 2 M. & M. 241, s. c. 3 C. & P. 463. [Tenterden]

In ejectment, where defendants defend in the same ight, but by different counsel, only one counsel an address the jury. They may adduce separate evidence, and both counsel cross-examine the witnesses. Hogg v. Tindal, 2 M. & M. 314, s. c. 3 C. & P. 565. [Tenterden]

In trover, where two defendants defend by the same attorney, and in the same interest, but one appears by counsel, and the other in person, the counsel only is entitled to address the jury; but both he and the defendant appearing in person may cross-examine the witnesses. Perring v. Tucker, 2 M. & M. 391, s. c. 4 C. & P. 75. [Tindal]

Where, on the trial of an issue out of the Court of Chancery, a person who is not a party on the record is, by order of that Court, "to be at liberty to attend the trial of such issue;" the counsel of such person has no right to address the jury, or to call witnesses; but he may cross-examine the witnesses called by both parties, and suggest points of law. Wright v. Wright, 4 C. & P. 389, s. c. 7 Bing. 459, n. [Littledale]

Where, in an action between subjects, the Crown interfered pro interesse sue, and undertook the defence of the cause, and witnesses were called on both sides, the plaintiff was allowed the general reply. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & R. 304.

Semble, that it would be a good practice, in the administration of justice, to keep all the witnesses out of court at Nisi Prius, except the person under examination. Taylor v. Lawson, 3 C. & P. 543. [Best]

The witnesses had all been ordered out of court, but one of them came into court again, and heard the evidence of another witness. The witness who had so come back into court, was allowed to be examined as to such facts only as had not been spoken to by any other witness. Beamon v. Ellice, 4 C. & P. 585. [Taunton]

A defendant's attorney, who has been subpœnaed on the part of the plaintiff, may, at the desire of his counsel, remain in court during the trial of the cause, although an order has been made for the witnesses on both sides to withdraw. Everett v. Lowdham, 5 C. & P. 91. [Bosanquet]

Where on the pleadings the affirmative is on the defendant, the plaintiff need give no evidence. Gray v. Atkins, 8 Law J. C.P. 132.

Where a party tendered evidence primâ facie admissible:—Held, that the other party ought not to be allowed to interfere with evidence for the purpose of excluding it, but that it should be received and expunged, if afterwards shewn not to be properly receivable. Jones v. Fort, 2 M. & M. 196. [Tenterden]

In an action for a malicious arrest, the plaintiff's counsel had closed his case, and the defendant's counsel had begun to address the jury, when the Lord Chief Justice said he would nonsuit, on the ground that there was no evidence of malice. The plaintiff's counsel wished to adduce further evidence, but was not permitted, the Lord Chief Justice observing, that the rule of not permitting a party to adduce fresh evidence, after such party had closed his case, had been already too much relaxed. George v. Radford, 3 C. & P. 364. [Tenterden]

(H) Rules and Orders.

In the affidavit of service of a rule to compute, it is not necessary to state that the original rule was shewn to the party. It seems that the original need only be exhibited in cases where it is proposed to bring the party into contempt. Holmes v. Senior, 9 Law J. C.P. 48, s. c. 7 Bing. 162, s. c. 4 M. & P. 828.

An order was obtained for delivery of particulars of set-off within a fortnight: they were not delivered for five weeks, but after the delivery an order was made, by consent, for the amendment of the declaration. This is a waiver of the irregularity in the delivery of the particulars. Wallis v. Anderson, 1 M. & M. 291. [Tenterden]

(I) Proceedings.

(a) Where stayed.

The plaintiff, an attorney, sued the defendant, his agent, for negligence in the conduct of his business, averring general damage. The cause was referred, under the usual order of Nisi Prius, and the arbitrator awarded a verdict to be entered for the plaintiff. The plaintiff afterwards commenced a second action for special damage arising out of the same matters, viz. the loss of the business of certain per-same annual. The Court, on motion, refused to stay the proceedings in this second action. Dicas v. Jay, 8 Law J. C.P. 210, s. c. 6 Bing. 519, s. c. 4 M. & P. 285.

The lessors of the plaintiff brought three ejectments in the Court of King's Bench, for the recovery of the same premises. That Court stayed the proceeding in two of the actions, both parties assenting, and the rule was drawn up accordingly. Another ejectment was afterwards brought in this court, upon a different demise, but substantially for the same cause of action:—The proceedings were ordered to be stayed. Doe d. Carthew v. Brenton, 8 Law J. C.P. 143, s. c. 6 Bing. 469, s. c. 4 M. & P. 148.

Where an heir-at-law brought an ejectment to recover part of the devised premises, and failed, and afterwards brought a second ejectment against other parties, who held other parts of the devised premises, the Court refused to stay the proceedings in the second action, until the costs of the first were paid. Doe v. Harris, 4 M. & R. 569.

(b) Where set aside.

A judgment signed after declaration served, and a rule to plead, but before appearance, and without a demand of plea, was set aside, although the defendant had afterwards taken out a summons for time to plead. Vernon v. Blackett, 8 Law J. C.P. 198.

2. IN EQUITY.

(A) Rules of.

In equity, the rules of court in respect of practice are to be strictly observed only where the occasions which rendered them requisite are present, and require their observance. Vinter v. Bickley, 12 Price, 460.

(B) Bills.

(a) To perpetuate Testimony.

A motion to dismiss a bill to perpetuate testimony for want of prosecution, is irregular. The proper application is, that the plaintiff may proceed within a given time, or may pay the defendant his costs. Wright v. Tatham, 2 Sim. 459.

(b) Of Revivor.

If a defendant does not plead or demur to a bill of revivor, but answers, the plaintiff has a right immediately to obtain an order of revivor, notwithstanding that his right to revive is contested by the answer. Lewis v. Mallett, 7 Law J. Chanc. 124.

To prevent a suit from being revived, either a plea or demurrer must be put in the bill of revivor; an answer insisting that the plaintiff has no right to revive, is not sufficient. Lewis v. Bridgman, 2 Sim. 463.

An alleged defect of parties in the frame of a first bill of revivor, affords no reason for allowing a second bill of revivor to remain on the file. Livesey v. Livesey, 1 Russ. & M. 10.

(c) Supplemental and of Review.

A supplemental bill, in the nature of a bill of review, may be filed in respect of new matter, even though the new matter be of such a kind, that it cannot be used as evidence of anything which was before in issue in the cause, but tenders an entirely new issue.

But, except under very particular circumstances, a party will not obtain leave to file a bill of review, or to proceed in it, unless he performs the original decree.

A party, however, may file a bill of review, and proceed in it, though he has not done what the original decree directs to be done, provided the proceedings under the decree are in such a state that the other party could not, at the time of filing the bill and proceeding in it, have brought him into default for non-performance.

In a suit for specific performance by a vendor against a vendee, the only defence set up was, that the plaintiff could not make a good title: that defence failed, and a decree for specific performance was pronounced: in the meantime, the defendant had discovered that the representations of the vendor, as to the quantity of timber, which formed the principal value of the estate, were false: leave was given him to file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, on the ground of the subsequently discovered falsehood of the vendor's representations.

In such a case, the vendee will not be relieved from paying his purchase-money to the vendor, though the sum be very large.

But he has a right to file his bill without paying the money, if the time for the payment of the purchase-money, in the due course of the execution of the decree, had not arrived.

Semble, as soon as the time for the payment of the money arrived, in the course of the due execution of the original decree, the vendee would not be allowed to proceed in his bill of review, without paying the money to the vendor. Partridge v. Usborne, 7 Law J. Chanc. 49.

A plaintiff must establish, at the hearing, that he had a title to relief at the time of filing his bill; or, if he relies on matter subsequent, he must file a supplemental bill. Barfield v. Kelly, 4 Russ. 335.

[See Amendment.]

[Pratt v. Barker, 4 Russ. 507, Dig. Law J. 413.]

Process being prayed against two defendants, who were within the jurisdiction, and against a third defendant, who was stated to be out of the jurisdiction, whenever he should come within the jurisdiction, the two defendants who were within the jurisdiction answered; the third defendant had not appeared; and the plaintiff obtained, as of course, an order to amend after more than six weeks had elapsed from the time when the answer of the only defendants who were within the jurisdiction was to be deemed sufficient:—Held, that the order was irregular. The King of Spain v. Hullett, 8 Law J. Chanc. 8, s. c. 3 Sim. 338.

If a bill, after being filed, is then amended, it is irregular to put it again upon the file without a fresh signature to the draft, although the amendments have only reduced it to the shape in which it was originally drawn and signed by counsel. Burch v. Rich, 1 Russ. & M. 156.

A party ought not to have his bill put out of court, because he was accidentally too late to have he replication filed on the proper day. Anon. 8 aw J. Chanc. 11.

Upon a motion to dismiss, the delay in prosecuting the suit was satisfactorily accounted for.—'he Court refused to make any order upon the iotion, or to require the plaintiff to undertake to peed. Vent v. Pacey, 3 Sim. 382.

Where a plaintiff in a bill is abroad on foreign ervice with his regiment, the defendant, who might ave pushed on the proceedings, cannot, on the laintiff's return some years afterwards, discharge ie bill on account of the delay. House v. Townsend, D. & Cl. 430.

A defendant may dismiss a bill for want of prosecution, pending a notice given by him of a motion dissolve an injunction, which the plaintiff had btained. Farquharson v. Pitcher, 3 Russ. 383.

Last answer filed 30th November 1829. On the 'th February 1830 defendant gave notice to dismiss. Two days afterwards plaintiff obtained order amend.—Motion to dismiss granted. Swinfen v. sinfen, 3 Sim. 384.

Amendment of a bill, without serving a subpœna answer the amendments, will not prevent the ifendant from dismissing the bill. Bramston v. irter, 2 Sim. 458.

If, between the giving of a notice of motion to smiss, and the making of the motion, the plaintiff itains an order to amend, the plaintiff must pay e costs of the motion, but no order will be made on it. Davenport v. Manners, 2 Sim. 514.

Where a defendant, before replication filed, gives tice, under the sixteenth order, of a motion to smiss the bill for want of prosecution, the plaintiff nnot meet the motion by undertaking to speed s cause with effect, unless his replication be filed or before the day on which his motion to dismiss made. Willis v. Allen, 8 Law J. Chanc. 10, s. c. Sim. 274.

At the hearing of the cause, a bill will be dissed, if there be no evidence against a defendant, hough, upon a motion for an injunction, a case s made against him, on which an ex parte inction was sustained. Barfield v. Kelly, 4 Russ. 5.

If notice of a motion to dismiss a bill for want of secution is given for too early a day, the defect not cured by the motion being accidentally postned to a day when it might have been regularly de. De Geneve v. Hannam, 1 Russ. & M. 494.

On the 28th of November plaintiffs filed a replion, and on the 29th a subpœna to rejoin, returne immediately, tested on the 27th, but without aining an order for it. Afterwards the defents obtained an order to dismiss:—Held, that subpœna was irregular, and a motion to discharge order of dismissal was refused. Brown v. Moore, im. 464.

Where the plaintiff's solicitor had neglected to ve the subpœna to hear judgment, in time, and l set down the cause for hearing, and on motion ler the 17th order the bill had been dismissed h costs, and the defendants moved that the order lismissal be discharged, and the cause retained,—Court refused the application, with costs. Fowle itanford, 9 Law J. Chanc. 66.

But a similar motion granted by Lord Lyndhurst. gnay v. Mashiter, 9 Law J. Chanc. 68.

If a plaintiff omits to produce his witnesses and pass publication within due time after filing the replication, and the defendant, having been thus enabled to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, does not within a convenient time dismiss it, but permits the plaintiff to incur expense in the prosecution of the suit,—an order of dismissal, subsequently obtained, will be discharged, with costs, for irregularity. Farnes v. Hutchinson, 8 Law J. Chanc. 11, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 22.

(C) Process.

If a defendant, who has been taken on an attachment, still refuses to answer, the plaintiff may, at the same time, proceed to enforce an answer by the process of this Court, and bring an action against him and his sureties, on the bond given to the sheriff under the attachment. Beddall v. Page, 2 Sim. 224.

(D) Appearance.

Where a person, not a party to the suit, is interested in a question, and appears by counsel, and submits to be bound by the decision,—the Court will not hear him without the consent of the other parties to the suit. Bozon v. Bolland, 1 Russ. & M. 69.

(E) Answer.

A defendant who had taken out three orders for time to answer, and then pleaded,—refused further time, on the plea being overruled. Mackworth v. Marshall, 3 Sim. 370.

According to the practice of the Court of Exchequer, an answer filed at any time before the sitting of the Court, may be shewn as cause against a motion to extend the common injunction to stay trial. Swede v. Crewdson, 3 Y. & J. 186.

(b) Sufficiency.

A defendant cannot avail himself of a matter in defence, which appears only upon his evidence, and was not stated in his answer. But if the plaintiff, upon his own case, is not entitled to the relief prayed, the Court will not assist him. Stanley v. Robinson, 1 Russ. & M. 527.

(c) Taking off the File.

If a plaintiff reads a passage in an answer, which does not refer to, but is qualified by, a subsequent passage, the defendant may read the latter passage. Rude v. Whitchurch, 3 Sim. 562.

If the plaintiff read a passage from the defendant's answer, as evidence of a particular fact, the defendant has no right to read subsequent matter connected with it by such words as "but" and "and," unless the subsequent matter be explanatory of the passage read by the plaintiff. Davis v. Spurling, 1 Russ. & M. 64, s. c. 1 Tam. 199.

(G) Plea.

When a plea of another suit depending is filed, the proper course is, to refer it to the Master to certify whether the two suits are for the same purpose. Newdigate v. Newdigate, 8 Law J. Chanc. 35.

(H) Motions.

A defendant cannot make a motion, if he is in contempt at the time when the motion is made, though he was not in contempt when the notice of motion was given. The Attorney General v. Ellison, 8 Law J. Chanc. 162.

If a motion, after being refused with costs in the court below, be renewed upon new facts and evidence in the court of appeal, it may be granted with costs, it being substantially an original motion. In re Joseph & Webster, 1 Russ. & M. 496.

(I) Petitions.

[See post, R.]

A petition presented by the bankrupt in person, and which he appears in person to support, is not within the order of the 12th August 1809. In re Bruce, 4 Russ. 223.

(J) Orders.

[Livesey v. Livesey, 3 Russ. 287, Dig. Law J. 418.]

(K) Examinations.

[Fereday v. Wightwick, 4 Russ. 114, Dig. Law J. 418.]

Motion by a defendant, before answer, to examine a witness de bene esse, granted. Bacon v. Child, 3 Sim. 457.

Leave given, before publication, to examine a witness (who had been examined and cross-examined) as to circumstances brought to his recollection, after his examination in chief. Cockerell v. Chomeley, 3 Sim. 313.

A plaintiff having, by mistake, omitted to file a replication before he examined his witnesses, leave was given to him, notwithstanding publication passed, to re-examine his witnesses on the interrogatories already filed, but not to examine any new witnesses. Healey v. Jagger, 3 Sim. 494.

Where, on the hearing of a cause, the bill was dismissed because a will was not proved to have been duly executed, and a petition of rehearing is presented, and in the meantime the plaintiff moves that he may exhibit interrogatories to prove the execution of the will,—the Court will allow it, on its being shewn that the plaintiff originally intended to examine witnesses to that fact, but that, by an accidental omission, that evidence was not gone into. Hood v. Pimm, 9 Law J. Chanc. 63.

The examination of a party may be read on further directions, for the purpose of having inquiries directed, though no foundation for those inquiries appears on the report itself. Dymock v. Ashton, 7 Law J. Chanc. 120.

In support of a charge brought in under the decree, two witnesses, examined by the plaintiff, to prove the defendant's handwriting, said that they did not believe it to be his handwriting. Leave was given to the plaintiff to examine fresh witnesses to the same point. Greenwood v. Parsons, 2 Sim. 229.

(L) Interrogatories.

Permission given to exhibit an interrogatory after publication passed, to prove the antiquity of the handwriting in a book preserved in the British Museum. Lord Kensington v. Pugh, 3 Y. & J. 378.

(M) Depositions.

Although there are two suits in the Court of Chancery between parties having the same respective interests, and relating to the same matters, the depositions of such only of the witnesses in the prior suit as are dead, will be allowed to be read in the subsequent suit. Carrington v. Carnock, 2 Sim. 567.

(N) Exhibits.

Where the answer of a defendant insists that a covenant was inserted, without his knowledge or consent, in a deed executed by him, and that the deed was not read over to him, and that the covenant is a fraud upon him,—such deed cannot be proved vivâ voce against him as an exhibit: but it may be so proved as against another defendant, whose answer does not impeach the validity of the covenant. Barfield v. Kelly, 4 Russ. 355.

(O) Publication.

[Dew v. Clarke, 4 Russ. 511, Dig. Law J. 412.]

Under the 18th of the new orders, publication may be enlarged on affidavit, without notice. Brown v. Brown, 1 Russ. & M. 77.

Publication enlarged, merely on an affidavit that the party had material witnesses to examine, and meant to examine them forthwith. Harrison v. Courtauld, 7 Law J. Chanc. 162.

Where the plaintiff's solicitor, merely through ignorance or mistake, has neglected to comply with the exigency of the 17th order, the Court will not relieve the plaintiff, upon terms, from the penal consequences of the neglect, without the consent of the other party. Walmsley v. Froude, 1 Russ. & M. 334.

Where the cause cannot come on to be heard till after the following term, publication may be further enlarged a second time, on motion, without assigning any special reason, until the first day of the next term. Vinter v. Bickley, 12 Price, 460.

(P) Postponement of Trials.

Motion to postpone the new trial of an issue in a tithe suit, from the summer to the spring assizes, on the ground, that the application for the new trial of the issue, and the decision of the Judge granting the new trial, in which he stated the verdict on the first trial to be against the opinion of himself and the learned Judge who tried it, had been published in the newspapers, and was likely to influence the jury, especially as it was to be tried by the same Judge,—refused with costs. Willis v. Farrer, 5 Y. & J. 381.

(Q) Subpœna to hear Judgment.

A cause was heard at the Rolls; but, before judgment was pronounced, accidental circumstances render the hearing ineffectual. The plaintiff then set it down before the Lord Chancellor, and obtained an order, of which the defendant had notice, assigning it a particular position in the Lord Chancellor's paper, but did not serve a new subpœna to hear judgment. When it was called on before the Lord Chancellor, the defendant made default, and the plaintiff took a decree nisi:—Held, that it was not necessary to serve a new subpœna to hear judg-nent, and that the decree nisi was strictly regular. Jackson v. Bourne, 4 Russ. 484.

(R) DECREES.

Where, on the hearing of the cause, the suit is decreed to be dismissed, it has been the practice in the Court of Exchequer for the decree containing the pleadings to be drawn at full length, whilst, in Chancery, a short order of dismissal is usually drawn up. Memorandum: the practice proposed to be altered for the future. Boson v. Williams, 3 Y. & J. 398.

The Court will, upon motion, with the consent of all parties, vary a decree, so as to rectify an accidental omission. Collins v. Shirley, 9 Law J. Chanc. 111.

On appeal, the decree was varied by directing an issue to try whether the circumstances relied upon to prove the notice took place prior to a stated day, after which notice would be immaterial. Earle v. Pichin, 1 Russ. & M. 547.

At the hearing on further directions, the decree is absolute in the first instance against a defendant making default. Maw v. Russell, 8 Law J. Chanc. 23.

On the death of a defendant, recently before a decree pronounced, when his death was unknown—the suit being revived, the Court refused to make the same decree against his representatives on petition. Wright v. Barnes, 9 Law J. Chanc. 172.

A party permitted to intervene as a defendant in a cause after it had been heard on further directions, he having been out of the jurisdiction during the previous proceedings, and now submitting to be bound by them. White v. Hall, 1 Russ. & M. 332.

A caveat tendered at the proper office, after a decree has been delivered to the secretary to be inrolled, and to be forwarded to the Lord Chancellor in order to be signed, comes too late to prevent the effect of inrolment, although, in point of fact, the signature was not adhibited till after the caveat was tendered.

The inrolment of a decree will not be vacated merely on the ground of dispatch used by the party inrolling, or of surprise upon the opposite party, where no fraud or deception has been practised.

A party is not bound to communicate to his adversary his intention to inrol the decree, because the latter informs him of his intention to appeal against it. Barnes v. Wilson, Tarleton v. Dyer, 1 Russ. & M. 486.

(S) REHEARINGS.

Petition of rehearing dismissed, because it suggested, as the grounds of rehearing, facts not alleged in the pleadings. Nevinson v. Stables, 4 Russ. 210.

(T) REFERENCES.

[Fereday v. Wightwick, 4 Russ. 114, Dig. Law J. 422.]

Where the question in the cause turned upon the fact of notice of a settlement, and the names of the witnesses and the particular facts of notice were not stated in the bill, so that the defendant had no opportunity to meet their testimony, an inquiry as to the fact of notice was directed before the Master. Earle v. Pickin, 1 Russ. & M. 54.

Semble—An order of reference to the Master, on a petition presented under Lord Eldon's Act, ought not to be made, except on a hearing in court, and on the appearance of counsel upon the petition. Hinde v. Metcalfe, 3 Russ. 416.

(b) Impertinence and Scandal.

A petition must be referred for impertinence, although the respondent, on a former occasion, succeeded in a formal objection to it. Ex parte Cunningham, 7 Law J. Chanc. 139.

The Court will decide, in the first instance, on alleged impertinence in affidavits sworn in bankruptcy, where the impertinence is of such a kind that there would be nothing gained, in point of convenience, by directing a reference to the Master. Ex parte Palmer, 4 Russ. 188.

Where a defendant has obtained an order for time to answer, and then files exceptions to the plaintiff's bill for scandal and impertinence as to some part, and as to the other part for impertinence alone—the Court will permit the reference as to scandal and impertinence jointly, but not as to impertinence alone. Mitford v. Mitford, 9 Law J. Chanc. 29.

By the practice of the Court, the plaintiff is at liberty to refer an answer for impertinence at any time before replication. But, semble, that, for the future, this is not to be understood as a general rule. Thomas v. Jones, 3 Y. & J. 184.

(c) Proceedings.

Whether the Court will, under special circumstances, direct witnesses, examined in the cause, to be examined to the same points before the Master—quære. Earle v. Pickin, 1 Russ. & M. 547.

(U) EXCEPTIONS.

If the time for referring a further answer for insufficiency upon the old exceptions under the sixth order has expired, it cannot afterwards be revived by referring the answer for impertinence.

Semble—it is too late to except to an answer for impertinence, when the time has expired, after which, according to the new orders, the answer is to be deemed sufficient. Jeffray v. M'Cube, 1 Russ. & M. 739.

If upon a question of title, the Master is satisfied with the evidence produced before him, but, upon the hearing of an exception to the report, the Court thinks the evidence not sufficient, the Court, upon the application of the vendor, will refer it back to the Master to review his report, in order to give the vendor an opportunity of producing further evidence. Andrew v. Andrew, 3 Sim. 390.

An exception to a report in favour of the title having been on argument allowed, leave was given to the plaintiff, some time afterwards, to go again before the Master for the purpose of bringing evidence to shew that the objection, which the Court had sustained, was in the circumstances immaterial. Egerton v. Jones, 1 Russ. & M. 694.

Where a Master reported that a bond was voluntary, and a party excepted, on the ground that the Master ought to have reported that the bond was partly for valuable consideration and partly voluntary, and the party, at the argument on the exception, offered to withdraw it, and to have the bond considered as merely voluntary, as reported by the Master, his Honour the Master of the Rolls was of opinion that the party was bound by the exception to support the bond as partly for valuable consideration, and refused to allow the exception to be withdrawn. Nicol v. Vaughan, 2 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 480.

Motion for leave to except to the Master's certificate of the taxation of costs refused. The proper course is, to petition that the Master may review his taxation. Boton v. Williams, 3 Y. & J. 378.

(V) STAYING PROCEEDINGS.

The Court will stay proceedings in an action against its officers, where the question is, how far they have conducted themselves with propriety in the execution of its orders. Ex parte Clarke, 1 Russ. & M. 563.

3. IN THE ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

Where the office of the Judge is promoted, the whole transaction should be fairly stated in the articles, in order, first, that the Judge may consider whether he ought to allow his office to be promoted, and, secondly, that the defendant may be enabled without injustice to himself to give an affirmative issue. Lee v. Matthews, 3 Hag. Ec. 174.

A proxy from a husband in India to institute proceedings in the Court of Exeter, against his wife for adultery:—Held, the wife having changed her residence before the commencement of the suit, into another diocese, that the Court may proceed under letters of request from that latter diocese, without a new proxy from the husband. Hawkes v. Hawkes, 1 Hag. Ec. 194.

Appearance waives any objection so far as respects the formalities of the proceedings.

Where, on the death of the archdeacon, the proceedings in a criminal suit were moved after the execution of a proxy, but before appearance by the defendant, either in person or by proxy, from the Archdiaconal to the Episcopal Court, and there went on to sentence, the original proctor appearing for him, but without a new proxy: on appeal, the appellant having been cognizant, de facto, of the proceedings of the suit, and though his proctor in the court of appeal, having recognized (by some of the formal documents in the cause) that the proctor in the court below was his lawful proctor—the proceedings are valid, nor is it a fatal objection, that the articles were exhibited in the name of the surrogate, and not of the Judge.

Semble that if no proxy at all were given, the proceedings would not be null, unless it were proved that no authority was given, de facto, to the proctor, and that the principal was ignorant of them. The proxy is only essential to secure the adverse party and to protect the proctor.

Semble Whether the Archidiaconal and Episcopal Courts being concurrent, it is any irregularity, even in form, on the death of the Archdeacon, to invoke the causes in his Court into the Episcopal Court.

Usages of different dioceses, in respect to the exercise of jurisdiction, if not contrary to the general policy of law and to justice, may be said to constitute the law of the particular diocese in that respect. Sheele v. Steele, 1 Hag. Ec. 165—189.

A party not giving in his answers on the day of the return of the decree personally served, will be pronounced contumacious—sindilitèr, a witness not appearing to a compulsory. Wylie v. Metz, 1 Hag. Ec. 33.

After publication, on an affidavit that the depositions had not been seen, and that the matter was noviter perventa, exhibits may be pleaded. Jones v. Jones, 1 Hag. Ec. 254.

In suits for adultery the party is not limited to the contents of the libel, but may plead fresh charges, and obtain a sentence on facts not existing at the commencement of the suit; but publication is a bar to further pleadings as of right.

Before a party can plead after publication, he must shew (generally by affidavit) that the facts came to his knowledge since his former plea: the Court then, in its discretion, will admit a plea of such facts. Middleton v. Middleton, 2 Hag. Ec. Sup. 134.

The Court will not admit an exceptive plea, that an indictment of witnesses for perjury in their depositions in the cause pending has been preferred, and a true bill found, nor delay the hearing till the indictment is tried. Maclean v. Maclean, 2 Hag. Ec. 601.

Exceptive allegations, after publication, are stricti juris; and their object being the credit of the witness—not the proof of the matters in issue in the principal cause—1st, Facts, which might have been pleaded in contradiction to the plea before publication, cannot be pleaded in contradiction to a witness: 2ndly, There must be a contradiction to the depositions clear and capable of proof, and shewing that the witness has deposed falsely and corruptly: 3rdly, The matter must arise out of the evidence (not out of the general character) of the witness,—allegation rejected. Burgoyne v. Free, 2 Hag. Ec. 480.

After publication the evidence of an attesting witness may be excepted to by the party who produces him. Mynn v. Robinson, 2 Hag. Ec. 169.

The admission of an allegation, responsive to an exceptive allegation, reserved to the final hearing, the Court being of opinion that part, if otherwise admissible, was not material, and that the remainder, probably, would not in the event be of sufficient importance to delay the case. Mynn v. Robinson, 2 Hag. Ec. 175.

The Court will not hear, on an ex parte motion and on affidavits, a case where offences are charged and punishment prayed. Peddle v. Evans, 1 Hag. Ec. 690.

Length of time, though it may not amount to a bar to a criminal suit, will induce the Court to admit general explanation, instead of requiring a direct contradiction or explanation of each specific fact.

If, in a criminal suit, the charges are clearly proved, unaccompanied by circumstances of reasonable excuse or explanation, the Court, presuming the promoter acts from a sense of duty, will not inquire into his motives:—Aliter, if the misconduct be not proved; or, even if proved, be sufficiently accounted for. Bennet v. Bonaker, 3 Hag. Ec. 26—28.

In criminal suits the Court will sometimes inquire into the motives of the promoter, but it will presume proper motives unless there be strong proof to the contrary. Jarman v. Wise, 3 Hag. Ec. 362.

If due diligence has been used, the Court will grant an extension of the term probatory, in order that material witnesses may be examined. Countess of Portsmouth v. Earl of Portsmouth, 1 Hag. Ec. 1.

The Court will not depart from its regular practice, by directing a list of witnesses to be delivered, some time anterior to their production, to the other party, residing voluntarily in France. Morse v. Morse, 2 Hag. Ec. 609.

The Court, before granting a prayer to rescind the conclusion, in order to the admission of an allegation, requires an affidavit setting forth facts material as well as "noviter perventa;" and it generally also requires that the allegation pleading those facts shall be tendered at the time of making the prayer. Smith v. Blake, 1 Hag. Ec. 88.

In a suit for separation, by reason of the wife's adultery, the conclusion of the cause may be rescinded generally, if the Court is of opinion, after the argument, that adultery is not sufficiently proved. Donnellan v. Donnellan, 2 Hag. Ec. Sup. 144.

In a testamentary cause, the Court, after hearing the arguments and delivering its opinion of the insufficiency of the evidence, may rescind the conclusion, in order that the identity of the alleged testator may be pleaded and proved. Cargill v. Spence, 2 Hag. Ec. Sup. 146.

In a suit for seaman's wages, the Judge may properly rescind the conclusion of the cause for the admission of further evidence. Henley v. Morrison, 2 Hag Ec. Sup. 149.

In a defamation suit, the defendant having been enjoined penance, and condemned in costs, and, to an appeal from his dismissal without such penance being duly performed, having given an affirmative issue, the Court directed the penance to be performed as originally decreed, and condemned the defendant in further costs.

Though an affirmative issue to a libel of appeal from a definitive sentence be given, the process must be transmitted where the court of appeal has to take any step requiring a knowledge of proceedings, or of the sentence of the court below. Courtail v. Homfray, 2 Hag. Ec. 1—3.

On an appeal from a definitive sentence, the Court rejected an allegation pleading facts not shewn to be noviter ad notitiam perventa. Fletcher v. Le Breton, 3 Hag. Ec. 365.

Deeds should not be annexed to an allegation, but be deposited in the registry, and the material parts only recited in the plea. Mynn v. Robinson, 1 Hag. Ec. 69.

Original papers brought into the registry by A, in a suit between A and B as to the will of C, cannot be delivered out to D on an affidavit of D's attorney, that D, as heir-at-law of C, was in possession of certain premises, and that these papers were muniments of title thereto. In the goods of George Hulme, 2 Hag. Ec. 82.

4. IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

[See PARTIES TO SUITS.]

The rules of English law are matters of evidence in Scotch courts; but the House of Lords, sitting as a court of appeal from the decision of a Scotch court, is equally an English as a Scotch court, and will act on its own knowledge of English law, and not be bound by the report of that law made by English lawyers to the Scotch courts. Douglas v. Brown, 2 Dow. & Cl. 171.

Semble—That the Lords, although a court of appeal, may, and do, look at evidence which has been rejected below, to see whether, if admitted, it ought to have made any difference in the decree, and that although they should be of opinion that it should have been received below; yet, if they should at the same time be of opinion that, if received, it ought to have made no difference in the decree, they will not remit. Maccabe v. Hussey, 2 Dow. & Cl. 440.

5. IN CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS.

[In all trials for felonies upon record during the sittings or assizes, with certain exceptions, judgments to be pronounced, 1 Will. 4. c. 70. s. 9, 8 Law J. Stat. 157.]

The Court will direct money found upon a prisoner to be restored to him before trial, if it appear, by the depositions, that it is in no way material to the charge on which he is to be tried. Rex v. Barnett, 3 C. & P. 600. [Park]

If the trial of an indictment for felony is postponed, at the instance of the prisoner, on account of the illness of a witness, the prisoner is never required to pay the costs of the prosecutor.

Where the trial of a case for felony is postponed, the Court will not make any order for the expenses till after the trial has actually taken place. Rex v. Hunter, 3 C. & P. 591. [Park]

If the trial of a prisoner indicted for felony be postponed, on the ground of the absence of the prosecutor, who is a material witness for the prosecution, the prisoner will not be allowed his costs, but the Judge will discharge him on his own recognizance. Rex v. Crowe, 4 C. & P. 251. [Littledale]

In opening a case of felony the counsel for the prosecution ought not to state any particular expressions supposed to have been used by the prisoner, nor the precise words of any confession, but he may state the general effect of what the prisoner said. Rex v. Swatkins, 4 C. & P. 548. [Patteson]

A counsel for the prosecution on opening a case of felony, has, in strictness, a right to state, in his own way, a conversation supposed to have passed between the prisoner and a witness whom he intends to call; but, in correct practice, the statement ought to be confined to the general effect of the conversation.

A person indicted with others for an offence, but against whom the bill has been thrown out, may, if he be in custody at the time of the trial of the others, be placed at the bar to be identified as one who was in their company. Rex v. Deering, 5 C. & P. 165. [Garrow]

If counsel for the prosecution call a witness, whose name is on the back of the indictment, but do not examine him, and such witness being examined by the prisoner's counsel, any question put by the prosecutor's counsel after this must be considered as a re-examination, and therefore the prosecutor's counsel cannot ask anything that does not arise out of the previous examination by the prisoner's counsel. Rex v. Beezley, 4 C. & P. 220. [Littledale]

If a prisoner is brought before a magistrate his statement ought not to be taken till the evidence against him is gone through, and he should be then asked if he has anything to say in answer to the charge. Rex v. Fagg, 4 C. & P. 566. [Garrow]

If a prisoner, in a confession made before a coroner, which is taken down in writing, mention the names of two other persons who are also charged with the same offence, the confession, when read in evidence, must be read with these names in it, just as it is, and the officer of the Court must not say "another person," and "a third person," instead of reading the names. Rex v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221. [Littledale]

If a letter, written by one of several prisoners, be read in evidence, and in this letter the names of the other prisoners be mentioned, these names must not be omitted in the reading of the letter, but the Judge will tell the jury to pay no attention to the letter, except so far as it affects the writer. Rex v. Fletcher, 4 C. & P. 250. [Littledale]

If a witness give evidence of a conversation with the prisoner, in which that prisoner says something implicating another prisoner, the witness, in giving his evidence, must not omit the name of such other prisoner, and say, "another person," but must give the conversation exactly as it occurred, and the Judge will tell the jury that is not evidence against such other prisoner. Rex v. Hearne, 4 C. & P. 215. [Littledale]

When the Attorney General or King's counsel appears officially as such, to conduct a prosecution on any indictment for misdemeanour, he is entitled to reply, though the defendant calls no witnesses. Rex v. Marsden, 1 M. & M. 439. [Tenterden]

PREROGATIVE.

The Crown may forbid the issuing of a writ of Nisi Prius, in any action in which the King has an interest. Rowe v. Brenton, 8 B. & C. 737, s. c. 3 M. & R. 133.

PRESCRIPTION.

[See WATER and WATERCOURSE.]

PRINCIPAL AND ACCESSARY.

On an indictment against principals and accessaries, the case against the principal was proved by the testimony of an accomplice, who was confirmed as to the accessaries, but not as to the principals; the jury were directed to acquit the prisoners. Rex v. Wells, 1 M. & M. 326. [Littledale]

(A) PRINCIPAL.

If an agent, employed to purchase an estate, becomes the purchaser for himself, he is to be considered as a trustee for his principal. Lees v. Nuttall, 1 Russ. & M. 53, s. c. 1 Tam. 282.

If an agent, employed to sell stock, becomes himself the purchaser of it at the price of the day, and does not at the time communicate to his principal that he is the purchaser, the transaction will not be permitted to stand. An agent, who was also contractor for the Prussian loan, being directed by his principal to buy Prussian bonds, represents that the purchase had been made; advances money to his principal on a deposit of the bonds, and afterwards, the principal having directed them to be sold, gives him credit for the amount at the price of the day: in fact, however, no specific bonds had been selected or were appropriated as the specific bonds belonging to the principal:—Held, that the transaction cannot stand. Brookman v. Rothschild, 7 Law J. Chanc. 162.

Where a factor sells goods as his own, and fails, the purchaser may set off a debt owing to him from the factor, in an action at the suit of the principal. George v. Claggett, Peas. A.C. 131. [Kenyon]

A broker bought goods for a party unknown to the seller. The seller gave the broker a document, which enabled the broker to mislead his principal into the belief that the goods were bought under a contract different from that under which they really were. The principal paid the broker for the goods according to the contract represented by him:—Held, that as the seller had enabled the broker to practise the deception, he could not afterwards resort for payment to the seller.

If a broker state to his principal, the buyer, a different contract from that under which the broker bought, and the principal has, bonâ fide, adopted the contract stated by the broker, semble that the seller cannot afterwards call upon the principal, because the seller must sue upon the contract under which the goods were sold. Horsfall v. Fountleroy, 8 Law J. K.B. 259, s. c. 10 B. & C. 755.

(b) Liabilities.

An agent acting for A, and also for B, in obtaining goods on an ostensible purchase for A, to deposit them with B, as security for A's debt—was held so to implicate B as his principal, as to prevent his acquiring any property in the goods thus fraudulently obtained, though B personally was innocent. The questions of agency and of fraud were properly left to the jury. Irving v. Motley, 9 Law J. C.P. 161, s. c. 7 Bing. 543, s. c. 5 M. & P. 380.

At the time of making a contract of sale, the party buying the goods represented that he was buying them on account of persons resident in Scotland, but did not mention their names, and the seller did not inquire who they were, but afterwards debited the party who purchased the goods:—Held, that the seller might afterwards sue the principals for the price. Thomson v. Davenport, 9 B. & C. 78, s. c. 4 M. & R. 110.

(B) AGENT.

A traveller who receives orders for goods from employer's customer in the country, is authoed to receive payment for them in money, but not other goods. Howard v. Chapman, 4 C. & P. 8. [Tindal]

Disputes existing between A and his solicitor, ceiver, and confidential agent B, which involved g and intricate matters of account, an authority s given by A to a third person to settle any acunts in which he, A, had an interest, and to comomise any claims which he might have; such an thority will not empower that third person to ake an agreement, without the production or amination of any account, that a gross sum shall paid to B in lieu of all his demands on A. Jens v. Gould, 3 Russ. 385.

A merchant, being abroad, empowers certain pers in this country to receive monies, adjust claims, d do some other acts. Money being wanted by s firm here, of which he was a partner, these atnies deposit the deeds with the Hope Insurance mpany to secure 12,000*l.*, and covenant that he all execute the mortgage; this 12,000*l.* was also cured by the bonds of sureties in sums correonding to the shares of the partners. The power attorney was not a sufficient authority; but the rchant, on his return to the country, having writ a letter to the Hope Insurance Company, reesting the loan of 6,000*l.*, "to be secured on his sex property, which you now hold, in addition the 12,000*l.* already advanced;" and professing s readiness to execute the mortgage deed:—Held, at this was a confirmation of the security. Some the parties having paid the amount of the sums cured by them:—Held, that they had a lien on e property. One of these sureties being a partner: Held, that the sum paid by him was subjected to e partnership accounts. Munnings v. Bury, 1 m. 147.

East India Company's warrants are not negotile instruments, within the 6 Geo. 4. c. 94. s. 2, as ey pass by delivery, and not by indorsement.

Where defendants, receiving a pledge from a facr for an antecedent debt, sell it, they cannot under Geo. 4. c. 94. s. 3. hold the proceeds against the al owner, but are liable to him in trover; but in timating the damages they are entitled to credit for e balance, if any, due from the owner to the factor. ylor v. Trueman, 1 M. & M. 453. [Tenterden]

A party receiving East India warrants from a ctor, in pledge for monies advanced to him, canot retain them under 6 Geo. 4. c. 94, against the e owner, if from the circumstances he must, as a asonable man, have known them not to belong to e factor; although no direct communication of that ct is made to him. Evans v. Trueman, 2 M. & M. ). [Tenterden]

A wharfinger having received flour in that capaty, and without any authority to sell, disposed of to a purchaser, who had no notice of the want of thority; the wharfinger was in the habit of doing siness as a flour factor:—Held, nevertheless, that e act 6 Geo. 4. c. 94. s. 4, which protects purases innocently and in the ordinary course of busies, from agents intrusted with goods, did not pply to this case, the wharfinger not being an ent within the meaning of the statute. Monk v. Whittenbury, 2 B. & Ad. 484, s. c. 2 M. & M. 81.

Whether a factor has a right to pledge the goods of his principal, under the 6 Geo. 4. c. 94. s. 5, depends upon the question whether, upon the balance of all accounts between them, the principal is indebted to the factor. Accordingly, a factor, by the desire of his principal, kept separate accounts of sales; in one set of which the principal was solely, and in the other but partly, interested. The factor made a pledge of goods consigned to him on the latter set of goods, for the purpose of meeting a draft drawn by his principal against that account. At the time of the pledge the factor, if the general account were taken, was indebted to his principal in a larger sum than it was necessary to raise by the pledge. If the accounts were taken separately, the principal was indebted to the factor upon the account on which the draft was drawn, and to which account the goods pledged belonged:—Held, that the factor, under those circumstances, had no right to pledge; and that the person to whom they were pledged could not retain them against the principal.

Where the principal in such a case omitted for some time to make any demand, or to make any communication to the person who received the pledge:—Held, that such omission could not be considered as an affirmance of the act of the factor, unless it appeared that the delay had caused an alteration in the situation of the parties—in that of the principal for the better, or in that of the pledgee for the worse. Robertson v. Kensington, 8 Law J. K.B. 183.

(b) Rights.

If an agent effect an illegal contract, he cannot recover from his principal the sum he has paid in effecting it, although he proves an express promise by the principal to pay him. Bailey v. Rawlins, 7 Law J. K.B. 208.

(c) Liabilities.

An agent who acts on the best advice he is able to get, in the affairs of his principal, is not liable to an action for damages arising from that act. Miles v. Bernard, Pea. A.C. 61. [Kenyon]

In answer to an action for goods sold and delivered, it is not enough for a defendant to prove that he was agent for another person, without shewing that the plaintiff knew, at the time of the sale, that he was so; but it is too narrow a direction to the jury to tell them, that unless the agency was disclosed at the time of the purchase, the purchaser must be taken to be the principal: the proper way of leaving the question being, whether the plaintiff knew at the time of the contract that the purchase was made by defendant merely as agent. Seaber v. Hawkes, 9 Law J. C.P. 217.

A law agent employed to prepare an heritable bond, states the manner of holding in this way: the grantor is taken bound "to infeft and seise the said Henry Wardrob and his foresaids, on our own expenses, in the lands and others above disponed, to be holden from me, of and under my immediate lawful superiors thereof, in the same manner as I hold the same myself, and for payment of the same feu duties as I pay, or am bound to pay therefore." The agent neglects to procure confirmation from the superior, in consequence of which his employer, the grantee, loses his money:—Held, by the House of Lords, affirming a judgment of the Court of Session, that this was a public holding, and invalid for want of confirmation; and that the agent, having chosen to depart from the usual practice of introducing the double manner of holding, and having neglected to procure confirmation, was bound to make good the loss. Secus, if it had been a mistake in a nice and difficult point of law. Stevenson v. Rowand, 2 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 104.

A large demand established after a lapse of more than twenty years, against the estate of an accounting party, though no evidence could be given as to the particulars of the demand. Purvis v. Rankin, 7 Law J. Chanc. 141.

By the act 59 Geo. 3. c. 3. navy agents are entitled to make the usual charge for passing accounts before that act, and are also entitled to charge commission on the full amount of pay, without being limited by the money actually passing through their hands. The defendant having received 450*l.* at 2½*l.* per cent. retained premium on 18,000*l.* in 1814, without bringing it to account for many years, alleging that it awaited the final adjustment of average: referred to the Master, to inquire whether he was entitled so to retain it, according to the usage and custom of merchants. Drury v. Atkins, 1 Tam. 75.

Where a person placed himself under the advice of a dealer in English and foreign funds, and the latter advised purchases and sales of stock, and it afterwards appeared that these purchases and sales were merely nominal transfers and re-transfers of the dealer's own stock, the difference being settled in account; it was held, that the court of equity rightly interfered to compel an account between the parties, and to set aside the transactions that had taken place, on the ground that the dealer stood in a situation of advantage, which equity will not allow to an agent in dealing with his principal. Rothschild v. Brookman, 7 Law J. Chanc. 162, s. c. 2 Dow. & Cl. 188.

Where notice is given by a party to his agent in a particular adventure, that another person is jointly interested with him in the adventure, this primâ facie imposes upon the agent the necessity of accounting with such other person for his share of the adventure.

But this obligation ceases to exist, if the transactions shew that it was the intention of such other person, and of the party originally interested in the adventure, that the agent should account solely with the latter. Hillerk v. Greg, 4 Russ. 285.

(D) Evidence.

If a person, on being applied to on a particular subject, writes an answer, mentioning another person, and saying on one occasion, "He is in possession of my sentiments," and on another, "I have written to him, and I refer you to him thereon;" such letters are sufficient to constitute the party referred to agent in the business; and what he said at a meeting on the subject, may be given in evidence against the principal. Hood v. Reeve, 3 C. & P. 532. [Best]

Whether, in an action against a broker by his principal, for charging an increased price in addition to his commission, it is competent to the broker to shew that in some of the transactions he acted as a principal, it being contrary to the duty and oath of a broker so to act—quære.

To prove the averment of actual payment by the principal of the overcharges, it is sufficient to shew a running unsettled account between the parties, by which it appears, that, as far as the particular transactions in question are concerned, the principal has paid more than the amount of the overcharges, though on the whole account, continuing to a period long subsequent, the balance is in favour of the broker to more than their amount also. Pastor v. Bevan, 3 C. & P. 536. [Best]

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

[See Bond, Guarantie, and Witness.]

Where a bond is given by a person, as surety for the fidelity of a collecting clerk, and there is no express provision enabling the surety to determine it, whether he can by notice, withdraw the security—quære.

But if a surety in such a case have a power to determine it, he must give a reasonable notice, in point of time, to the employer, so that he may, without inconvenience, provide another person to collect for him. Calvert v. Gordon, 7 Law J. K.B. 77, s. c. 3 M. & R. 124.

B being hired as a clerk to A & Co., but not for any definite period, C and D joined with him in a bond to secure his duly accounting for his assets; C died, and his executrix gave a written notice to A & Co. that she would no longer remain surety; A & Co. communicated this notice to B, and required from him the bond of another surety; D died, and also the new surety; and four years and a half after the death of C, B died, when deficiencies were found in his accounts, subsequent to the notice:—Held, that the executrix of C had no equity to restrain A & Co. from proceeding at law on the bond. Gordon v. Calvert, 4 Russ. 581, s. c. 2 Sim. 253.

The defendant joined in a lease, as surety for the performance of the covenants by the lessee. The lessee became bankrupt, and delivered up the lease to the lessor, under the 75th section of the 6 Geo. 4. c. 16:—Held, that although the lessee was thereby personally discharged of his liability to the performance of the covenant, from the date of the commission, the term was not absolutely extinguished from that period; but that the surety remained liable for breaches occurring prior to the actual delivery up of the lease by the bankrupt to the lessor. Tuck v. Fisher, 8 Law J. C.P. 10, s. c. 6 Bing. 371, s. c. 3 M. & P. 715.

A surety is not discharged by the creditor's neglecting to sue, or giving time to the principal debtor, even though the principal should in the interim become bankrupt. Goring v. Edmonds, 7 Law J. C.P. 233, s. c. 6 Bing. 94, s. c. 3 M. & P. 259.

A surety for part of a debt is not entitled to the benefit of a security given by the debtor to the creditor, at a different time, for another part of the debt. Wade v. Coops, 2 Sim. 154.

A surety who defends an action brought for money deficient in the accounts of his principal, cannot claim contribution from his co-surety for the costs of the action, unless authorised by him to defend.

The surety is bound to apply money recovered from the principal to the damages. Knight v. Hughes, 6 M. & M. s. c. 3 C. & P. 467. [Tenterden]

A and B were sureties for C, a collector of taxes, who became a defaulter; the obligees sued A and recovered:—Held, that in an action for contribution, brought by A against B, A could only recover half the amount of the verdict against him, and that he could not recover from B either the half of the taxed costs of the obligees, or half of his own costs of defending the action brought by the obligees:—Held also, that if A, after the verdict in the action against him on the bond, obtain a sum of money from C, he must take that in reduction of the amount of the verdict, and cannot apply it either to pay his own costs, or the taxed costs of the obligees. Knight v. Hughes, 3 C. & P. 467, s. c. 1 M. & M. 147. [Tenterden]

An entry made by a deceased person, in a book kept by him for his own convenience only, wherein he appeared to charge himself with the receipt of money, which it was his duty to receive and pay over:—Held, to be evidence, in an action against one who was his surety for paying over, that the money had been so received by the deceased.

In an action against the surety of a tax collector—Held, that one who had paid taxes to the collector was not a competent witness to prove such payment, on the ground that he would be liable to contribute to a reassessment in case of there being an ultimate deficiency. Middleton v. Melton, 8 Law J. K.B. 143, s. c. 10 B. & C. 317.

PRINTER.

[See LIBEL.]

PRISON.

[See PRISONER.]

PRISONER.

[See INSOLVENT DEBTOR.]

(A) PRIVILEGES.
(B) ALLOWANCE.
(C) RENEWAL.
(D) DISCHARGE.
(a) In general.
(b) Under the Lords' Act, and 48 Geo. 3. c. 123.

(A) PRIVILEGES.

A defendant who is in the custody of the marshal may be brought up by habeas corpus, and re-committed, charged with a writ de contumace capiendo directed to the sheriff of Surrey. Such a writ does not deprive the defendant of the benefit of the rules. Baillie's case, 7 Law J. K.B. 164.

(B) ALLOWANCE.

The turnkey of the prison is the agent of the defendant for the purpose of receiving the weekly allowance under the Lords' Act; and if a payment be duly made to and accepted by him, the Court will not afterwards entertain the question whether the payment was made in good or bad money. Gainsford v. Marshall, 8 Law J. K.B. 108, s. c. 10 B. & C. 224, s. c. 5 M. & R. 45.

(C) REMOVAL.

Whether a prisoner charged in execution, in the prison of the court of a county palatine, upon a judgment obtained in that court, can be removed by habeas corpus, to be charged with a declaration in an action in either of the courts at Westminster—quære. But where the latter court are satisfied that such a removal has been effected by collusion with the prisoner, in order to change his custody, and that there is, substantially, no action depending in their own court, they will remand the prisoner to his former custody. In the matter of Sutton, 8 Law J. K.B. 7.

Where a defendant is in custody in the county of A, upon an attachment issuing out of the Court of Exchequer, he may be removed to the county of B to take his trial upon an indictment found in the latter county. Re Wetten, 1 C. & J. 459, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 385.

(D.) DISCHARGE.

The Court refused to discharge the defendant out of custody, on the ground that he had before been irregularly taken (under colour of a pretended criminal charge) on a capias sued out on the same judgment, and discharged from that execution on account of the irregularity of the proceeding—the first execution being a nullity. Mackie v. Warren, 7 Law J. C.P. 59, s. c. 5 Bing. 176, s. c. 2 M. & P. 279.

Where a party against whom a true bill for perjury had been found, and a warrant for her apprehension granted, was apprehended abroad and brought here in custody, and committed to prison for want of bail; the Court refused to discharge her on the ground that she had been improperly apprehended in the foreign country. Ex parte Scott, 9 B. & C. 446, s. c. 4 M. & R. 361.

(b) Under the Lords' Act, and 48 Geo. 3. c. 123.

Where a prisoner is brought before a Judge sitting in the Bail Court, by a special rule of the Court of King's Bench, after the time limited by the Lords' Act, to be discharged under that act, it is not competent for the opposing party to inquire into the reason of the application having been delayed: an inquiry of this nature, and an objection founded upon it, must be made by motion for a rule to set aside the special rule for bringing up the prisoner. In re Chalmers, 8 Law J. K.B. 9.

A creditor, at whose instance an indictment has been preferred, and found against his debtor for not delivering in an account, and making an assignment of his property, pursuant to the provisions of the compulsory clauses of the Lords' Act (32 Geo. 2. c. 28. s. 16 & 17,) which indictment the debtor has removed by certiorari into the King's Bench, cannot again bring such debtor before the Court, under a new notice for the same purpose, until the indictment has been disposed of. In re Bayley, 8 Law J. K.B. 13, s. c. 9 B. & C. 691, s. c. 4 M. & R. 603.

A motion was made to bring up, under the compulsory clauses of the Lords' Act, a prisoner charged in execution for a debt under 300*l.* On the day before his appearance in court, he was a second time charged in execution for a debt of 500*l.*:—Held, that the case was within the statute; and as more than sixty days would have elapsed before the next term, when he could be brought up again, the Court remanded him generally, and directed that he should be brought up in the next term, if necessary. Womersley v. Bousfield, 8 Law J. C.P. 286, s. c. 6 Bing. 801, s. c. 4 M. & P. 538.

The Court has no power to interfere in the case of a prisoner brought up at the assizes under the Lords' Act and remanded by the Judge. Briggs v. Sharpe, 8 Law J. C.P. 208, s. c. 6 Bing. 517, s. c. 4 M. & P. 269.

The circumstance of a defendant, whose time has expired for delivering in a schedule, and making an assignment of his property, under the compulsory clauses of the Lords' Act, having obtained a rule in the Court for the relief of Insolvent Debtors, to petition for his discharge as an insolvent will not enable the Court of King's Bench to suspend proceedings by the creditor, or to grant an extended time to draw up the schedule, and make the assignment required. Early v. Levy, 8 Law J. K.B. 13, s. c. 9 B. & C. 928, s. c. 4 M. & R. 687.

A prisoner, having applied for the benefit of the Insolvent Act, was remanded for nine months; and it was ordered by the Insolvent Court, that at the expiration of that time he should be discharged. He afterwards applied to the Court of King's Bench for relief under the Lords' Act; and to prevent his discharge, the plaintiff paid him sixpences:—Held, that nevertheless he was entitled to be discharged at the expiration of the nine months prescribed by the Insolvent Court.

The order of the Insolvent Court for the discharge of a debtor, justifies the gaoler, although that Court may have proceeded without jurisdiction as to the fact of the debtor being within the walls of the prison at the time of filing his petition. Saffery v. Jones, 9 Law J. K.B. 285, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 598.

A prisoner in custody under a writ de contumace capiendo, is not entitled to be relieved under the 48 Geo. 3. c. 123. Ex parte Kaye, 9 Law J. K.B. 99, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 652.

Whether a plaintiff, who is in custody by reason of a judgment for costs, is entitled to the assistance of the 48 Geo. 3. c. 123—quære. Semble that he is not.

But if he is at all entitled, he cannot be discharged if the costs of the judgment exceed 20*l.* Tinmouth v. Taylor, 8 Law J. K.B. 104, s. c. 10 B. & C. 114, s. c. 5 M. & R. 44.

A defendant in ejectment for the nominal damages and the costs, which exceed 20*l.*, is not entitled to his discharge after a year's custody, under the 48 Geo. 3. c. 123. Doe v. Reynolds, 8 Law J. K.B. 226, s. c. 10 B. & C. 481.

PRIZE.

[Certain duties in matters of prize, transferred to the Treasurer of the Navy, 10 Geo. 4. c. 26, 7 Law J. Stat. 57.]

The sentence of a foreign Court of Admiralty, condemning a ship as lawful prize, is only conclusive in English courts, where its terms are free from ambiguity, and its premises reasonably warrant the condemnation. Otherwise, the sentence is only evidence of the condemnation itself, and not of its having taken place on sufficient grounds.

A voyage is not illegal by the circumstance that the ship's destination is a port which, according to the latest accounts, was under blockade, if it appear that no violation of it was intended. Dalgleish v. Hodson, 9 Law J. C.P. 138, s. c. 5 M. & P. 407, s. c. 7 Bing. 495.

The principles of joint capture in prize cases, apply to vessels associated in the capture of ships engaged in the slave trade; therefore, where the actual capture was made by one of two vessels associated for such purpose, the other, which had joined in the chace and rendered subsequent assistance, held entitled to share in the bounty for the slaves, and in the proceeds of the ship, stores, and cargo. Anna, 2 Hag. 31.

A vessel which had chased a slave ship into a situation from which she could not escape, and then (being herself forced by a leak to abandon the chace) informed the capturing vessel thereof, held not entitled as a joint captor. Orestes, 2 Hag. 58, n.

Booty taken in war belongs to the Crown.

A party has a right to assign his interest in booty or prize-money, though, at the time of such assignment, no grant of it had been made, and the assignment will be supported in a court of equity.

Prize-money is not in the nature of military pay. Alexander v. Duke of Wellington, 9 Law J. Chanc. 36.

The private adventure of a purser, in a Danish East Indiaman (the ship being condemned as droits of Admiralty at Calcutta), restored. Prince of Augustenburg, 2 Hag. 91.

PRIZE-FIGHT.

Persons who are present at a prize-fight, and who have gone thither for the purpose of seeing the persons strike each other, are all principals in the breach of the peace, and indictable for an assault, as well as the actual combatants; and it is not at all material which of the combatants struck the first blow. Rex v. Perkins, 4 C. & P. 537. [Patteson]

PROBATE.

[See WILL.]

PROCHEIN AMY.

The residuary legatee in trust, having renounced administration, cum testamento annexo, for the purpose of being examined as a witness, the Court, hesitatingly, but as a matter of necessity, appointed a next friend guardian ad litem in order to propound, on behalf of the minors, residuary legatees, the paper which their father opposed, but required the guardian to give security for costs. Copeland v. Rivers, 3 Hag. Ec. 279.

A person being an accounting party in the suit, removed from acting as the next friend of infant plaintiffs. Hopkinson v. Roe, 9 Law J. Chanc. 7.

The Court of Great Sessions ordered an infant ning by prochein amy, to pay costs, and this Court ranted an attachment against the prochein amy, for isobeying that order. Evans v. Davis, 1 C. & J. 460, c. 1 Tyrw. 345.

PRODUCTION AND INSPECTION OF DEEDS, BOOKS, AND PAPERS.

(A) IN GENERAL.
(B) OF A PRIVATE NATURE.
(C) PARISH BOOKS.
(D) CORPORATION BOOKS.

(A) IN GENERAL.

On a new trial being granted, one party is entitled to inspect and take copies of such deeds as may have been produced in evidence by the other at the first trial. Hewitt v. Pigott, 9 Law J. C.P. 120, s. c. Bing. 400, s. c. 5 M. & P. 252.

The sixtieth of the new orders extends to the production of books and papers unless orders or decrees made before the date of the new orders.

The Master is to exercise the discretion given him by the sixtieth order, to determine what books or papers shall be produced, though the order or decree, under which he is proceeding, requires the parties to produce, on oath, all books and papers. In re Llanrisant, 1 Russ. & M. 25, conf. 8 Law J. Chanc. 12.

A demand for papers must be made by one duly authorized to give a receipt for them. In re Dicas, 9 Law J. Chanc. 183.

A trustee, and one of several partners, were served with diligence as havers, to produce all papers and documents relating to the subject-matter of the cause. The partner had lost some of the papers before being served with the diligence, and the trustee had destroyed one of them after being served with diligence. Petitions were presented by the objectors, praying that the trustee might be censured and that his discharge might be disallowed; but the Court below dismissed the petitions, with all costs to be paid by the petitioners. This judgment was partly reversed by the House of Lords, and the cause remitted, with directions that the partner should not have his costs, and that the trustee should pay costs to the petitioners. Robertson v. Alexander, 2 D. & Cl. 312.

(B) OF A PRIVATE NATURE.

A defendant will not be ordered to produce papers containing confidential communications between him and his solicitor, or between his country solicitor and town solicitor, made in the relation of solicitor and client during the progress of the suit, or with reference to it, previous to its commencement. Hughes v. Biddulph, 4 Russ. 190.

A plaintiff is not entitled to the production of a letter, admitted by the defendant to be in his possession, but which, the defendant states, was written by him to his solicitor, and directed the solicitor to take the opinion of counsel upon the question in dispute between the parties. Vent v. Pacey, 4 Russ. 193.

An action at common law being brought in the Archbishop's name, by the administrator de bonis non, against the executors of the original administrator for the balance of the intestate's effects, the Court will direct the bond, given by the original administrator, to be attended with, on security being given to indemnify the Archbishop against costs. In the goods of Joseph Hall, 1 Hag. Ec. 139.

A plaintiff in a tithe suit is not entitled to a production of receipts for moduses and compositions, given to the defendants by the plaintiff and his predecessors, some of those receipts relating to tithes not sued for, and the others being evidence for the defendants and not for the plaintiff. Tomlinson v. Lymer, 2 Sim. 489.

Order that a plaintiff produce, for inspection, a book exhibited to commissioners for examination of witnesses in a tithe cause, moved for after publication, refused, with costs. Forester v. Helm, 13 Price, 790.

The plaintiffs and defendants mutually executed an agreement which was deposited in the hands of a trustee. Shortly afterwards the defendant improperly procured it from the trustee, and neglected to return it. The plaintiffs demanded it from the defendant about a fortnight after its execution, for the purpose of getting it stamped; but he refused to restore it. In an action for a breach of the agreement, the plaintiffs obtained a Judge's order, that the defendant should produce the original agreement, or a copy, which copy being read at the trial (if stamped), the defendant should be precluded from setting up the original. On motion to rescind this order, the defendant having sworn that the original was either lost or destroyed, but his attorney admitting that he had a copy—the Court confirmed that part of the order which related to the copy. Bousfield v. Godfrey, 7 Law J. C.P. 158, s. c. 5 Bing. 418, s. c. 2 M. & P. 771.

Declaration on an agreement to employ the plaintiff, and to take him into partnership at the end of a year—Pleas, the general issue, and no memorandum in writing—Replication, taking issue on the last plea:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to an inspection of the agreement. Blogg v. Kent, 8 Law J. C.P. 229, s. c. 6 Bing. 614, s. c. 4 M. & P. 433.

The Court refused to allow the defendants (late directors of a company) to inspect the books of the company, with a view to their defence to an action brought against them by the company for improperly conducting its affairs—the affidavits not stating the inspection to be necessary to their defence. Imperial Gas Company v. Clarke, 9 Law J. C.P. 28, s. c. 7 Bing. 95, s. c. 4 M. & P. 727.

A right of lien upon an instrument in the possession of a witness, (except in the case of an attorney or solicitor,) is not a good objection to the production of the instrument in evidence under a subpœna duces tecum. Hunter v. Leake, 7 Law J. K.B. 321.

An indictment for forgery being presented to the grand jury, a witness declined to produce certain deeds before them:—Held, that, if the deeds form a part of the evidence of the witness's title to his own estate, he is not compellable to produce them; but, that, if they do not, the grand jury may compel their production. Rex v. Hunter, 3 C. & P. 591. [Park]

Where a witness is served with a subpœna to produce deeds on the execution of a commission, it is not necessary that there should be a written interrogatory as to the fact of his having them in his possession, and if he then takes upon himself to refuse production, he does so at the peril of costs in the event of his failing to satisfy the Court of his right to withhold them. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 1 Russ. & M. 358.

(C) Parish Books.

In an action brought to try the validity of a parochial rate, the Court granted the plaintiff leave to inspect and make extracts from the parish books, without costs. Newell v. Simpkin, 8 Law J. C.P. 228, s. c. 6 Bing. 565, s. c. 4 M. & P. 394.

In a suit for subtraction of church-rate, the Court will not, at the prayer of the defendants, issue monition for the production of parish books, which are not shewn to apply immediately to the question at issue; and on the merits, the rate being pronounced for, the defendants condemned in costs. Goodall and Gray v. Whitmore and Fenn, 2 Hag. Ec. 369.

(D) Corporation Books.

A mandamus not permitted for the purpose of an inspection of the corporation books, by some of the corporation body, unless it be necessary with a view to some specific question or dispute actually depending.

Accordingly, a rule being obtained in general terms for an inspection of all the books, records, and papers of a company, by certain members, who suggested general misconduct, misapplication of the funds, undue election; and gave instances, none of which affected themselves personally; and no dispute appeared to be depending upon any of the matters alleged;—such rule was discharged with costs. Rex v. the Merchant Tailors' Company, 9 Law J. K.B. 146, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 115.

PROHIBITION.

Separate contracts between the same plaintiff and defendant, give the right of bringing separate (although concurrent) actions in the same court. The Court of King's Bench, therefore, will not interfere by prohibition with an inferior court, in such cases, on the ground of its being a splitting of actions. Dealey v. Clark, 9 Law J. K.B. 102.

The stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 44, entitled "An Act to prevent frivolous and vexatious suits in Ecclesiastical Courts," and reciting in the preamble "that it is expedient to limit the time for the commencement of certain suits in the Ecclesiastical Courts," enacts, (among other things,) "that no suit shall be commenced in any Ecclesiastical Court for fornication or incontinence, after the expiration of eight calendar months from the time when such offence shall have been committed."

Upon a libel in the Ecclesiastical Court against a clergyman, containing various articles charging fornication, &c.; and in the concluding article willing that the offender be duly and canonically punished and corrected according to the exigency of the law, &c., an objection taken to the jurisdiction, on the ground of the stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 44, was overruled in the Ecclesiastical Court: whereupon a writ of prohibition was obtained in the Court of King's Bench, and, upon declaration in prohibition, demurrer, and argument, it was held that the statute applied only to proceedings against fornicators, &c. whether laymen or clergymen, pro salute animæ: but that a proceeding in the Ecclesiastical Court, on the ground of fornication, against a clergyman for the purpose of deprivation, is not prohibited by the statute, and this judgment was affirmed on appeal.

Held, also, that the judgment of the Court of King's Bench being for a prohibition against proceeding on the ground of fornication, pro salute animæ, but granting a consultation so far as the case related to the proceeding for deprivation, the statute 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 11, which gives costs to the party who obtains the judgment in prohibition, did not apply, inasmuch as it was a qualified judgment, which, in substance, was for the defendant in the prohibition; and if it was to be considered as a casus omissus, there was no authority in the Court to give costs. Free v. Burgoyne, 2 Bligh, N.S. 65, s. c. 1 D. & Cl. A.C. 115.

Costs in prohibition not allowed to a plaintiff in prohibition, for any part of the proceedings prior to the rule to declare in prohibition; the defendants consenting before plea pleaded, that the prohibition should issue. Pewtress v. Harvey, 8 Law J. K.B. 375, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 151.

PUBLICAN.

[See Licence and Appropriation.]

If a person sell two sorts of spirits at the same time, to an amount above twenty shillings, he may recover the price, although the amount of each species of spirits be under twenty shillings. Owens v. Porter, 4 C. & P. 367. [Bosanquet]

QUARE IMPEDIT.

In quare impedit, to compel the defendant's appearance, the plaintiff sued out a summons, which being returned nihil, an attachment issued, reciting that the defendant had been summoned to appear on the morrow of All Souls; the attachment was also returned nihil, and a grand distress issued into Kent (where the action was brought), and returned (by the plaintiff's direction) nulla bona, and then a testatum grand distress issued into Middlesex (where the defendant resided), the sheriff being directed to levy thereon 40*s.*:—Held, that the whole process had been irregularly issued and executed; and therefore a judgment signed by the plaintiff for default of defendant's appearance, was set aside. Tyrell v. Jenner, 8 Law J. C.P. 57, s. c. 6 Bing. 283, s. c. 3 M. & P. 648.

In a quare impedit, the declaration stated that R R was seised of the advowson and died intestate; that the advowson descended to his four daughters, Mary the wife of T W, Jane the wife of W S, Prudence the wife of J A, and Grace the wife of Francis Isaac; and the church became vacant; that it belonged to T W and Mary his wife, in right of the aid Mary, to present; and that they accordingly resented: it was then averred that the said Francis saac and Grace his wife died so seised of the same ne-fourth part of the said Grace of and in the ad-owson, after whose death it came to Robert Isaac, on and heir of the said Grace:—Held, (on motion in arrest of judgment, on the ground that it was not lleged that Grace was seised of a fourth part be-ore her death, but merely that it descended to the our daughters of R R, that it belonged to T W and Mary his wife to present, and that they did so,) hat the allegation that Grace died seised of one-ourth part, was sufficient. Gully v. the Bishop of Exeter, 7 Law J. C.P. 52, s. c. 5 Bing. 170, s. c. 1 M. & P. 276.

Where a plaintiff in quare impedit claims to pre-ent in the fourth turn in right of one of four co-arceners, it is a sufficient statement of the title to hew a presentation by the ancestor under whom ll the coparceners claimed. And it is sufficient o state that, in the first instance, the coparceners ot agreeing to present, the elder sister presented; nd that on the second turn, J S presented in ight of the second sister; and that on the third urn, J T presented in right of the third sister; for t will not be presumed that such presentations were ther than rightful. Gully v. the Bishop of Exeter, 1 Law J. K.B. 281, s. c. 10 B. & C. 584.

A count in quare impedit alleging a right in cer-ain persons to present to a chapel in virtue of their eing charged with repairs, is not supported by roof that the repairs are paid out of the poor-rate. Shepherd v. the Bishop of Chester, 8 Law J. C.P. 141, s. c. 4 M. & P. 130, s. c. 6 Bing. 435.

In quare impedit to determine the right of presen-ation to the vicarage of K, in the diocese of E, laintiff, to prove the presentation of a clerk by a erson under whom he claimed, and the clerk's ad-nission and institution, gave in evidence a visita-ion book of the diocese of E, which contained the ollowing entry:—"Henricus Compton, in jure ivili Baculareus ac verbi Dei predicator, admissus uit ad inserviendum curæ animarum, in ecclesia arochiali de Kilglasse, per Edwardum, Elphin, Episcopum, sexto Octobris 1622." Throughout a ong list of entries in the same, when the duty was d inserviendum curæ animarum, or ad peragendum fficium curati, the word admissus was used as in he above entry; when the admission was in vica-iam, the words used were admissus et institutus. The Judges of the Irish Court of Common Pleas, efore whom the action was tried at bar, directed he jury, that the above entry as to the admission of Compton "was in legal construction to be taken to nean that Compton had been admitted and instituted o the vicarage," but exception overruled, and judg-nent for plaintiff. The judgment reversed by the Exchequer Chamber, and the judgment of reversal ffirmed by the Lords, for that the Judges ought ot to have taken the question as to the import and ffect of the entry, out of the hands of the jury; nd having so taken it upon themselves, they had ut a wrong construction on the entry. Cooke v. the Bishop of Elphin, 2 Dow. & C. A.C. 247.

When a clerk, who is rector de facto of a rectory s removed by quare impedit; and until the time of ctual deprivation, performs the church duty, he is ot liable, under the 28 Hen. 8. c. 11, to account to the next incumbent for the profits during the time between the presentation of that incumbent and his own actual deprivation. Hatton v. Cove, 9 Law J. K.B. 74.

QUO WARRANTO.

An information in the nature of quo warranto, against persons for claiming to act as a corporation, must be filed by and in the name of the Attorney General.

Such an information cannot be filed at the instance of an individual against persons, for usurping a franchise of a private nature, not connected with public government. Rex v. Ogden, 10 B. & C. 230.

Mere co-operation with the person whose corporate title is disputed, does not disqualify the relator upon a motion for a quo warranto. Nor the fact of the relator having been present at the election of other persons than the defendant, on which occasions there were the same objections to the title of the persons elected as that raised by the relator against the defendant; unless those objections were brought to his notice as objections. But, in the latter case, where he had at another election voted against the very objection he seeks to raise before the Court—Held, that he becomes disqualified. Rex v. Benney, 9 Law J. K.B. 104, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 684, Rex v. Parkyn, 9 Law J. K.B. 104, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 690.

The mere circumstance of an applicant for a quo warranto being in poor circumstances, and unable to pay costs if unsuccessful, is not a sufficient objection in answer to a quo warranto. Where, however, it appeared that the applicant was not only in such circumstances, but there was reason to believe he was merely the nominal applicant, and that the real one was a stranger to the corporation, who was urging the proceeding for electioneering purposes, the Court made it a condition to the granting a quo warranto, that security should be given for costs. Rex v. Thomas Wakelin, 8 Law J. K.B. 366, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 50.

Semble, that where issue is joined in a quo warranto information, and the prosecutor does not cause the issue to be tried within one year from its being joined, the defendant is entitled to costs under the 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. s. 2. But those costs are not to exceed the amount of the prosecutor's recognizance. Rex v. Hatton, 9 Law J. K.B. 283.

RAPE.

Since the stat. 9 Geo. 4. c. 31, the offence of rape is made out by the proof of penetration only, and in such a case a prisoner must be found guilty, although there was no emission, and although he did not withdraw himself merely because his lust was satisfied. Rex v. Jennings, 4 C. & P. 249. [Hullock]

The 9 Geo. 4. c. 31. s. 18. does not make emission unnecessary to complete the offence of rape. Rex v. Russel, 2 M. & M. 122. [Taunton]

On the trial of an indictment for a rape, it was held that the prisoner's counsel might ask the prosecutrix the following questions with a view to contradict her, "Were you not on (since the time of the alleged offence) walking in the High Street at Oxford, to look out for men?" "Were you not on (since the time of the alleged offence) walking in High Street, with a woman reputed to be a common prostitute?" Held also, that evidence might be adduced by the prisoner, to shew the general light character of the prosecutrix, and that general evidence might be given of her being a street walker; but semble, that evidence of specific acts of criminality by her would not be admissible. Rex v. Barker, 3 C. & P. 589. ### (A) County Rate.

[In Ireland, see 1 Will. 4. c. 61, 8 Law J. Stat. 125.]

Where a borough has Justices by charter, with a clause excluding the county Justices, the borough Justices may legally make a rate upon the borough, in the nature of a county rate, under 55 Geo. 3. c. 51. s. 24. Mercer v. Davis, 8 Law J. M.C. 94, s. c. 10 B. & C. 617.

The Sessions have power, under the 55 Geo. 3. c. 51, to amend the county rate which has been made in conformity with that statute, by correcting the annual value at which any parish is rated; and consequently, to correct the sum at which that parish is assessed. But where the Sessions, in consequence of the inequality at which two parishes were rated upon their annual value, corrected the amount of the assessment, but did not correct the rate in respect of the annual value, as it appeared on the rate, and thus left an apparent inequality with reference to all the other parishes—the Court quashed the order of Sessions. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Blackawton, 8 Law J. M.C. 123, s. c. 10 B. & C. 792.

(B) Church Rate.

Where a select vestry of twenty-six was appointed under the 58 Geo. 3. c. 45. and the 59 Geo. 3. c. 30, for the care and management of a district church, and a number less than fourteen met and made a church rate:—Held, that the rate was bad. Freeman v. Meymott, Blacket v. Blizard, 8 Law J. M.C. 103, s. c. 9 B. & C. 851, s. c. 4 M. & R. 641.

A faculty directing the performance upon and repairs of an organ in a parish church, to be paid out of the parish rates, would be legally objectionable; for the ordinary can only bind the parish to expenses for articles absolutely necessary. Even if the vestry is unanimous, a clause binding the parish to defray out of the rates, future expenses for an article not necessary, ought not to be inserted. Jay v. Weber, 3 Hag. Ec. 8.

Justices have no power, under the 53 Geo. 3. c. 127, to order payment of a church rate, where the validity of the rate is bonâ fide disputed. But they should hear the parties, in order to be satisfied that there is a bonâ fide dispute. A man who is summoned before them, merely saying he disputes the rate, is not sufficient to prevent their proceeding; they should be satisfied that there is really a dispute, although they cannot themselves decide it. Rex v. Wrottesley, 9 Law J. M.C. 51, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 648.

In questions of subtraction of church rate, the Court having jurisdiction on the subject-matter is bound, unless stopped by a prohibition, to proceed to the trial of a select vestry by which the rate was made.

Costs, though in the discretion of the Court, are in its legal discretion, guided by former precedents, and are almost universally decreed in suits for church rates, where the rate is pronounced to be subtracted. Goodall and Gray v. Whitmore and Fenn, 2 Hag. Ec. 372—4.

Churchwardens and their predecessors, though constantly acting for the whole township consisting of three districts, were uniformly described as churchwardens of A, the principal place in the township, and where the chapel stood. In a suit for subtraction of church rate, the Court reversed, with costs in both instances, a sentence sustaining a protest that the defendant occupying lands in the township, but not in the district in which A was situate, was not legally sued by churchwardens thus described. James v. Keeling, 3 Hag. Ec. 483.

(E) Poor Rate.

(a) How made.

Where it appears that the parish officers are without funds for the relief of the poor, and that for want of the concurrence of some of the officers a rate cannot be made, the Court will order a peremptory mandamus in the first instance, commanding them to make a rate. Rex v. the Churchwardens and Overseers of Soham, 8 Law J. M.C. 73.

Where a rate appears to have been made by a person as churchwarden, and also as one of the overseers, the Court will not presume a merely possible case in order to maintain such a rate, though it has been allowed by two Justices. Rex v. Hewitt, 7 Law J. M.C. 3.

An assistant overseer appointed under the 59 Geo. 3. c. 12, and having, by virtue of his office, the poor-rate in his custody, is liable to a penalty for refusing to produce it to an inhabitant, when lawfully demanded, according to the 17 Geo. 2. c. 3.

The declaration alleged, that defendant was assistant overseer; that a rate for the relief of the poor was made and duly allowed; and although defendant, as such assistant overseer, had the rate in his possession; and although plaintiff, at a reasonable time, demanded an inspection of it, and tendered one shilling, yet defendant refused to produce it, whereby he forfeited 20*l.*:—Held, on motion in rrest of judgment, that the count was sufficient, or if the defendant had the rate in his custody, as assistant overseer, it might be presumed that it was his duty to produce it when lawfully demanded. Edwards v. Bennett (in error), 8 Law J. M.C. 71, s. c. 6 Bing. 230, s. c. 3 M. & P. 749, s. c. 3 Y. & J. 58; Bennett v. Edwards, 7 Law J. M.C. 49, s. c. 8 B. & C. 702.

(c) Persons rateable.

The objects of a charitable foundation in the actual occupation of the almshouses for their own benefit, and liable to be removed at the pleasure of the patrons, are rateable in respect of such occupation. Rex v. Green, 7 Law J. M.C. 94, s. c. 9 B. & C. 203, s. c. 4 M. & R. 164.

In general, where a canal company have authority given them by act of parliament to make a public river navigable, with the usual powers to carry the object into effect, they are not, for the purposes of poor rate, "occupiers" of the land which is the bed of the river. [s. p. next case.]

But where, in pursuance of those powers, they make cuts and locks upon land which has been purchased by them, they are liable to be rated as occupiers, in respect of those cuts and locks. Rex v. Benj. Thomas, 7 Law J. M.C. 66, s. c. 9 B. & C. 114, s. c. 4 M. & R. 23.

A power to a company to mortgage the "navigation" of the river, does not give them such an interest in the soil of the bed of the river, as to make them occupiers for the purposes of poor-rate. Rex v. the Undertakers of the Ayr and Calder Navigation, 8 Law J. M.C. 9, s. c. 9 B. & C. 610, s. c. 4 M. & R. 728.

Limestone mines are not rateable for the relief of the poor. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Sedgley, 9 Law J. M.C. 61, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 65.

Where part of the receipts of a canal company was in respect of certain locks in a particular parish:—Held, that the company were rateable for those receipts by the parish in which the locks were; and that those receipts were not to be thrown into the general account of profits, for the purpose of striking an average, or otherwise, as applicable to the other parishes through which, as well as through the parish in question, the canal ran. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Lower Mitton, 8 Law J. M.C. 57, s. c. 9 B. & C. 810, s. c. 4 M. & R. 711.

The Hammersmith bridge over the Thames belonged to a company. One end of the bridge was in Middlesex; the other in Surrey. The toll-gate was on the Middlesex side; and it was there only that any tolls were taken. There was no toll-house on the Surrey side; but, on that side, the company had purchased land on which they built an abutment of the bridge. They were assessed by the Surrey parish for the land, and in respect of the tolls payable thereon:—Held, that they were beneficial occupiers on both sides of the river; that it was immaterial on which side the tolls were taken; and that the assessment was consequently valid. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Barnes, 8 Law J. M.C. 115, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 113.

The lessee and occupier of coal mines, is rateable upon the improved value thereof, occasioned by steam-engines which he has erected, and which are used for draining the mines and raising the coals to the surface, and for railways laid down by him, and employed for facilitating the carriage of the coals. Rex v. Lord Viscount Granville, 7 Law J. M.C. 89, s. c. 9 B. & C. 188, s. c. 4 M. & R. 171.

The Court will not disturb a poor-rate on the ground of an alleged inequality, unless that inequality manifestly appear on the face of the rate.

In calculating the annual value of the subject of rate, there is no objection to the allowing for the increased expense attending the repairs and gradual decay of houses, and the gradual exhaustion of coal mines, when compared with the fixed and permanent annual value of land.

Therefore, a rate upon lands, houses, and coal mines, made upon two-thirds of the net annual rent of the lands, and upon only one-half of the net annual rent of the houses and coal mines, was held to be good. Rex v. Tomlinson, 7 Law J. M.C. 64, s. c. 9 B. & C. 162, s. c. 4 M. & R. 169.

A corn rent, in lieu of tithes, should be rated upon the same principle as that which should be applied to a farm; the criterion being "for how much a year would it let to a tenant?" And, as no one would give the full annual amount if he were to take a corn rent at a letting, but would take into consideration the trouble and expense of collecting, the danger of loss by insolvency, &c., an allowance should be made for these, in fixing the annual value of the corn rent for the purpose of rating.

The ecclesiastical dues, payable by the incumbent to the bishop, should be deducted as outgoings from the annual value of the corn rent.

But no allowance is to be made for the expense of providing for the performance of the church duties. Rex v. Joddrell, 9 Law J. M.C. 26, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 403.

Where a poor-rate is assessed in proportion to the rent paid by occupiers of lands, the owners and occupiers of a canal must be rated, not in respect of the full amount of all the profits of their occupation as owners, but according to the rent at which the canal might be let to a tenant. Rex v. the Trustees of the Duke of Bridgewater, 7 Law J. M.C. 81, s. c. 9 B. & C. 68, s. c. 4 M. & R. 143.

By the provisions of the act of parliament under which the Oxford canal was established, the proprietors of the Coventry canal were authorized to receive the tonnage dues in respect of all coals which should be carried upon the first two miles of the Oxford canal from its junction with the Coventry canal at Longford, in the parish of Foleshill, (of which two miles, one mile and nine hundred and sixty-three yards were situate in Foleshill,) and the proprietors of the Oxford canal were authorized to receive certain tonnage dues in respect of all merchandize (except coals) passing out of the Oxford canal, along the Coventry canal, within three miles and a half from the junction of the said canals at Longford, towards Coventry, (of which three miles and a half, two miles and a quarter were situate in Foleshill). On the establishment of the Grand Junction canal, which joins the Oxford canal at Braunston, provisions were made, under which one class of tonnage dues were given to the proprietors of the Oxford canal, in respect of general merchandize, (except lime, &c.) and another class of tonnage dues in respect of all coals passing out of the Oxford canal into the Grand Junction canal, by way of and as an indemnification against any injury they might sustain by the forming of the line of the Grand Junction canal.

In a rate made for the relief of the poor of the parish of Foleshill, the Oxford Canal Company were rated for certain proportionate amounts in such rate stated, in respect as well of dues arising from merchandize carried along so much of the three miles and a half of the Coventry canal as lay in that parish, as also in respect of the two classes of compensation or indemnification dues payable to them for merchandize and coals passing out of the Oxford canal into the Grand Junction canal at Braunston; and upon appeal—Held, that the proprietors of the Oxford Canal Company were properly rated:—First, as to the dues arising from merchandize carried on the Coventry canal, and as to the proportion of the compensation or indemnification dues for merchandize passing out of the Oxford into the Grand Junction canal, on the ground that the land of the parish of Foleshill contributed to earn those dues. Secondly, as to the proportion of the compensation or indemnification dues for coals, on the same ground; and notwithstanding that the Oxford Canal Company had no profitable user of the one mile and nine hundred and sixty-three yards of their canal lying in the parish of Foleshill in respect of coals, and consequently could sustain no injury there, to indemnify against which such compensation dues were granted.

The criterion by which the amount of canal tolls is to be ascertained for the purpose of rating, depends upon the question—what they would let for to a tenant. For the purpose of determining this question, the following allowances, in addition to a proper allowance for his own remuneration, should be made to the supposed tenant:—1st, Poor rates. 2nd, Expense of collection. 3rd, Repairs. 4th, Expense of works in keeping up and renewing the supply of water. Rex v. Lower Mitton, 8 Law J. M.C. 57, s. c. 9 B. & C. 810, s. c. 4 M. & R. 711.

By a canal act, the proprietors of the Oxford canal were empowered to take a mileage tonnage for coals and other merchandizes, excepting that they were not to take a tonnage upon coals for a distance of two miles measured from L to B. As to those two miles, it was enacted that the proprietors of the Coventry canal should take all the rates and duties payable by virtue of that act for all coals carried from any part of the Oxford canal within those two miles; and the proprietors of the Oxford canal were to take all the rates, payable by an act for making the Coventry canal, for all goods, except coals, conveyed upon any part of the Oxford canal, and afterwards upon the Coventry canal, within three miles and a half of the junction of the two canals. The point of junction of the Oxford and Coventry canals was in the parish of F. That parish contains one mile and nine hundred and sixty-three yards of the Oxford canal, being part of the two miles above mentioned; and also two miles and a quarter of the Coventry canal, being part of the three miles and a half above mentioned.

By an act, 33 Geo. 3. c. 80, for making the Grand Junction canal, (reciting that it was apprehended the intended canal would be injurious to the company of proprietors of the Oxford canal,) it was agreed that the compensation thereinafter mentioned should be made to them as an indemnification against such injury. It then authorized the proprietors of the Oxford canal to take for all coals that should pass from the Oxford canal into and upon the Grand Junction canal the sum of 2s. 9d. per ton, without regard to the distance the same should pass on the Oxford canal; and for all other goods which should pass from any navigable canal into or upon the Oxford canal, and from thence into or upon the Grand Junction canal, or from the Grand Junction canal into or upon the Oxford canal, and from thence into or upon any other canal, the sum of 4s. 4d. per ton, without any regard to the distance the same should pass on the Oxford canal:—

Held—first, that the proprietors of the Oxford canal were rateable to the poor in the parish of F, for the mile tonnage for merchandize, not being coals, passing along the Oxford canal in that parish.

Secondly, that they were rateable in that parish for the mile tonnage payable to them in respect of tolls collected on the Coventry canal, in the proportion which one mile nine hundred and sixty-three yards bears to two miles.

Thirdly, that they were rateable in that parish for such a proportion of the compensation tonnage payable to the Oxford canal company under the Grand Junction canal act, for merchandize, not being coals, passing from the Coventry canal along the Oxford canal to the Grand Junction canal, and vice versâ, and consequently through the parish of F, as one mile nine hundred and sixty-three yards bears to thirty-four miles and seven-eighths, the distance between the points at which the Oxford canal joins the Coventry and Grand Junction canals.

Fourthly, that they were rateable in that parish for the same proportion of the compensation tonnage for coals passing along the same portion of the Oxford canal from the Coventry canal into the Grand Junction canal.

Held, further, that in fixing the amount of the rate, the sum paid by the proprietors for the poor-rate, the expense of collecting the tolls, of repairing the banks of the canal, and of supplying it with water, ought to be deducted from the gross profits. Rex v. the Oxford Canal Company, 8 Law J. M.C. 62, s. c. 10 B. & C. 163, s. c. 5 M. & R. 100.

Where a canal was let under the authority of an act of parliament, for an annual sum equivalent to the annual interest of a sum borrowed to make it:—Held, that such annual sum should be taken as rent for the purpose of rating the lessee to the relief of the poor; and that the rent should be apportioned in the different parishes through which the canal ran, according to the length in each parish. Rex v. Chaplin, 9 Law J. M.C. 121, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 926.

A canal act provided that the company should be rated for any lands taken or buildings erected in pursuance of that act, in the same proportion as other lands and buildings adjoining to or lying near the same were rated:—Held, that they were to be rated according to the actual value of the lands and uildings which the company had in the particular arish; and not according to their actual productive alue to the company. Rex v. the Chelmer and Blackater Navigation Company, 9 Law J. M.C. 125, s. c. B. & Ad. 14.

(g) Rating in aid.

The inhabitants of a particular part of a parish ntered, in the year 1714, into an agreement with he rest of the parish to maintain their own poor, nd accordingly maintained them ever afterwards. From that time, that part was treated as distinct rom the parish. In 1753 separate overseers were hosen for that part; from that time, that part, by is distinct name, appealed and resisted appeals gainst orders of removal; made and received such rders; and, among them, orders to and from the arish of which it had been part. In 1775, and fterwards, poor-rates were made in the usual form nder the statute of Elizabeth, and were allowed by he Justices; and in 1800 a constable for the place then called a vill) was appointed by the Quarter Sessions:—Held, that these facts did not shew a egal separation from the original parish, so as to ntitle the place to obtain a rate in aid upon another, not the original, parish. Rex v. the Inhabitants of East Church, 8 Law J. M.C. 76.

RECEIVER.

(A) Appointment.
(B) Liabilities.
(C) Practice.

(A) Appointment.

Where property is vested in trustees for the benefit of A,—on a bill filed for the purpose of establishing securities given by A, the Court will not direct any accounts against him in his absence, nor appoint a receiver. Brown v. Blount, 9 Law J. Chanc. 74.

A receiver will not be appointed at the instance of a party claiming as devisee under a will, the validity of which is to be determined by an issue, unless the claimant satisfies the Court that there is a reasonable probability of his succeeding on the issue, and that the property will be endangered by being left in the possession of the heir-at-law. Clark v. Dew, 1 Russ. & M. 103.

In a suit for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of an estate in the West Indies, against a purchaser who resided there, and had got into possession without paying the purchase money, and to which the consignees of the estate were also defendants,—an application also for a receiver of the proceeds of the consignments was refused, the principal defendant, the purchaser, having never been served with a subpœna. Stratton v. Davidson, 1 Russ. & M. 484.

(B) Liabilities.

A receiver appointed by the Court is not answerable for a loss of monies by the failure of a banker, if they are not mixed with his own monies, and are bonâ fide deposited for security only, under circumstances in which they could not have been properly paid into court. Salway v. Salway, 9 Law J. Chanc. 152, s. c. 4 Russ. 60.

(C) Practice.

Course of proceeding to compel a defendant to deliver possession of estates to a receiver. Green v. Green, 2 Sim. 430.

Quære, whether, upon a petition objecting to a Master's report of a receiver's accounts, the Court will enter into a consideration of the particular items of the accounts.

Even where there is reason to doubt whether, as to some points, the conduct of a receiver has been strictly correct,—further inquiry will not be ordered, where the attention of the parties has been previously directed to the subject, and ample opportunity of investigation afforded to them. Shewell v. Jones, 3 Russ. 522.

RECEIVER OF STOLEN GOODS.

A and B were indicted; A for stealing six bank notes of 100*l.* each, and B for receiving "the said notes," knowing them to have been stolen. A stole the six 100*l.* notes, and got them changed into 20*l.* notes, some of which B received:—Held, that B could not be convicted on this indictment. Rex v. Walkley, 4 C. & P. 132. [Taddy, Serj.]

If an indictment against a receiver state the principal felony to have been committed by A B, whatever would have been evidence of the principal felony to convict A B, is receivable to prove this allegation on the trial of the receiver, but is not conclusive. Therefore, if A B confessed the principal felony, that confession is admissible on the trial of the receiver, to prove the commission of the principal felony. Rex v. Blick, 4 C. & P. 377. [Bosanquet]

RECOGNIZANCE.

The condition of a recognizance, returned, filed, and inrolled as a record, cannot be varied by a rule of court. Rex v. Bingham, 3 Y. & J. 101.

The condition of a recognizance to abide the award of D, cannot be varied by a rule of court, substituting M for D. Rex v. Bingham, 1 C. & J. 245.

RECORD.

To prove an allegation that a cause was carried down to trial, it is necessary to produce the Nisi Prius record, though it is not alleged that the cause was in fact tried. Parry v. Collis, Peu. A.C. 47. [Kenyon]

RECOVERY.

(A) Acknowledgment.
(B) Passing.
(C) Amendment.

(A) Acknowledgment.

Acknowledgments of fines or recoveries may be taken in Wales by attornies of the Great Sessions. Evans, vouchee, 9 Law J. C.P. 41, s. c. 7 Bing. 149.

If the affidavit of acknowledgment of the warrant of attorney, in a recovery, omits to state that the commissioners are not concerned for any of the parties, the Court will not in future grant leave to reswear it. Re Sandy's recovery, 9 Law J. C.P. 226.

Although the notarial seal affixed to the acknowledgment of a warrant of attorney taken abroad, was broken to pieces and destroyed, the Court allowed the recovery to pass, on an affidavit that the seal was duly affixed at the time the oath was administered. Carew, demandant; White, tenant, 7 Law J. C.P. 114, s.c. 2 M. & P. 558.

The Court refused to allow a recovery to pass, where the christian name of the vouchee had been written on an erasure in the affidavit of the commissioners of the acknowledgment of the warrant of attorney. Murray, vouchee, 7 Law J. C.P. 194.

In a recovery, the word "received" having been substituted for "acknowledged," at the foot of the præcipe and warrant of attorney, the Court would not allow the recovery to pass. Ockley, demandant; Furber, tenant; Ward, vouchee, 5 M. & P. 249.

(B) Passing.

The Court allowed a recovery to pass, notwithstanding the warrants of attorney of the vouchees were taken, some on one piece of parchment, and some on another. Sawbridge, demandant; Jayes, tenant; Parsons and four others, vouchees, 8 Law J. C.P. 135, s.c. 6 Bing. 426, s.c. 4 M. & P. 119.

The Court refused to allow a recovery to pass, as to one of two vouchees who had executed the warrant of attorney two years ago, but had since become insane. Ex parte Crooke, 7 Law J. C.P. 15, s.c. 5 Bing. 176, s.c. 2 M. & P. 264.

Where a part of the proceedings in a recovery taken in France were written on paper and in the French language, and a copy thereof ingrossed on parchment, in English, and certified by a notary to be "a faithful translation"—the Court refused to allow the recovery to pass, and said that the notary must also make affidavit that he "understood the French language;" and that the proceedings must be retaken on parchment. Nicholas and three others, vouchees, 7 Law J. C.P. 169, s.c. 3 M. & P. 28.

The Court refused to allow a recovery to be recorded as of an antecedent term, wherein every step had been duly taken, but, by mistake, the tenant had omitted to appear at the bar. Anonymous, 8 Law J. C.P. 110.

The Court permitted the appearance of the tenant in a recovery to be recorded as of the preceding term, on an affidavit that he had been prevented by illness from attending at the proper time. Anonymous, 8 Law J. C.P. 286.

(C) Amendment.

To amend the writ of entry, application must be made to the Master of the Rolls. Hunter's recovery, 9 Law J. C.P. 41.

The Court will permit the amendment of a mistake in putting the names of the vouchees instead of that of the tenant in the præcipe at the beginning of the writ of entry. Anonymous, 8 Law J. C.P. 193.

Amendment of a recovery refused where the party was always known by the name which had been inserted, though it was not correctly his baptismal name. Addis, demandant; Norris, tenant; Power, vouchee, 9 Law J. C.P. 166, s.c. 7 Bing. 455, s.c. 5 M. & P. 379.

The Court refused to allow a recovery to pass, the words "calleth to warranty" being inserted instead of "voucheth to warranty." Anonymous, 8 Law J. C.P. 197.

Description of premises in a recovery amended. Anonymous, 9 Law J. C.P. 225.

In the deed to lead the uses of a recovery, the premises were described as a moiety or halfendeal of a messuage and three hundred acres of meadow; in the recovery, the words "or halfendeal" were omitted:—the Court allowed the recovery to be amended, by the insertion of those words after the word "moiety." Manners, vouchee, 5 M. & P. 372.

REGISTRY.

[See Deeds.]

RELEASE.

The Court will not permit an action to be defeated by a fraudulent release by a co-plaintiff. Lloyd v. Meeking, 9 Law J. C.P. 50.

REMAINDER.

[See Devise.]

A devise, which at the death of a testator operated as an executory devise, may, by a change of circumstances after his death, become a contingent remainder.

Accordingly, a testator devised to his daughter for life, remainder to John, her son, his heirs and assigns, for ever. But in case John should die before the daughter, and she should have no other child living at her death, she was to devise the premises to such person as she should think proper. John, the daughter's son, was living when the testator died; but died shortly afterwards. Subsequent to the death of John, the daughter had another son; the daughter, after the birth of that other son, levied a fine:—Held, that, although, until the death of the grandson John, the power to the daughter to devise to such person as she should think proper, could operate only as an executory devise, yet, upon the death of John, the limitation became a contingent remainder, was barred by the fine, and her other son could not recover in ejectment. Doe d. Harris v. Howell, 8 Law J. K.B. 123, s.c. 10 B. & C. 191, s.c. 5 M. & R. 24.

A has a contingent remainder in fee, and conveys it to B as a security. The contingent remainder is afterwards barred by A's mother, who acquires the fee, and, by her will, devises her real estates to trustees, upon trust to sell, and invest the money, and pay two-thirds of the dividends to or for the benefit of A, for his life, with a similar trust as to two-thirds of the rents of the estates not sold:—Held, that the interest of A is bound by the security given to B. Brown v. Blount, 9 Law J. Chanc. 74.

A fine levied by a contingent remainder-man does not of necessity destroy his estate. When the ination of the conuzor is properly shewn by the deed declaring the uses, the fine works by estoppel only.

A stranger in estate cannot take advantage of such a estoppel.

Accordingly, the deeds of conveyance to the lessors of the plaintiff were made after the remainders became vested; they recited fines sur connizance de droit levied by the parties while the remainders were contingent. The defendant was a stranger in estate:—Held, that the nature of the fines might be collected from the recitals; that those contingent remainders were not thereby destroyed; but that the fines operated by way of estoppel only; and, therefore, (inasmuch as the defendant, being a stranger, could not take advantage of the estoppel,) that a good title in ejectment could be made by parties claiming under a conveyance by the conuzors, after the remainders vested, against all but parties or privies to the fines.

By marriage settlement, W M and T M conveyed certain lands to trustees, their heirs and assigns, to the use of W M for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; remainder to W M for life; remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; remainder to the use of the first and other sons of T M by M H, successively in tail male; with remainder to the use of the right heirs male of T M for ever:—Held, that the eldest son of W M took a contingent remainder, which on the death of T M became vested; and that the ultimate remainder in fee simple, on the death of such elder son without issue, vested in H M, the only other son of T M.

By the same settlement other premises were conveyed to the same trustees, to the use of T M for life, with remainder, during his life, to the trustees to preserve contingent remainders; remainder to the use of M H, the intended wife, for life, for raising an annual sum; and, subject thereto, to the use of the first and other sons of T M by the said M H, successively in tail male; with remainder, in case there should be no issue male, but should be issue female, to the use of the issue female, for raising portions to be paid at the age of twenty-one; the trustees to raise maintenance for the daughters, until they should attain that age, out of the rents; but if the said portions, at the times of payment, could not be advanced out of the profits of the premises, the said premises should stand charged with the payment of the portions, as soon after as the same could be advanced and raised, &c.; and, after raising and paying the said sums of money, or in case there should be no issue female, to the use of the right heirs male of T M for ever:—Held, that the trustees at all events took only a limited fee, which determined when the portions were paid; that, upon failure of the estate limited by the settlement, the ultimate fee resulted to the settlor; and that, no claim having been made by the trustees during more than twenty years' adverse possession, the presumption was, that their right was satisfied or released, and could not be set up by a stranger as a defence in an action of ejectment.

H M died without issue, devising all the premises mentioned in the settlement to his widow for life; remainder to the sons and daughters of his nephew and of his niece, as tenants in common. The tenant for life took possession of the premises, and retained that possession until within two years of her death, when the defendant entered and exercised certain acts of ownership, but did not continue in possession. A month after the death of the tenant for life, and about six weeks before the commencement of the action, the defendant again obtained possession and ploughed the land; but it did not appear whether the parties entitled in remainder had entered previously, or that the defendant's possession was with their knowledge and against their will:—Held, that the defendant's acts did not amount to a disseisin, or give him such an estate by wrong as prevented the remainder-men from executing a conveyance of the estate to the lessors of the plaintiff. Doe dem. Bruns v. Martyn, 7 Law J. K.B. 60, s.c. 8 B. & C. 497, s.c. 2 M. & R. 485.

Although a receiver has been appointed, and he has paid over rent, accrued from the rent day next preceding the death of the tenant for life to the day of her death (upon lands let from year to year), to her personal representatives,—the Court will order them to refund the same, and pay it over to the remainder-man. Brown v. Candler, 9 Law J. Chanc. 212.

A contingent remainder-man conveyed his interest to secure a debt; the remainder was afterwards destroyed by the tenant of the prior estate; the remainder-man afterwards acquired a new interest in the property, under the will of that tenant:—Held, that it was available to the creditor. Noel v. Bewley, 3 Sim. 103.

REPLEVIN.

[See AMENDMENT, PAYMENT, and PRACTICE.]

A declaration in replevin must state the parish or place in which the taking occurred. O'Neill v. Paul, 9 Law J. K.B. 268.

In replevin, by reason of a clerical error the avowry omitted to state that the plaintiff was tenant to the avowant; but the Court held, that the allegation that the plaintiff held the premises under a demise at a yearly rent, and that a certain sum of the rent aforesaid was due from the plaintiff to the avowant, sufficiently shewed that the former was tenant to the latter. James v. Colquhon, 9 Law J. C.P. 90, s. c. 7 Bing. 265.

In replevin, the defendant made cognizance as bailiff of W G T, for rent in arrear under a demise at the yearly rent of 170*l*. The evidence was, that the premises were conveyed to W G T by two of three trustees only, the third not having executed the conveyance:—Held, a variance. Philpott v. Dobbinson, 7 Law J. C.P. 248, s. c. 6 Bing. 104, s. c. 3 M. & P. 320.

REQUESTS, COURT OF.

(A) JURISDICTION.
(B) COSTS.

(A) JURISDICTION.

[See Elkins v. Harding, post, B.]

Where an officer of the sheriff of Middlesex resided and carried on his business in that county, but kept an office or counting-house in the city of London, in partnership with his son:—Held, that he must be taken to be a person seeking his livelihood in London, within the meaning of the London Court of Requests Act, 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 104. s. 5. Bushnell v. Levi, 7 Law J. C.P. 115, s. c. 5 Bing. 315, s. c. 2 M. & P. 577.

A defendant, to entitle himself to the advantage of the 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 104, (the London Court of Requests Act,) must shew that he is keeping a shop, &c. or seeking his livelihood by carrying on business in London on his own account. Therefore, a clerk in the Excise Office, London, held not to be within the act, although he was every day from ten to four at that office; and was there served with the writ in the cause, directed to the sheriffs of London. Smith v. Hurrell, 8 Law J. K.B. 198, s. c. 10 B. & C. 542.

(B) Costs.

Under the Westminster Court of Conscience Act, 23 Geo. 2. c. 27, the superior courts have no power to enter a suggestion to deprive a plaintiff of costs for suing for a debt cognizable by the court of conscience; the act merely empowers the defendant to take advantage of it by plea. Andrews v. Phillips, 8 Law J. C.P. 122.

A defendant who has removed a cause from the Lord Mayor's Court of London into one of the superior courts, is yet entitled to the benefit of the 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 104, (the London Court of Requests Act,) to deprive the plaintiff of his costs, if he recover less than 5*l.* Copland v. Jacobs, 8 Law J. K.B. 321.

Where a clerk in court and an attorney of the Court of King's Bench, sued an attorney of the latter court by capias of privilege, and recovered less than 5*l.*:—Held, that the clerk in court did not lose his privilege, and that the defendant was not entitled to enter a suggestion on the roll to deprive the plaintiffs of costs under the London Court of Requests Act, 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 104. Elkins v. Harding, 9 Law J. Exch. 82, s. c. 1 C. & J. 345, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 274.

Where the plaintiff sues on a disputed account for a larger sum, and the verdict is under 5*l.*, the defendant is entitled to a suggestion, under the 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 104. s. 12, to deprive the plaintiff of costs. Harris v. Widdowson, 8 Law J. C.P. 122.

Where a demand considerably above 5*l.* has been reduced below that sum by the effect of a plea of the Statute of Limitations, the defendant is not thereby deprived of his right to enter a suggestion under the London Court of Requests Act, 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 104. Rothery v. Munnings, 8 Law J. K.B. 386, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 15.

In an action to recover 3*l.* 6*s.*, remaining due to plaintiff, on a bill of exchange for 8*l.* 6*s.*, which bill was given to secure the balance of an account between the parties originally amounting to more than 100*l.*:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to enter a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of his costs, under the Boston Act, 47 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 1, the 15th section ousting the commissioners of their jurisdiction to determine any cause for any debt being the balance of an account or demand originally exceeding 5*l.* Abbey v. Lill, 7 Law J. C.P. 96, s. c. 2 M. & P. 534, s. c. 5 Bing. 299.

In an action in the Exchequer for work done, against a defendant residing in the Isle of Wight, where the verdict was taken by consent for 5*l.*, the sum sued for being upwards of 6*l.*:—Held, that under the local act for the summary recovery of small debts in that island, the plaintiff was not entitled to costs.

The Court will not, on a motion to enter a suggestion on the roll, receive the facts from affidavits, but will require the Judge's report. Oakes v. Atkin, 13 Price, 793.

RESCUE.

Attachment absolute for rescue, on an affidavit of the sheriff's officer, setting forth the sheriff's return of the fact. Lund v. Owen, 8 Law J. C.P. 198.

RETAINER.

[See Executor and Administrator.]

Where the debtor makes his creditor executor of his will, the law raises no presumption that the creditor has retained enough to pay his debt, until it be shewn by evidence that he has received enough for that purpose. White v. Fitch, 7 Law J. K.B. 225.

REVENUE.

[Amendment of laws of Customs, 10 Geo. 4. c. 43, 7 Law J. Stat. 76.

[Certain oaths and affirmations made in the Customs, abolished, 1 & 2 W. 4. c. 4, 9 Law J. Stat. 5.

[Fees of officers of Customs regulated by 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 40, 9 Law J. Stat. 79.]

A person acting as a broker and auctioneer employed by the agent in England of a foreign ambassador, who had quitted this country at the termination of his embassy, to sell on his excellency's account certain wines, spirits, &c., by auction, which had been imported by the ambassador duty free, held to be personally liable, as agent of all parties, to pay the duties of Customs in respect of the goods so sold by him, under the circumstances of this case, where he had received, although he had from time to time, as he received the money, paid the net amount over to his employer, the immediate agent of the vendor.

The ambassador's privilege held to have ceased to protect the wines from duty, when so sold to a purchaser.

Quære, whether an information filed against the auctioneer for the recovery of the duties, consisting of a count in debt on the statute, and a count for money had and received, be sustainable, under the circumstances, on the first count, or on the second; the Chief Baron, Graham and Garrow, Barons, being of opinion that the verdict for the Crown might be supported on the second count—dubitante Hullock, B., sed sentiente the defendant liable on the first count. The Attorney General v. Thornton, 13 Price, 805.

An entry and landing of goods by bill of sight, without perfect entry, will not protect from penalties parties making such entry and landing with a view to a fraudulent evasion of duties. Attorney General

v. Hawkes, 9 Law J. Exch. 16, s. c. 1 C. & J. 120, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 3.

Whether a general writ of assistance will authorize an entry into a house, to search for uncustomed goods, there being reasonable cause to suspect such goods are there; or, whether the officer must enter and search at his peril, and be justified or not, according to the result of the search—quære.

Semble—At all events the officer would not be justified, unless there was reasonable cause of suspicion. Rex v. Watts, 8 Law J. K.B. 381, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 166.

Motion for an attachment against parties, for disobeying an order of commissioners, appointed to inquire of debts due to the King, requiring production of papers.

Quære—Whether parties in trade, against whom a commission had issued to hold an inquisition, to find whether they are indebted to the Crown for arrears of duties of Excise, on the commodities sold by them in the course of their business, and who, on attending in pursuance of a summons, to be examined by the commissioners on the inquest, refused to submit to such examination, unless attended by their solicitor, are compellable to produce before them, for their inspection, the partnership books, for the purpose of furnishing evidence of the amount of duties in arrear, without first being duly released, by competent measures and authority, from any penalties which the contents of such books might be the means of shewing or ascertaining that they had incurred.

Quære—By whom, and by what means such indemnity is to be secured to the parties.

It cannot be given by the solicitor to the Excise, of his own personal authority.

Proceedings for duties withheld and in arrear, involve (semble) a waiver of penalties. Rex v. Dausey, 12 Price, 588.

In a case of issues on writ of distringas for arrears of land-tax set insuper.

Service of order for, on sheriff. Attorney General v. Inhabitants of Ashby Tolville, 12 Price, 649.

REVERSION AND REVERSIONER.

[Scotch reversions, within burgh, 10 Geo. 4. c. 19, 7 Law J. Stat. 33.]

A reversion depending upon the contingency of the tenant for life, who was sixty-three years of age and a bachelor, dying without issue, is not the subject of estimate or calculation.

But the purchaser of this reversion having, in his treaty with the vendor, proposed to deduct one-half of the reversion in respect of such contingency, and the treaty having been concluded upon that basis, the Court, as between the vendor and purchaser, will value the contingency accordingly. Baker v. Bent, 1 Russ. & M. 224, s. c. 1 Tam. 368.

A reversioner may maintain an action for a nuisance, which produces no present injury to his reversion beyond that to the right, and which may be removed before the reversion comes into possession. Shadwell v. Hutchinson, 2 M. & M. 350, s. c. 3 C. & P. 615. [Tenterden]

After a reversioner has recovered in an action for an obstruction, to the injury of his reversionary interest, he may yet, if the obstruction be continued, maintain another action for continuing the obstruction. Shadwell v. Hutchinson, 9 Law J. K.B. 142, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 97, s. c. 4 C. & P. 333.

In case, by a reversioner, for an injury done to the reversion, it is no answer that the injury complained of was caused by the wrongful act of the tenant, for which he might be liable to an action. Lord Egremont v. Pulman, 1 M. & M. 404. [Tindal]

REVIEW.

[See PRACTICE.]

[Dew v. Clarke, 4 Russ. 511, Dig. Law J. 460.]

A commission of review is not grantable, unless the Lord Chancellor be satisfied that the principles of law, on which the Court decided, were wrong, or that the facts were either misstated or misunderstood. Wyatt v. Ingram, 3 Hag. Ec. 467.

RIGHT, WRIT OF.

The word esplees having been omitted in the count, and it having been indorsed by an attorney in the country, the tenant signed judgment of non pros.—The Court held it to be irregular, and gave the demandant leave to amend on payment of costs. Webb, demandant; Lane, tenant, 7 Law J. C.P. 71, s. c. 5 Bing. 285, s. c. 2 M. & P. 478.

RIOT, AND RIOT ACT.

If parties assemble together for a purpose, which, if executed, would make them rioters, but, having assembled, they do nothing, and separate without carrying their purpose into effect,—this is an unlawful assembly. Rex v. Birt, 5 C. & P. 154. [Patteson]

If, in reading the proclamation from the Riot Act, the magistrate omit to read the words "God save the King," at the end of it, persons remaining together for an hour after such reading of the proclamation cannot be capitally convicted under sect. 1. of that act. Rex v. Child, 4 C. & P. 442. [Vaughan, and Alderson]

Twelve persons were indicted for a riot and assaulting J W. The indictment did not conclude in terrorem populi. Several of the defendants had been convicted, and at an ensuing assize, at which the remaining defendants were tried, there was evidence that they had joined in the riot, but there was no proof of any assault, except the words "po. se," and "guilty," written on the indictment, over the names of the convicted defendants:—Held, that this was no proof of an assault as against the present defendants, and that the present defendants could not be convicted of the riot only, as the indictment did not conclude in terrorem populi. Rex v. Hughes, 4 C. & P. 373. [Park]

If persons be charged with a riot and cutting down fences, and the indictment do not conclude in terrorem populi, they cannot on that indictment be convicted of a riot, but may be convicted of an unlawful assembly. Rex v. Cox, 4 C. & P. 538. [Patteson]

An indictment on the Riot Act, 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 5. s. 1, for remaining assembled one hour after proclamation made, need not charge the original riot to have been in terrorem populi. Rex v. James, 5 C. & P. 153. [Patteson]

Where persons were convicted of a riot, attended by some violence to the prosecutors, the latter were held entitled to costs as "parties aggrieved," under the 5th & 6th Wm. and Mary, c. 11. s. 3, although the riot originated out of a dispute as to the office of churchwarden, to which office both the prosecutors and the defendants laid claim. Rex v. Thompkins, 9 Law J. M.C. 81, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 287.

RIVER.

ROBBERY.

If persons who had formed part of a mob, obtain money from a party by advising him to give money to the mob, and be indicted for this as a robbery,—the prosecutor, to shew that this was not bonâ fide advice, may give evidence of demands of money made by the same mob at other places, before and afterwards, in the course of the same day, if any of the prisoners were present on those occasions. Rex v. Winkworth, 4 C. & P. 444. [J. Parke]

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

[See 6 Geo. 4. c. 7, for the relief of the Roman Catholics, 7 Law J. Stat. 13.]

SACRILEGE.

If a church tower be built higher than the church, and have a separate roof, but have no outer door, and be only accessible from the body of the church, from which it is not separated by any partition, this tower is a part of the church within the meaning of the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 10. Rex v. Wheeler, Turner and Davis, 3 C. & P. 585. [Parke]

SALVAGE.

Salvage refused for bringing into a port a barge found (without anchor or crew) aground, where it was a common usage to leave barges. Upnor, 2 Hag. 3.

Where the ship of a neutral had been seized by a belligerent, on an unfounded charge of the breach of a blockade, and the crew of the ship which was seized, afterwards rescued her, and took her to her destined port:—Held, that this rescue did not entitle the crew to salvage. Wilson v. Anderton, 9 Law J. K.B. 48, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 450.

Claim of a passenger to salvage not sustained. Brunstan, 2 Hag. 3, n.

The crew of another vessel on board the wrecked vessel, rather as passengers than as part of the crew, are entitled to some reward for salvage services. Salacia, 2 Hag. 269.

Under the general rule, that a person not actually occupied in effecting a salvage service is not entitled to share in a salvage remuneration, the claim of an officer of a coast guard detachment, who sent his men and boat, but did not assist in person, rejected. Vine, 2 Hag. 1.

The provisions 6 Geo. 4. c. 49, and the order in council of September 1825, do not apply retrospectively to cases of salvage or rescues from pirates made and adjudicated upon, before the passing of that act; and the Court of Admiralty has no power of its own authority, to adopt the principle of constructive salvage. The Court, therefore, rejected the claim of the Admiral to share in such part as, if that statute and order in council applied, would belong to him in the case of a rescue of a British vessel.

Quære—whether the right of the Admiral under 6 Geo. 4. c. 49, to share in salvage for the rescue of vessels from pirates, extends to foreign ships.

All salvage, whether civil or military, is founded on the equity of remunerating private and spontaneous services rendered in the protection of the lives and property of others. Calypso, 2 Hag. 209, 218.

Quære—whether, if a custom to render mutual assistance be established, it would exclude a claim for salvage. Margaret, 2 Hag. 48, n.

Where vessels sail as consorts, and under an agreement to render mutual assistance, the Court will not entertain a claim for salvage for services rendered by one to the other. Zephyr, 2 Hag. 43.

Where a vessel being in distress, an agreement is entered into with the master of another vessel for assistance for a sum certain, the Court cannot entertain a claim from the owner for salvage. Mulgrave, 2 Hag. 77.

The Court, upon the evidence, being satisfied that it was understood and sufficiently expressed that a person, appointed "true and lawful attorney, in the name of the master, to use all possible means for the recovery of the ship and cargo," should act as agent, and that his claim for salvage should be controlled by that understanding:—Held, that such character, nevertheless, did not wholly supersede the character of salvor, so as to exclude the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty. The Court, out of the value of 4,500*l*. gave, together with costs, 225*l*. in addition to 815*l*. 15*s*. 6*d*. for disbursements. Happy Return, 2 Hag. 198.

War salvage being generally fixed at a low rate, may, on special services, in the nature of civil salvage, be increased. Sir Francis Burton, 2 Hag. 157.

In cases of civil salvage, the Court of Admiralty does not recognize the rule of proportion, but awards an equitable remuneration for the service rendered, though such remuneration is more liberally allotted in cases of large value. Arbitrators having given one-fourth of the ship, viz. 600*l*., the Court awarded out of the cargo, of the value of 38,000*l*., 1,000*l*. for contingent losses, 1,500*l*. salvage reward, and 200*l*. for the master's particular expenses.

In cases of large value, and where the service has been rendered with risk to the property of the owners, the Court, both in maritime and military salvage, allots a portion to the owners. Salacia, 2 Hag. 262—4.

In a case of derelict of extraordinary merit, where the proceeds were 600*l*., and the number of salvors four hundred, the Court inclined to give a larger sum, but finally gave only a moiety, (as no precedent of the allowance of a larger proportion could be produced,) and directed the costs to be paid out of the other moiety. Frances Mary, 2 Hag. 89.

A moiety and costs given in a case of derelict of the value of 5,668*l.*, where the salvage had been effected with great exertion and risk. Reliance, 2 Hag. 90, n.

The Court of Admiralty cannot, in a case of salvage, allow charges for repairs. Ranger, 2 Hag. 42.

The stat. 1 & 2 Geo. 4. c. 75. s. 9, requiring the parties dissatisfied with an award of Magistrates in a salvage case, to declare "within ten days after such award is made, and not afterwards," their desire of obtaining the judgment of the High Court of Admiralty; the ten days having expired, the award is conclusive; 4*l.* allowed nomine expensarum. Semble, that verbal notice to the Magistrates' clerk is not sufficient. Industry, 2 Hag. 73.

On an appeal from an award of Magistrates, in a case of salvage, the Court declined to admit further affidavits, and confirmed the award. Osiris, 2 Hag. 135.

In a cause of mixed military and civil salvage against the owners, the Court is unwilling, though no bail has been given, to disturb a valuation, not clearly excessive, made under a reference on the spot to three arbitrators chosen by the salvors and consignees of the vessel. Sir Francis Burton, 2 Hag. 156.

If the award of Magistrates is generally a reasonable reward for salvage services, the Court will not disturb it in a trifling sum, merely because the apportionment should be in some degree objectionable; it being the duty of the Court to support such awards, as far as they are not excessive, nor inconsistent with general principles. An award of two-fifths of the whole proceeds sustained; but the Court objecting to a different rate of salvage for the ship and different parts of the cargo, as unusual and inconvenient, refused to allow the salvors costs. Vesta, 2 Hag. 189.

In an appeal from a Magistrates' award in a case of salvage, their certificate of value under stat. 1 & 2 Geo. 4. c. 75, s. 9, even if not conclusive, is of great weight; and the Court, dissenting on no point from the award of one-third of the proceeds, affirmed it with costs. Brothers, 2 Hag. 195.

The primary object of stat. 1 & 2 Geo. 4. c. 75. was to provide for small and occasional services, though under the general words of the 8th section, it may be competent to the Magistrates to proceed in cases of greater magnitude, but with less prospect of advantage to the parties.

Upon an appeal from an award of Magistrates in a cause of salvage, the Court allowed a new appraisement to be made, at the prayer and expense of the owners (who had not by themselves or agents, objected to the original appraisement,) reversed the award and gave a fixed sum, together with their costs and losses, to each boat according to their respective merits, instead of a certain proportion of the value among them generally. Oscar, 2 Hag. 257.

In a cause of salvage, two persons, plaintiffs, as part of "the crew of the ship," on signing releases, dismissed to be examined as witnesses. The Pitt, 2 Hag. 149, n.

In a cause of salvage, by plea and proof, interested witnesses admitted, on the ground that they were the only witnesses. Sara Barnardina, 2 Hag. 151, n.

The Court does not consider loose conversation at the time the service is rendered, conclusive of the merits of the case, nor the quantum of reward. Salacia, 2 Hag. 265.

SCIRE FACIAS.

[See BAIL.]

Quære—Whether, hereafter, two nihils will be permitted to operate as a scire feci. Beddington v. Beddington, 7 Law J. C.P. 79, s. c. 5 Bing. 284, s. c. 2 M. & P. 479.

The Court reprobating the practice of returning nihil to writs of sci. fa., will in such cases take advantage of every trifling irregularity, to set aside the proceedings. Therefore, where the plaintiff's attorney directed the sheriff to return nihils to two writs of sci. fa., and said that "he was afraid the proceedings would come to the knowledge of the bail," the Court set them aside, on the ground of collusion between the attorney and the sheriff. Wilson v. Biden, 8 Law J. C.P. 282, s. c. 4 M. & P. 537.

Upon a scire facias upon a recognizance entered into to abide an award respecting matters in difference upon an extent in aid:—Held, that the defendant, having succeeded upon demurrer, was not entitled to costs. Rex v. Bingham, 1 C. & J. 379, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 262.

SEA-SHORE.

Upon a commission under the Great Seal, and an inquisition returned into and filed in the Petty Bag Office of the Court of Chancery, lands were seized into the King's hands, as derelict by the sea. The lord of the adjoining manor, upon petition to the Lord Chancellor, having obtained leave to traverse the inquisition, filed his return in the Petty Bag, denying that the lands were derelict, and pleading that they were formed by alluvion, or gradual deposit of soil. The Attorney General, in his replication to this traverse, took issue upon the alleged fact of alluvion, and the defendant joined issue. Upon the trial, a verdict was found for the defendant; and afterwards, upon application of the Attorney General for a new trial, the Court ordered the facts proved to be stated in a special case, which being argued, a verdict for the defendant was entered by direction of the Court.

A writ of error from this judgment, directly to the House of Lords, being brought by the Attorney General, on behalf of the Crown:—Held, that the House of Lords has jurisdiction to hear such writ of error; that it is not necessary to carry a writ of error first to the Exchequer Chamber; and that lands formed by alluvion, that is, by gradual and imperceptible deposit on the shore of the sea, belong to the lord of the adjoining manor, and not to the King jure coronæ.

A custom regulating the rights of the owners of all lands bordering upon the sea, is so general, that it need not be pleaded. Rex v. Lord Yermouth, 2 Bligh, N.S. 147.

SEDUCTION.

In an action by a father for seduction, it is not necessary to shew any acts of service done by the daughter: it is enough that she lived in the father's family under such circumstances that he had a right to the services. Maunder v. Venn, 1 M. & M. 323. [Littledale]

SEISIN.

SEQUESTRATION.

[Cornish v. Searell, 1 M. & R. 703, Dig. Law J. 464.]

A clergyman, possessed of two livings in two separate counties, was sued to outlawry; two writs of special capias utlagatum were issued to the sheriffs of the respective counties, who severally returned nulla bona save these livings. The Court, at the instance of the plaintiffs in the suit, granted a writ of sequestrari facias to the bishop of the diocese in which both the livings were, to sequester them, in order that the plaintiffs might make further application for the profits to the amount of their debt. But they refused to grant separate writs for that purpose; which was prayed, lest a partial defect might defeat the whole. In the matter of the outlawry of the Rev. Nathaniel Hinde, 9 Law J. Exch. 107, s. c. 1 C. & J. 389, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 347.

SESSIONS.

(A) When held.
(B) Jurisdiction.
(C) Appeals.

(A) When held.

[See 1 Will. 4. c. 70. s. 35, 8 Law J. Stat. 162.]

(B) Jurisdiction.

The statute 3 Geo. 4. c. 46. s. 6. empowers the Court of Quarter Sessions to discharge a forfeited recognizance in cases where the sheriff has levied part of the amount, and the party has been committed to prison for the remainder; and if, in such a case, the Sessions discharge the recognizance while the money so levied in part is in the hands of the sheriff, he must refund it to the party. Harper v. Hayton, 8 Law J. M.C. 129.

(C) Appeals.

Any rated inhabitant of a parish to which an order of removal is made, may, as a party aggrieved, appeal against the order under the 13 & 14 Chas. 2. c. 12. s. 2, and 3 W. & M. c. 11. s. 9. Rex v. the Justices of Denbighshire, 9 Law J. M.C. 109, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 616.

By a local act, the management of the parish poor was vested in the churchwardens, overseers, governors, and directors of the poor; and an appeal to them was given to any person thinking himself aggrieved by anything to be done by virtue of the act: and if the appellants should be dissatisfied with their determination, then an appeal was given to the Quarter Sessions. A parishioner having applied, for relief against a rate, to the churchwardens, overseers, governors, and directors, they, at a meeting, resolved to take no further notice of his application:—Held that, as they had not come to any determination on the subject-matter of his complaint, the parishioner could not appeal to the Quarter Sessions, but that he ought to have first applied for a mandamus to compel the churchwardens, overseers, governors, and directors to hear the appeal. Rex v. Justices of Kent, 9 B. & C. 283.

A local act for the government of a parish, appointed and incorporated certain persons as guardians and directors of the poor, giving them various powers; and, among others, a power to raise money by annuity. There was a proviso authorizing any rated inhabitant to attend their meetings and protest and object to their proceedings; his objections to be heard, and finally determined by them. There was also a power of appeal to the Sessions by any party who thought himself aggrieved by anything done in pursuance of the act, and for which no particular method of relief had been pointed out:—Held, that, where the objection of a rated inhabitant was to certain orders, made by the corporation themselves, for the payment of annuities they had granted, and of other sums of money, the party objecting was not bound to attend the corporate meeting and object, but might appeal to the Sessions.

In the case above mentioned, the appeal clause provided, that the appeal should be within four months after the cause of complaint should have arisen. The corporation having made orders for the payment of annuities granted more than four months before the appeal, but the orders for payment being within the four months:—Held, that an appeal against the orders was in time. Rex v. the Justices of Salop, 9 Law J. M.C. 111, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 145.

By the construction given to the 41st Geo. 3. c. 23. s. 6, the person who appeals against the poor rate, on the ground that a person is omitted who ought to be rated, is bound to give notice of the appeal to the person so omitted; and on failure of proof of such notice, the Sessions are not bound to hear the appeal, but may confirm the rate. Rex v. Brooke, 8 Law J. M.C. 33, s. c. 9 B. & C. 915, s. c. 4 M. & R. 719.

Semble—That where notice is given that no business will be transacted on the day usually fixed for holding the Sessions, but that the Sessions will be adjourned for business until a future day, a notice of appeal given in time for that future day, according to the practice of the Sessions, will be sufficient.

And even, if a notice of appeal should be held insufficient by the Sessions, the Court will exercise a discretionary power over the Sessions practice, and, if they think it reasonable, will order the appeal to be heard. Rex v. the Justices of Hampshire, 7 Law J. M.C. 9.

An act of parliament authorised a conviction by two magistrates, and gave a power of appeal, upon he person entering into recognizances and giving notice in writing, to the convicting magistrates, of his intention to appeal. A person convicted under this act expressed his intention to appeal; entered into the recognizances, and requested the magistrates' clerk to prepare the notice for him, but the latter declined so to do. The magistrates told the appellant, that they were then obliged to separate; but that if he left the notices at any time that day with their clerk, his so doing should be good service upon them. He did not send the notices until shortly before the Sessions; and for want of a proper notice the Sessions refused to hear the appeal. The appellant swore, that he believed at the time that he had done all that was necessary to secure his right of appeal:—Held, that the magistrates ought either to have waited together a reasonable time to give the appellant an opportunity to prepare his notice, or should have directed their clerk to do it for him; and that the appeal ought therefore to be heard. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Gloucestershire, 7 Law J. M.C. 7.

A notice of appeal against an order of removal, signed by the attorney for the overseers of the appellant parish, is sufficient. Rex v. the Justices of Monmouth, 7 Law J. M.C. 95, s. c. 8 B. & C. 127.

A notice of appeal pursuant to 57 Geo. 3. c. 94. s. 2. against a county rate, need not state the grounds of objection to the rate.

If the appellants profess in their notice to state the grounds, they ought not, on the hearing of the appeal, to be limited to those grounds: but if the Sessions should be dissatisfied that such notice has misled the other party, they may adjourn the hearing of the appeal. Rex v. the Justices of Westmoreland, 8 Law J. M.C. 70, s. c. 10 B. & C. 226.

A notice of appeal against a county rate, made in conformity with 55 Geo. 3. c. 51, by reason of inequality, ought, in the terms of the act, to state the ground of appeal to be, that the parish intending to appeal "is rated at a higher proportion of the pound sterling, according to the fair annual value of the rateable property therein, than has been fixed and declared by the Sessions as the basis of the rate. And, consequently, therefore, a notice of appeal, which stated the ground of appeal to be, that the rate was unequal and defective, inasmuch as the appellant parish was assessed at a higher proportion of the pound sterling according to the fair annual value, &c. than the respondent parish was charged according to the fair annual value, &c., was held to be defective; as both parishes might have been valued too low, and yet the appellant parish might have no reason to complain with reference to the basis on which the whole rate was made. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Blackawton, 8 Law J. M.C. 123, s. c. 10 B. & C. 792.

A notice of appeal given by a person convicted under the Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. 4. c. 83. s. 4, is sufficient, in stating the grounds of the appeal, by stating that the defendant is not guilty of the offence. Such a notice denies all the facts which are essential to constitute the offence. Rex v. the Justices of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 9 Law J. M.C. 117, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 933.

Where an order of removal has not been executed so as to give time for notice of trial of an appeal at the next Sessions, the appeal need not be entered until the Sessions following the next: but it should be then entered and tried; notice of entering and trying having been previously given. Rex v. the Justices of Southampton, 7 Law J. M.C. 77, s. c. 8 B & C. 641.

Semble—That it is unnecessary to enter and respite an appeal at the next Sessions, where the order of removal is served so late as to render it impossible to try the appeal at those Sessions. Rex v. the Justices of Kent, 8 B. & C. 639, s. c. 3 M. & R. 15.

Although the Sessions should in general grant a motion to enter an appeal against an order of removal, they are not bound to grant a motion to enter and respite an appeal, without inquiring into the circumstances which cause the necessity for the latter part of the motion.

Accordingly, notice was given of an intention to enter and try an appeal at the next Sessions; but, at the Sessions, the appellants found they could not try by reason of the absence of a material witness. The parties who were to be respondents had come prepared to try. A motion was made upon affidavit to enter and adjourn the appeal. The Sessions would not accede to this, except upon the terms of paying the costs of the day to the other side. This was refused; and the appeal was not entered:—Held, by the Court of King's Bench, that the Sessions were right; and the Court refused to order the appeal to be then received, even upon an offer to pay all the costs. Rex v. the Justices of Monmouthshire, 9 Law J. M.C. 116, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 895.

The Sessions are not warranted in refusing to hear an appeal against an order of removal, because the appellants do not produce the pauper; they tendering evidence that he had absconded, and that they had bonâ fide used due diligence to find him out.

Nor are they warranted in so refusing, although the appellants had previously obtained an adjournment, to enable them to find out the pauper, upon an understanding that no further time should be applied for. Rex v. the Justices of Cornwall, 9 Law J. M.C. 82.

Where, upon the hearing of an appeal, a former order of Sessions, quashing an order of removal between the same parishes, is relied upon by one party, it is competent to the other party to give evidence of the grounds upon which that order of Sessions was made; and if it appear that they were independent of the merits, the order is not conclusive. Rex v. the Justices of Worcestershire, 7 Law J. M.C. 72, s. c. 8 B. & C. 254.

When the respondent parish has made out a primâ facie case to warrant the removal, it will be sufficient for the appellant parish to disprove its own liability, by shewing that a settlement has been gained, to which, if the parish were ascertained, the removal ought to have been made. The burthen of ascertaining which is the parish, falls upon the respondents, and not upon the appellants. Rex v. the Inhabitants of St. Mary, Beverley, 9 Law J. M.C. 17, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 201.

Where a party enters an appeal against poor-rates, which he afterwards abandons, the Sessions may confirm the rate, quoad the subject-matter of the appeal, and award costs to the respondents, to the time of the abandonment; such costs to be taxed by the clerk of the peace; whose act, in ascertaining the costs, is to be deemed the act of the Sessions, as being adopted by them, and embodied in their adjudication. Rex v. the Justices of Norfolk, 9 Law J. M.C. 73.

Where a special case shewed facts, some of which pointed to a weekly, and others to a yearly hiring, but the Sessions had not drawn any conclusion of their own from the fact, whether the hiring was weekly or yearly, the Court refused to draw the conclusion; but sent the case back to the Sessions. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Road, 9 Law J. M.C. 8, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 362.

An order of removal on the complaint of the parish officers of A, was made for a removal to B. By mistake, the order was filled up as made on the complaint of the parish officers of B. Upon an appeal against the order, the mistake was discovered. The Sessions refused to amend under 5 Geo. 2. c. 19; and allowed the appeal:—but held, that they ought to have amended; and a mandamus ordered that they should. Rex v. the Justices of Durham, 8 Law J. M.C. 103.

Where the Sessions have decided an appeal without any reservation, they cannot, at a subsequent Session, enter a continuance of the appeal, on the ground of perjury having been committed on the hearing, and then proceed to re-hear the appeal. Having once finally decided, they cannot, at a subsequent Session, review the decision. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Middlewich, 9 Law J. M.C. 44.

SET-OFF.

(A) Where allowed, in general.
(B) Costs and Judgments.
(C) Pleadings and Evidence.

(A) Where allowed, in general.

In an action for money had and received, by the assignees of a bankrupt to recover the produce of bills sent to a creditor before bankruptcy to be discounted, and applied to a particular purpose, and which has been appropriated to the payment of his own debt, the creditor is not entitled to set off his debt. Buchanan v. Finlay, 7 Law J. K.B. 314, s. c. 9 B. & C. 738, s. c. 4 M. & R. 593.

Against a note given to the husband, for a debt due to the wife before marriage, and sued upon by him alone, the defendant may set off debts due from the husband to him; but he cannot set off debts due to him from the wife before marriage.

In an action by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note, the defendant is not entitled to set off a debt due from the payee to himself upon a matter independent of and collateral to the note; although the note was indorsed over after it had become due. Borough v. Moss, 8 Law J. K.B. 287, s. c. 10 B. & C. 558.

(B) Costs and Judgments.

Costs payable to the parties in the course of interlocutory proceedings in a cause, may be set off against each other, notwithstanding the attorney's lien. Thus, where, in an indictment, both defendant and prosecutor gave notice of trial, both made default, and there were rules upon each to pay the costs of the day to the other,—it was held, that the costs upon one of those rules might be set off against the costs of the other, notwithstanding the lien of the attorney.

But where the payment of such interlocutory costs is made a condition precedent to the party having the benefit of any proceeding, such costs cannot be set off against interlocutory costs which may become due to the party in a subsequent stage of the cause.

They may, however, be set off against interlocutory costs due to the party before the costs which are to be paid as a condition precedent became payable. Rex v. Burke, 7 Law J. K.B. 330.

Costs recovered in one action, cannot be set off against costs of the other party in another action, on which he has a verdict, but on which a new trial is pending; but, semble, that execution for the costs actually recovered, may be suspended for a short time, till the rule in the other action is determined. Masterman v. Malin, 9 Law J. C.P. 171, s. c. 7 Bing. 435, s. c. 5 M. & P. 324.

Where a plaintiff brought two actions (trespass and detinue), arising out of the same transaction, for trifling causes, and obtained a verdict of 40s. in one, and a verdict was found for the defendant in the other, the Court, upon motion on the part of the defendant, founded on affidavits stating the object, nature, and result of the actions, and facts impeaching the plaintiff, and that she was not to be found, ordered, that the costs incurred by the defendant, in the action wherein he was successful, should be set off against those of the suit in which he had failed; and that notwithstanding the objection of the plaintiff's attorney, who objected to it his claim for costs and his general lien. Lane v. Pearce, 12 Price, 742.

Where an action is brought for a simple contract debt, which is not denied, the Court, on motion, will set off a judgment obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff in that action; subject to the lien of the attorney in the judgment for his costs. Russell v. May, 7 Law J. K.B. 88.

(C) Pleadings and Evidence.

If A agrees to do work for a certain sum of money and afterwards B purchases some of the materials, which are worked up by A, the money expended on that account must be set off, and cannot be given in evidence on the general issue. Allinson v. Davies, Pen. A.C. 82.

Where the parties to the record are at issue upon a plea of set-off by the defendant, it is not competent for those who represent the plaintiff to give evidence, shewing that the plaintiff on the record is only the nominal plaintiff; and that, as regards the real plaintiff, the defendant has no set-off. Such an alteration of the parties to the action, if admissible in evidence, must be specially pleaded in reply to the plea. Wilton v. Buxton, 7 Law J. K.B. 91.

SETTLEMENT, MARRIAGE.

(A) Validity.
(B) Construction.

(A) Validity.

A and B, in contemplation of marriage, made a settlement of real estate belonging to B, the wife, and of personalty belonging to the husband: a marriage was solemnized, but, some time afterwards, it was discovered to be void: the parties then executed a deed purporting to revoke the settlement, and, some time afterwards, executed, in contemplation of marriage, a new settlement, altogether different from the former as to the provisions in favour of issue:—Held, that, under such circumstances, the first settlement was not binding on the parties; and that the rights of the issue were regulated by the second settlement. Robinson v. Dickenson, 7 Law J. Chanc. 70, s. c. 3 Russ. 399.

A, being tenant for life of certain premises, with a power of limiting a jointure to his wife, a settlement is executed on his marriage, by which he demises the land, of which he was tenant for life, to trustees for a term of ninety-nine years, on trust to secure the payment of a yearly sum to his wife, as pin-money during the coverture, and he limits a jointure to her after his death; the same parties, on the same day, execute another instrument, by which A covenants not to sell or incumber the lands comprised in the term, and it is declared, that, if he shall at any time sell or incumber them, or attempt so to do, the trustees of the term shall receive the rents and profits, and apply them, as they may think fit, for the maintenance and support of A, or his wife, or children, or issue: the covenant and this proviso are fraudulent and void, as against a subsequent incumbrancer of A's life estate. Phipps v. Lord Ennismore, 4 Russ. 131.

(B) Construction.

[Collier v. Squire, 3 Russ. 467, Dig. Law J. 470. Edwards v. Alliston, 4 Russ. 78, Dig. Law. J. 470.]

By a settlement made before marriage, part of the wife's fortune was settled for the use of the husband and wife, and then the children of the marriage; and it was stipulated "that all other the personal estate to which the wife was, or might be or become, entitled, should be permitted to vest absolutely in the husband by right of marriage:" the wife survived the husband:—Held, that a contingent reversionary interest, which was in the wife at the date of the settlement, and which continued reversionary and contingent during the whole period of coverture, belonged to the wife, and not to the executors of the husband. Farrer v. Grant, 7 Law J. Chanc. 95.

By a marriage settlement, a portion to which the wife was entitled was assigned, in trust, for her separate use during the coverture, and in case she should die in her husband's lifetime, then in trust for him during his life, and after the death of the survivor, in trust for the issue of the marriage living at the death of the survivor, as the wife should appoint, and in default of such issue, in trust for such persons as the wife should, by deed or will appoint: the wife survived the husband:—Held, that she was entitled to the interest of the portion for her life. Tunstall v. Trappes, (Margaret Gosling's case,) 3 Sim. 312.

By a marriage settlement, the ultimate trust declared of a copyhold estate (the property of the husband), was for his executors or administrators, and a similar trust was declared with respect to the executors or administrators of the wife, as to a copyhold estate which was her property. The wife survived and took out administration to her husband:—Held, that she was not entitled to hold the former estate, for her own exclusive benefit, but for the benefit of herself and her husband's next of kin. Wellman v. Bowring, 3 Sim. 328.

By a marriage settlement, stock was vested in trustees, upon trust, to pay the dividends to the husband during coverture, and to the wife during her life, in case she survived him, and from and after her decease, in case there should be any children of the marriage then living, then upon trust for such of the said children as should attain twenty-one or be married, with a direction, that if all or any of such children should be under twenty-one and unmarried, to apply the dividends for their maintenance; and in case the wife should die without leaving any child or children at the time of her decease, or in case there should be one or more such child or children then living, yet all of them should die under twenty-one and unmarried, upon trust, if the husband should survive the wife and all such children, to pay the dividends to him during his life, and from and after the death of the survivor of the husband and wife, and from and after the death of the said children, in case there should be any, and all of them should die under age and unmarried, in trust for certain other persons. The wife survived the husband, and at her death there was no child of the marriage living; but a son, who died in her lifetime, had attained twenty-one and married:—Held, that the stock vested in that son absolutely. Torres v. Franco, 1 Russ. & M. 649.

Under an order of reference to one of the Masters of the Court of Chancery, B, who proposed to marry C, a ward of the Court, sent in a statement of facts and proposals, in which he stated that, under the will of his grandfather, he was tenant in tail in remainder, after the death of his two brothers, without issue, of divers manors, &c., of the value of 10,000*l.* a year; and in the event of his brother G dying without issue male, or becoming entitled to the said manors, &c. under the will of his grandfather, he, B, was entitled under the will of M B, his grandmother, to a life estate, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, in certain manors and lands of the value of 5,000*l.* a year; and thereupon he proposed to settle to the uses of the marriage, a sum of 2,000*l.* sterling, to which he was entitled in possession, and to covenant that in case either of the limitations in his favour, contained in the wills of his grandfather or grandmother, should take effect, he would in twelve months next after coming into possession of the estates thereby devised, convey so much thereof as should be of the clear annual value of 1,500*l.* to trustees, in trust, to pay to C, (the intended wife) in case she should survive him, so much of the rents as with her own fortune would make up a jointure of 2,000*l.* per annum; and to charge the estate so to be conveyed with the payment of 8,000*l.*, in addition to the fortune provided for younger children, and upon the same ultimate trusts as the 2,000*l.* then proposed to be assigned, and, subject thereto, to limit the estate to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail male, &c.

By an indenture of marriage settlement, made upon the basis of these proposals, and under the authority of an order of the Court, B assigned 2,000*l.* to trustees, upon the trusts specified in the proposals; and then after covenanting to settle the estates of the wife, if and when they should vest according to the proposals and orders, it was further witnessed that, in pursuance of the order confirming the report on the proposals, and in consideration of the marriage and the settlement of the fortune of the intended wife, B, the intended husband, covenanted that "in case at any time during his life he should, under the limitations contained in the wills of his grandfather and grandmother, or in either of them, or otherwise, become seised or entitled to all or any of the manors, &c. thereby devised by any estate of inheritance in possession, or otherwise capable of being settled or bound in law or equity, he would within twelve months after he should become so seised, convey and settle so much of the said manors, &c., as would be of the yearly value of 1,500*l.*, upon the trusts specified in the proposals and orders." But as to the 8,000*l.* additional portion for younger children, mentioned in the proposals, no notice was taken in the indenture of settlement.

I, the brother of B, upon the death of his grandfather's widow, came into possession as tenant in tail of the lands devised by the will of the grandfather, and suffered a recovery of those lands, declaring the use to himself in fee simple; and upon the death of G, another brother, B came into possession as tenant for life, under the will of his grandmother, of the lands devised by her will.

Of the marriage between B and C there was issue a son and a daughter.

Upon a bill filed against B, on behalf of the daughter (an infant) to have the sum of 8,000*l.* raised by sale or mortgage of the interest of B in the lands devised to him by the will of his grandmother:—Held, that the event upon which those lands were charged with the sum of 8,000*l.* had not happened. Willis v. Robinson, 2 Bligh, N.S. 101, s. c. 1 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 469.

A, by marriage articles, bound himself "to pay to H, upon his marriage with E, (the said H settling all the estates and money he was then entitled to on the issue of the marriage, and a suitable jointure to the fortune E gave him,) the sum of 5,000*l.*" H, in the same articles bound himself "to settle all the estate and money which he was then entitled to upon the issue of E, and a jointure of 5,000*l.* a year." Four years after the date of these articles and the marriage, H acquired an estate, which was limited to the issue of the marriage, with a power reserved to H, under which, after a lapse of twenty-six years, he by deed appointed to his wife E, 500*l.* per annum by way of jointure, and 6,000*l.* to the younger children of the marriage as portions:—Held, in the court below, and on appeal, that this was a performance of the condition upon which A contracted to give H a marriage portion of 5,000*l.*, and that so much of that sum as was not paid on the marriage became due on that event, and was a charge on the estate of A, payable with interest from the date of the marriage.

The original articles were not produced in the cause, but it was in proof that H was the executor of A; that the house of H, in Ireland, had been occupied by a French rebel army, and his papers ransacked and scattered; that L was the executor of H, and that the houses of H and L had been searched, but that the original articles could not be found. Under these circumstances, secondary evidence, viz. a copy of the articles sent with a case laid before counsel, a charge in the solicitor's bill for the copy and case, a recital of the articles in an act of parliament for settling lands on the issue of the marriage, and a deed appointing a jointure according to the articles and portions to children, under a power reserved by the act, were admitted as proof of the existence and contents of the articles.

This decision was affirmed on appeal. Gore v. Lord Lorton, 2 Bligh, N.S. 236, s.c. 1 Dow. & C. 190.

P being possessed of lands for a term of lives, with a covenant for perpetual renewal, by articles made upon the marriage of his son in the year 1743, covenanted to convey his estate and interest in the lands to W and other trustees, to the use of himself for life, remainder to the use of his son T for life, remainder subject to a jointure to the sons of the marriage successively in tail male, reversion to P, the settlor. In 1749 the reversion of the lands subject to the lease, was granted to W, as trustee for P, to whom it was soon afterwards granted over by W.

P, by his will, dated in 1776, devised all his real estate, including his leases for lives, in trust for T, his son, for life, remainder to P, (son of T,) his grandson for life, remainder to the sons of P, the grandson, successively in tail male, with divers remainders over, reversion to the heirs of P, the devisor. The testator, by his will, declared that, "If his grandson, P, should not settle such interest in that part of the lands which was settled on his father's intermarriage, and which he would become entitled to on the testator's and his father's decease, to the uses to which the testator's estates were thereby limited upon the desire of his father, his son T, at his will and pleasure, and in his discretion, might and was by the will empowered to deprive P, the grandson, of the life estate in the lands thereby limited to him, so as such deprivation should not alter the limitations in remainder;" and in a subsequent clause, he having provided, "that in case his grandson P happened to die without issue male, and should settle the interest which was settled on his father's marriage in part of the real estates of the testator, and to the same uses as limited by the will, so that his acquisitions should go together," he gave to P a power to charge the lands devised with portions for daughters; and in a subsequent part of the will he gave a power to P to charge a jointure upon the real estate of inheritance thereby limited to him, provided he settles his said interest in part of the real estate to the uses therein mentioned.

P, the testator, died in 1769; T, his son, entered upon the lands under the limitations of the will, and remained in possession during his life. In 1776, T and P, the grandson, upon the occasion, and in consideration of his marriage and a portion, conveyed the term for lives with the right of covenant for perpetual renewal, in trust, to secure a jointure to the wife, and subject thereto for the use of T for life, remainder to P for life, remainder to secure another jointure, and subject thereto to the sons of the marriage, and in default of issue male, to the trustees for a term to raise portions for daughters, and subject thereto to T in fee.

Upon a bill filed by a party claiming under this settlement, against parties claiming the reversion, to compel a specific performance of the covenant for mewal:—held, that according to the limitations, nd upon the events above stated, the term of the nds was not merged in the fee; that no case of lection arose upon the will of Peter Rutledge, binding those who took under that will, to leave the term a question to go according to the limitations of the ill. Rutledge v. Rutledge, 2 Bligh, N.S. 352, s. c. Dow. & Cl. A.C. 331.

The portion of a daughter, held to have been ested in her, notwithstanding her death in her father's lifetime.

Construction of clauses in a marriage settlement, s to the wife's power of disposition over a fund. Fry v. Lord Sherborne, 8 Law J. Chanc. 25, s. c. 3 Sim. 243.

In a marriage settlement, reciting that the father f the wife had agreed to make a further provision or his daughter equal to his younger child or children, he covenanted to give or secure to the trusts f the settlement, as large a share of his property as e should give to any of his other younger children, o take effect on the death of the survivor of himself nd his then wife; and that, if he died intestate, or mitted to make the provision before covenanted or, there should be paid to the trustees of the settlement as great a share of his property, as any younger child should in that event become entitled o:—Held, that the decree of the Vice Chancellor, declaring that those interested under the settlement were entitled to a further provision, equal only to hat which any younger child took upon the death of the covenantor, and without reference to advancements made by the covenantor during his life, was erroneous; and that the parties interested under the settlement were entitled, on the settlor's death, to a share of his property equal to what any of his younger children either received during his life, after the date of the settlement, by way of advancement, or took upon his death. Willis v. Black, 7 Law J. Chanc. 3, s. c. 4 Russ. 170.

In a marriage settlement, reciting that I, his intended wife, was possessed of certain goods, and that it had been agreed, that, in case she survived him, she should have the goods and such articles as might be bought in lieu thereof, for her own use; and in case she should die before him, that she might dispose of the goods, covenanted with trustees that he would not dispose of the goods without the consent of I; that he would purchase new articles in lieu of those which might be worn out or disposed of; that if she survived him, she should have the goods for her own use, and if he survived her, she should dispose of them, subject to his life-interest. No assignment of the goods was made to the trustees. N and I separated after their marriage, and I demised the goods to F, as a yearly tenant:—Held, first, that the goods were, notwithstanding the settlement, the property of N, and might be seised under a fi. fa. against him; but, secondly, that they could not be seised for his debt during the continuance of the demise to F. Izod v. Lamb, 1 C. & J. 35.

SETTLEMENT OF THE POOR.

[See Poor.]

SEWERS.

No person is chargeable to the sewers rate in respect of a sewer from which he derives no benefit; although it may be within the jurisdiction and under the controul and management of the commissioners, who may legally rate him for another sewer or sewers. Rex v. the Commissioners of Sewers of the Tower Hamlets, 7 Law J. K.B. 131, s. c. 9 B. & C. 517, s. c. 4 M. & R. 365.

Commissioners of sewers may order works to be done without a previous presentment shewing that they are necessary. And it is consequently no objection to a rate that it is to defray expenses in respect of works which were undertaken without being preceded by a presentment.

Commissioners of sewers may include in their rate, as expenses of working their commission, certain legal expenses incurred in supporting their own proceedings, where the expenses had been fairly and bonâ fide incurred; although in the rate they may press upon individuals who successfully resisted those proceedings.

A rate made apparently in the alternative, for works done or to be done:—Held, to be a good rate, it clearly appearing from the context that the rate was made in respect of work done and to be done. Rex v. the Commissioners of Sewers for the Tower Hamlets, 9 Law J. M.C. 30, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 22.

The Court will not, upon an application to discharge an amerciament, enter into a disputed question, as to the validity of the practice of the Court of Sewers.

Where A was fined by commissioners of sewers, for refusing to be re-sworn upon a standing jury, the Court discharged the fine, it being admitted that it was not usual to re-swear the jury, except upon the issuing of a new commission. Ex parte Taylor, 3 Y. & J. 91.

SHEEP-STEALING.

If on an indictment for stealing "one sheep," it appear that the animal stolen was under a year old, the prisoner must be acquitted, as he ought to have been indicted for stealing "one lamb." If a ewe is stolen, it must be so called in the indictment, and so a lamb must be called a lamb; and the term sheep is proper only where the animal stolen is a wether. Rex v. William Birket, 4 C. & P. 216. ### (A) Rights and Privileges.

It is not contrary to the policy of the law, that the sheriff, although the latter has not given up the bail-bond. But whether an action can or cannot be maintained under such circumstances, an action of trespass and false imprisonment appears not to be the proper form of action, inasmuch as the plaintiff can show but one act of imprisonment, and that act can be justified under the writ. Preece v. Griffith, 1 Law J. K.B. 10, s. c. 5 M. & R. 120.

The omission to indorse upon a writ of ca. sa. a description of the defendant's residence and occupation is not in general a ground for setting aside the writ as between the parties. But, under special circumstances, it may be a ground for setting aside the writ, where, if it were allowed to remain, it might subject the sheriff to an action, at the suit of the plaintiff, who had been guilty of the omission. Clark v. Palmer, 7 Law J. K.B. 165, s. c. 3 B. & C. 153, s. c. 4 M. & R. 141.

(c) Bringing in the Body.

Where the sheriff has properly taken a bail-bond, and is afterwards attached for not bringing into court the body of the defendant, he is liable only to the amount of the penalty in the bail-bond, and the costs of the attachment. Rex v. the Sheriff of Devon, 8 Law J. K.B. 385, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 159.

Attachment against sheriff for not bringing in body. Harrison v. ——, 1 Tyrw. 531.

Practice of discharging an attachment against a sheriff, for not bringing in the body. Smith v. Parsons, 1 Tyrw. 425.

(d) Executions and Extents.

Where a woman has cohabited with a man for several years and passed as his wife, it seems that she cannot maintain trespass against a sheriff for taking goods in execution against the man, they being in the house where the parties resided; but it having been left to the jury to say, whether they thought that the property might not have been given up by the woman to the man during cohabitation, and they having found in the affirmative,—Held, that their verdict is conclusive. Edwards v. Farebrother, 7 Law J. C.P. 72, s. c. 2 M. & P. 293.

The sheriff seized under a fi. fa. issued by a creditor of one L, goods which had previously been conveyed by L to the plaintiff by bill of sale, of which the sheriff had notice. Both parties refusing to indemnify the sheriff, and the plaintiff having sued him in trespass—The Court ordered the proceedings to be stayed until the plaintiff indemnified the sheriff. Beeson v. Dawson, 8 Law J. C.P. 296, s. c. 6 Bing. 566, s. c. 4 M. & P. 387.

Semble—That the sheriff is liable to an action of trover at the suit of the assignees of a bankrupt, whose goods the sheriff has seized under a writ of fi. fa. against the bankrupt's goods; such seizure being made after an act of bankruptcy; though the sheriff had no knowledge of it—sed quære. Dillon v. Langley, 9 Law J. K.B. 143, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 131.

The sheriff being in possession of goods of one L under a writ of fi. fa. issued at the suit of one P, assented to an arrangement, whereby the goods were delivered over to P in satisfaction of his debt, a portion of them being handed over to the officer to secure his poundage. Before the issuing of the fi. fa. L had committed an act of bankruptcy, whereupon a commission was sued out after the delivery f the goods by the sheriff's officer to P:—Held, that ich delivery amounted to a conversion, for which the heriff was liable in trover at the suit of the assigees of L—[But see the note at the end of the report.] Carlisle v. Garland, 9 Law J. C.P. 96, s. c. 7 Bing. 98, s. c. 5. M. & P. 102.

The acts of a special bailiff appointed by a bailiff n execution, who indemnifies the sheriff, are equialent to the acts of the plaintiff himself; and herefore, where a plaintiff, in execution upon a udgment by confession, appointed a special bailiff, who seized and sold goods during two days, for part of which he received the money, and for the est gave credit, before an act of bankruptcy was committed by the defendant; it was held, that the plaintiff was entitled to retain the proceeds of those sales against the assignees, although the fi. fa. was not returnable before the act of bankruptcy. Higgins v. M'Adam, 3 Y. & J. 1.

If a sheriff, contrary to the 8 Ann. c. 14. s. 1, remove the goods, and sell them without paying rent (up to a year if due) to the landlord; and the goods sell for less than the rent, the sheriff cannot compel the landlord to accept the sum which they produced on the sale. The landlord is entitled to such damages as a jury may think he has sustained by the removal. Calvert v. Joliffe, 9 Law J. K.B. 240, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 418.

In an action against the sheriff for not retaining for the landlord a year's rent due from the tenant, on a levy at the suit of an execution creditor, the plaintiff, at the trial, released the tenant in order that he might prove the tenancy:—Held, that the release did not operate quasi payment, but that the sheriff was still liable for the amount of the rent.

The statute 8 Anne, c. 14. s. 1. is not confined to a demise of an entire messuage, but equally applies to a letting of part of a house. Thurgood v. Richardson, 9 Law J. C.P. 121, s. c. 7 Bing. 428, s. c. 5 M. & P. 266.

Semble—That, under a writ of venditioni exponas, issued under an extent at the suit of the Crown, the duty of the sheriff is, to sell by auction the goods seized, without any extra charge beyond the poundage to which he is legally entitled. If, from any extraordinary services rendered by him, a greater remuneration is sought for, the mode of obtaining it is by application to the Court, under 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. s. 14, or (as is adopted in practice) by petition to the Commissioners of the Revenue Board, at whose instance the extent issued. Rex v. Jones, 9 Law J. Exch. 2, s. c. 1 C. & J. 140.

(e) Return of Writs.

Where there are conflicting claims to goods taken in execution, the Court will not assist the sheriff by giving him time to return the writ, unless he has promptly, as well as impartially, discharged his duty.

Accordingly, where the sheriff's officer, though urged on behalf of the plaintiff to sell, had neglected to do so for so long a time, that (the defendant becoming bankrupt) the right of the plaintiff to the fruits of his execution became endangered by the 16 Geo. 4. c. 16. s. 108, the Court would not give the sheriff time to return the writ. Colley v. Hardy, 8 Law J. K.B. 121, s. c. 5 M. & R. 123.

The Court granted time for the sheriff to return a fi. fa. under which he had levied on the 2nd, but had not sold until the 24th of May, a commission of bankrupt having issued in the interval, the plaintiff refusing to indemnify him against the assignees, who had claimed. Ex parte Sheriff of Yorkshire, 9 Law J. C.P. 228.

An attorney sends a fi. fa. to the sheriff by the post, with directions to forward a warrant to a particular officer, whom the attorney names. Whether the sheriff would or would not have been discharged by a timely application to the Court, it is too late for him to apply to amend the return of nulla bona at the end of five months, an action having been brought, and the plaintiff having declared in the interval. Ex parte Sheriff of Gloucester, 9 Law J. C.P. 229.

(C) Fees and Costs.

Where there is an express promise, a sheriff's officer may maintain an action for fees. Ormerod v. Foskett, Pea. A.C. 77. [Kenyon]

If a plaintiff direct the sheriff to return nihil to a writ of scire facias, and the latter refuse to return the writ until he has been paid a fee, the plaintiff is not entitled to the costs of applying to the Court, in calling on the sheriff to return the writ. Beddington v. Beddington, 7 Law J. C.P. 79, s. c. 5 Bing. 284, s. c. 2 M. & P. 479.

If a sheriff defends an action for a false return, as well as he can, he may recover his costs from the sureties of his bailiff, who executed the writ; though he has a verdict against him, on the ground that evidence was not produced, which, in another and subsequent suit between other parties, involving the same question, was obtained. Semble, that, if in such an action, after he has obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, he compromises the suit, with the assent of some of the sureties, by paying a less sum for damages than would be recoverable, and a less sum for costs than were incurred, he may recover his own costs against the surety who did not assent, if it appears that the compromise was, under the circumstances reasonable. Semble, also, that in such a case the words "costs of any application to the Court touching or concerning any matter wherein the bailiff should act or assume to act as bailiff," will comprise the costs of an application to the Court to set aside the judgment on which the execution was founded, the return to which gave rise to the action against the sheriff. Farebrother v. Worsley, 5 C. & P. 103. ## (A) Property in Ships.

(a) Registry.

The 4 Geo. 4. c. 41. s. 25, incorporated in 6 Geo. 4. c. 110. s. 27, does not give authority to Magistrates in respect of the detention of a ship's register upon the mere complaint of the owners, unless there has been a refusal to deliver it up to the custom-house officers.

Nor, semble, does the act apply to a case where the person who detains the register has a lien upon it for advances made on account of the ship. Bowen v. Fox, 8 Law J. M.C. 68, s. c. 10 B. & C. 41, s. c. 5 M. & R. 4.

The master and part owner of a ship, compelled by stress of weather to put in to a certain port on a voyage, incurred debts there in respect of the ship, for which he was arrested. Upon this he sent to the ship-agents the certificate of registry, accompanied by a letter, in which he stated that he lodged it with them as a security for the payment of all demands and charges on account of the vessel since she had been in port; adding, that he hoped it would be satisfactory to them. The agents received the register, but did not pay the demands, nor would they return the register to the master:—Held, that the receipt of the register on the terms in the letter did not create any implied contract on the part of the agents to pay the demands; but that the terms of the letter rather evidenced a promise on the part of the master, that the ship should not leave the port till those demands were satisfied. Bowen v. Fox, 4 C. & P. 452. [Tenterden]

(b) Sale.

The Court of Admiralty does not interfere in case of adverse title; nor does 6 Geo. 4. c. 110. extend its jurisdiction, or make ships more absolutely transferable under a conditional bill of sale for the purpose of security, than before.

A warrant of arrest refused for the purpose of transferring the possession to the holders of such bill of sale. Fruit Preserver, 2 Hag. 181.

(c) Mortgage.

A vessel being sold under a decree of the Court of Admiralty, in a suit of subtraction of wages,—the Court, having no cognizance of mortgagees, will not order the surplus of the proceeds to be paid to a mortgagee to whom possession had never been given; but will direct such surplus to remain in the registry, subject to such order as may come to the Court. Portsea, 2 Hag. 84.

The interest of a mortgagee is not a question for the decision of the Admiralty Court. Exmouth, 2 Hag. 88, n.

(B) Owners.

(a) Rights.

Messrs. F. & Co. chartered the plaintiff's ship for three voyages, and covenanted by the charter-party to pay for the provisions and seamen's wages. On the return of the vessel from the first voyage, the charterers removed the anchors and cables to the defendants' wharf, the vessel then lying alongside it. A few days afterwards, the ship was arrested under an Admiralty warrant by the holder of a bottomry bond, given by the captain of the charterers for the outfit of the ship and provisions. The ship was afterwards sold under a decree of the Admiralty, but the cables and anchors were not included in the catalogue, and the plaintiff demanded them before the sale, but not afterwards:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover the cables and anchors in an action of trover against the defendants, although the jury found that they had been removed by the charterers, to avoid the process of the Admiralty Court, and not in the due course of business. Held also, that the removal was no injury to the plaintiff's reversionary interest, as the three voyages, for which the ship was chartered, were not completed at the time of the sale. Ferguson v. Cristall, 7 Law C.P. 91, s. c. 5 Bing. 205, s. c. 2 M. & P. 524.

An action is maintainable by a ship's husband, who is also part-owner, against one of several other part-owners, for his proportion of outfit, although there was no express promise; part-owners of ships being tenants in common, and not joint tenants, and each separately liable for his proportion of outfit.

Where the dealings between the parties are on the footing of one part-owner having a larger share of the ship than appears by the register, such part-owner is liable to the ship's husband, in proportion of such larger share. Helme v. Smith, 9 Law J. C.P. 206, s. c. 7 Bing. 709, s. c. 5 M. & P. 744.

(b) Liabilities.

[Colvin v. Newberry, 2 M. & R. 47, Dig. Law J. 479.]

The owner of a ship is not liable for money advanced to the master, and expended by him in the necessary use of the ship, unless the money is advanced expressly for that purpose. Thacker v. Marten, 2 M. & M. 79. [Tenterden]

In an action against one of the owners, for work done to a vessel, by the order of the ship's husband, such owner will be liable, unless it be shewn that the dealing was, that the person who directed the work to be done should be looked to exclusively. Thompson v. Finden, 4 C. & P. 158.

In an action against the owner of a ship for goods supplied, the master is a competent witness to prove the ownership. Rowcroft v. Basset, Pea. A.C. 199.

(C) Masters and Commanders.

[See post, H.]

The master of a merchant ship has authority over the mariners, to enforce obedience to his lawful commands, for the navigation of the vessel and preservation of good order; and, in case of disobedience or disorderly conduct, may inflict corporal punishment, moderate and proportionate to the offence. Lamb v. Burnett, 9 Law J. Exch. 55, s. c. 1 C. & J. 291, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 265.

The captain of an insured ship, which has been injured by perils of the seas, is not justified in selling the ship, instead of repairing it, unless he either s not the means of getting the repairs done at the ice where the vessel is obliged to put in, or cannot t them done except at such an expense as would ıder it undoubtedly improper to repair, if the ship ıre not insured; or has not money in his possision sufficient to pay for the repairs, nor is in a nation to raise it by loan or otherwise, except at ch an extravagant rate as would prevent a prudent an, in the exercise of a sound and vigorous judgent, from undertaking the repairs under such cirmstances. Somes v. Sugrue, 4 C. & P. 276. [Tindal]

(D) SEAMEN.

[Provision for the relief of the widows of comissioned and warrant officers in the royal navy, 10 eo. 4. c. 14, 7 Law J. Stat. 28.]

Deviations, proceeding from accident or overıling authority, do not amount to a breach of the ariner's contract. Cambridge, 2 Hag. 247.

Semble, that a regulation in the seamen's articles f a merchant ship, that "every seaman committed ı custody for the preservation of good order, shall ırfeit his wages, together with everything belongıg to him on board the ship," is in point of law a ood and proper regulation. Rice v. Haylett, 3 . & P. 534. [Best]

The law of England, in ordinary cases, requires ıe mariner to stay by the ship till the discharge of ıe cargo; but this is only where the party has one nothing to supersede the contract. Cambridge, Hag. 246.

[See 11 Geo. 4. c. 22, as to pay of the royal navy, Law J. Stat. 32.]

Though, under the principle that freight is the nother of wages, mariners lose their wages by an sterruption of the voyage from accident, the conlemnation of the vessel for illegal trading on the ıart of the master, to which the mariners are not ıarties, does not work a forfeiture of wages, nor ıven bar the mariners of their action against the ıwners; and charges of disobedience, neglect of luty, of intoxication and mutiny, not being estaılished, wages pronounced for. Malta, 2 Hag. 158.

A sailor's wages and expenses pronounced for, as getting drunk on shore (at Dominica), and not reurning on board immediately leave of absence exıires, (his clothes and other property being on ıoard,) is not an act of desertion working a foreiture of wages; and is amply punished by seventyive days' imprisonment in the island, when the man was willing to return to his duty. Ealing Grove, 2 Hag. 15.

A vessel, whose voyage was described in the articles as to Madras and Calcutta, and back to London, deviated, under a new charter-party, from Madras by Prince of Wales' Island to Calcutta. The deviation, though not notified, was known to the crew, who were dissatisfied, but did not remonstrate. The mariner, who after arriving at Calcutta soon demanded his discharge, and refused to work, was put in irons till the unloading was completed, and then quitted the ship:—Held, first, such proposed deviation entitled him to his discharge at Madras; and, secondly, his remaining on board subsequently was not an implied consent, nor, as the vessel was not, under the new charter-party, to return direct from Calcutta to England, a virtual renewal of his engagement. The whole wages, to the time of his quitting the ship, and costs, pronounced for; though the Court inclined to think that the mariner had acted illegally in refusing to discharge the cargo. Cambridge, 2 Hag. 243.

A mariner having, at Jamaica, quitted the ship by order of the mate, applied to the master, who was on shore, for his discharge. The master refused, and ordered him to return to his duty. The mariner, however, engaged in another ship:—Such conduct is desertion, working a forfeiture of wages. Jupiter, 2 Hag. 221.

A sailor, serving under articles providing for a forfeiture of his wages in case of breach of any of his engagements, among which is that of serving faithfully during the voyage, can recover nothing if he is left ashore in the course of it, owing to his own fault in being absent, though he had no intention of deserting.

He is left on shore by his own fault, if he is so in consequence of his going away, after being forbidden by the captain, though he subsequently obtains the leave of an inferior officer.

This defence may be proved on a plea of nil debet. Sherman v. Bennett, 1 M. & M. 489. [Tenterden]

Insolent expressions, and acts of mutinous tendency, not apologized for, held a forfeiture of wages. Susan, 2 Hag. 229, n.

An information against the vessel for trading in slaves, by the mate, not appearing to be a false or malicious act, cannot work a forfeiture of wages. Malta, 2 Hag. 172.

A single instance of intemperance does not work a forfeiture of wages; it must be a habit, to produce that effect. Malta, 2 Hag. 168.

Occasional acts of drunkenness, not more than usual with sailors, and latterly (when more frequent) arising from the undue force given by bodily disease to the moderate use of strong liquors, will not enure to the forfeiture of a steward's wages. Lady Campbell, 2 Hag. 5.

A seaman, who had elected to take, at Calcutta, a bill of exchange on the owners, instead of cash, in payment of wages, cannot sue the ship, on payment of such bill being refused, the owners having become bankrupts. William Money, 2 Hag. 136.

Articles of agreement provide, that a seaman shall receive for his wages a proportion of the net proceeds of the cargo, after the same are actually received by the owner, subject to certain stipulations as to the seaman's conduct: Semble, that his share may be recovered in an action for money had and received; the owner having received the money, and the seaman having fulfilled the stipulations on his part. Hayward v. Kain, 1 M. & M. 311. [Tenterden]

Motion for leave to enter an appeal, in a suit for wages, from a decree of the Vice Admiralty Court at the Cape, eighteen months before, refused; no sufficient circumstances being stated. Mary, 2 Hag. 26.

Where a vessel had been sold, in a suit for subtraction of wages, the Court refused to direct proceeds in the registry to be paid out to material men, where the owners opposed the application, and the accounts were disputed. But the case being a new one, the Court did not give costs. Maitland, 2 Hag. 253.

A plea of set-off, in answer to a suit for wages, rejected. Lady Campbell, 2 Hag. 14, n.

In a suit for wages, the owners, having pleaded the desertion of the mariner from the vessel, and the payment of his wages into Greenwich Hospital, under stat. 4 Geo. 4. c. 25. s. 11, were dismissed, but without costs. Semble, that it would have been sufficient to allege such facts in acts of court. Vibilia, 2 Hag. 228.

In a suit for wages, service and good conduct are to be presumed till disproved. Malta, 2 Hag. 166.

In a suit for wages, a logbook, not pleaded, but asserted to be in the mariner's hand-writing, allowed to be brought in by the owners. Malta, 2 Hag. 159.

Extract from a police record, annexed to an allegation in proof of a mariner's misconduct, rejected. Susan, 2 Hag. 229, n.

Where, by the articles, wages were not payable till the cargo was discharged (within a limited time), and where, after an arrest, the wages were paid within such time, the owners held liable to the costs of such arrest, they having refused to pay the mariner at the same time as the rest of the crew, but tendered him a less sum than was due "in full of his wages." Minstrel, 2 Hag. 40.

The payment of wages after the arrest of the ship, is an admission of the justice of the claim, and renders the owners liable to the expenses of the warrant and arrest. Thomas Handford, 2 Hag. 41, n.

(c) Discharge.

A spontaneous deviation of importance entitles mariners to their discharge by the law of England; and where, by some other codes, an alteration is permitted, the mariners are to be compensated. Cambridge, 2 Hag. 245.

(E) Pilots.

In general, the master of a ship is bound to take a pilot to conduct her into port. But he is to be allowed a discretion whether he will or not;—and whether he has properly exercised that discretion, is a question for the jury. Phillips v. Headlam, 9 Law J. K.B. 238, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 380.

To charge a master of a ship with a penalty, under 6 Geo. 4. c. 125. s. 58, for not taking a pilot on board, it is necessary that the pilot produce his licence when he offers his services, according to sect. 66.

This is not rendered unnecessary by the fact of the master having previously known the person so offering himself to have been a duly licensed pilot. Hammond v. Blake, 8 Law J. K.B. 140, s. c. 10 B. & C. 424.

The Court, assisted by Trinity Masters, held, that if towing is necessary, pilots are bound to perform it, having a claim for compensation for damage to their boats, or for extra labour; they are bound to offer their services in all weathers, and their claims for extra compensation are stricti juris. A tender of 50*l.* held sufficient, and the pilot's costs refused. General Palmer, 2 Hag. 176.

In extraordinary pilot service, additional pilotage is the proper rate of reward. Enterprise, 2 Hag. 178, n.

Persons, assuming the characters and duties of pilots, are only to be remunerated according to the rates of that service, and not as salvors. Columbus, 2 Hag. 178, n.

(F) Charter-Party.

The lay days allowed by a charter-party for a ship's discharge, are to be reckoned from the time of her arrival at the usual place of discharge, and not at the port merely, though she should, for the purposes of navigation, discharge some of her cargo at the entrance of the port, before arriving at the usual place of discharge. Brereton v. Chapman, 7 Bing. 559, s. c. 5 M. & P. 526.

Proviso in a charter-party, that if the ship do not arrive at her port of loading on or before, &c., unless prevented by stress of weather or other unavoidable impediment, the freighter not to be obliged to ship a cargo:—Held, that if ordinary diligence were used in the voyage to reach the port of loading, the owners are within the exception of the proviso, though the ship is delayed till after the stipulated time, by causes which extraordinary exertion might have counteracted. Granger v. Dent, 1 M. & M. 475. [Tindal]

The defendants chartered a vessel to New Zealand, there to load a cargo, or to give notice by an agent there of their determination not to load, in which event they were to pay the plaintiff 500*l.* The vessel arriving at New Zealand found no cargo ready, nor had the defendants any agent there, whereupon the master proceeded to Batavia, to obtain a freight. The voyage home by the way of Batavia, though circuitous, in the event turned out to be more profitable to the owner than would have been the voyage originally contemplated:—Held, that, under these circumstances, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the 500*l.* in addition to the increased profit upon the homeward voyage. Sesniforth v. Lyall, 9 Law J. C.P. 23, s. c. 7 Bing. 169, s. c. 4 M. & P. 829.

Where the cause of complaint, in an action on a charter-party by the freighters, against the owner of a vessel, was, that a full cargo was not taken in, in consequence of arrangements in the stowage varying from those contemplated by the charter-party—it was held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover, as it appeared that one of them and the broker, who managed the business, were present from time to time during the loading, and cognizant of the arrangements, but did not make any objection. Hazill v. Stephenson, 4 C. & P. 469. [Tindal]

The owners of a ship, by an instrument called a charter-party, bonâ fide entered into between them and G. B., appointed G. B. to the command, and agreed that (the ship being tight, &c., and manned with thirty-five men,) G. B. should be at liberty to receive on board a cargo of lawful goods (reserving 100 tons to be laden for account of the owners) and proceed therewith to Calcutta, and there reload the ship with a cargo of East India produce, and return therewith to London, and upon her arrival there and discharge, the intended voyage and service should end; and the owners further agreed, that the complement of thirty-five men should, if possible, be kept up; that they should supply the ship with stores, and that she might be retained in the said service twelve months, or so much longer as was necessary to complete the voyage:—In consideration of which, G. B. agreed to take the command and receive the ship into his service for twelve months certain, and such longer time as might be necessary to complete the voyage, and pay to the owners for the use and hire of the ship after the rate of 25*s.* per ton per month, of which 1,000*l.* was to be paid on the execution of the charter-party, and 2,000*l.* by two approved bills on Calcutta, one of which was to be payable one month, and the other two months, after her arrival there; the residue to be paid or secured to the satisfaction of the owners, on the arrival of the ship at London, and previous to commencing the discharge of her homeward cargo. Certain other stipulations for payment of freight, if the ship should be detained in India, were then made; and it was urther agreed, that G. B. should remit all freight bills for the homeward cargo to B. B. & Co. in London, who should hold them as joint trustees for the owner and G. B., and that they should first be applied in payment of the balance of freight due from G. B., and the surplus, if any, then to be handed over to him; and it was then provided, that the owners should have an agent on board, who was to have the sole management of the ship's stores, and power to displace G. B. for breach of any covenant in the charter-party, and appoint another commander.

C. & Co. in Calcutta having knowledge of this instrument, shipped goods on board the vessel for London, which were never delivered there:—Held, (reversing the judgment below, that C. & Co. ought to recover against the owners, notwithstanding the agreement between them and G. B. being in the nature of a special appointment of the latter to the command, and not a charter of the vessel to him,) —that, under the charter-party, by a special verdict found to have been entered into bonâ fide, G.B. became in fact the freighter of the vessel, and owner pro tempore—and that C. & Co. shipping goods with full knowledge of his real character as such freighter and owner, could not recover against the plaintiffs in error, the absolute owners of the vessel. Newberry v. Colvin, 9 Law J. Ex. 13, s. c. 7 Bing. 190, s. c. 4 M. & P. 876, s. c. 1 C. & J. 192, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 55.

(G) Demurrage.

The consignee of a cargo requested the master of the vessel not to take her alongside a wharf, as, if he did, it would get down the price of the goods. The master consequently delayed procuring the certificate required by the statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 56. s. 15, authorising the landing and unshipping the cargo:—Held, that the owner was not thereby precluded from claiming demurrage, as the delay or detention of the vessel was attributable to the act of the consignee. Palmer v. Thomas, 7 Law J. C.P. 73, s. c. 2 M. & P. 276.

If A has goods consigned to him, and there be on board the same ship goods consigned to other consignees, and those goods are so placed on board that A, after the ship arrives, cannot obtain his goods within the time limited by the bill of lading, A is not liable for demurrage.

Where a bill of lading stipulates for demurrage after a certain time, the owner can only recover for the time during which the goods remain owing to the default of the consignee. It is no answer to an action for such demurrage, that another consignee on another bill of lading has already paid demurrage to a greater amount for the same period. Dobson v. Droop, 2 M. & M. 441, s. c. 4 C. & P. 112. [Tenterden]

It is no defence to an action by the owner of a ship for demurrage, that the owner has omitted to procure the necessary papers for the discharge of the cargo, if he omitted to do so at the request of the defendant. Furnell v. Thomas, 5 Bing. 188.

No action for demurrage can be maintained by a master of the ship in his own name, unless there be an express contract for its payment to him. Evans v. Forster, 8 Law J. K.B. 348, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 118.

(H) Freight and Primage.

Primage belongs of right to the master of a ship; and nothing but an express agreement can exempt the consignee of the goods from the liability to pay it.

An agreement between the owner and the master, that the latter should have certain wages, "and a sum certain in full for all cabin or other allowances," held, not to be sufficient to take away the master's right of primage.

A bill of lading contained in its terms "that the goods were to be delivered to the consignee, he paying freight for the said goods as per charter-party; with primage and average accustomed:"—Held, in an action by the master for his primage, that the reference to the charter-party applied only to the freight: that it was not necessary for him to give it in evidence, and that, upon shewing what was the accustomed primage, he was entitled to recover. Best v. Saunders, 7 Law J. K.B. 50, s. c. 3 M. & R. 4, s. c. 1 M. & M. 209.

On a bill of lading of goods "shipped by A B, to be delivered to C D or his assigns, he or they paying freight;" if the goods are delivered without receiving freight, the shipper is not liable for the freight, there being no charter-party. In such a case, where the shipper afterwards promised by writing to pay freight, held, that it was a question for the jury whether, on the account between A B and C D, A B was, as between them, to pay the freight; and that, if he had consented to do so, he was liable on the subsequent promise. Drew v. Bird, 2 M. & M. 156. [Tenterden]

The plaintiff, by charter-party, agreed with G to convey corn at 4*s.* 6*d.* a quarter, G made a subcharter with S, who consigned corn to the defendants under bill of lading, by which they were to pay 6*s.* a quarter freight, and gave them notice to retain 1*s.* 6*d.* a quarter for him.

The plaintiff having sued for freight at 6*s.* a quarter:—Held, he was entitled to recover only 4*s.* 6*d.* Mitchenson v. Begbie, 6 Bing. 190, s. c. 3 M. & P. 442.

The captain of a ship signed a bill of lading, expressing the freight of the goods to have been paid. He did so upon an assurance that it should be paid before the ship sailed. This was not done. The bill of lading was assigned over for value to a third person:—Held, that, as against that person, the owners had no lien upon the goods for the freight. Howard v. Tucker, 9 Law J. K.B. 108, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 712.

(I) Bill of Lading.

A bill of lading is not conclusive between the shippers of the goods, and the owners of the ship; but the owners may shew that less goods than specified in the bill of lading were shipped, the master, who signed the bill of lading, having been misled by the fraud of the agent of the shippers. Bates v. Todd, 1 M. & Rob. 106. [Tindal]

Goods taken on board a ship, the bill of lading containing an exception of the perils of the seas; the ship runs foul of another ship, without any fault in the master of either:—Held to be an injury by the perils of the seas, within the exception. Buller v. Fowler, Peak. A. C. 183. [Kenyon]

An indorsee of a Spanish bill of lading, to whom the goods have been delivered under it, is liable in assumpsit for the freight, although the bill of lading is for delivery to the consignees, without saying "or their assigns," such bills of lading appearing by evidence to be usually passed by indorsement. Renteria v. Ewing, 1 M. & M. 511. [Tenterden]

(K) Losses and Injuries.

[See Insurance and Salvage.]

In an action for running down a vessel, the plaintiff cannot recover unless the injury is attributable entirely to the fault of the defendants; if he were partly in fault, but the defendants with care might have prevented the accident, he cannot maintain his action. Waterbank v. Miller, 2 M. & M. 101. [Tenterden]

In a case of collision, where the loss was charged to be owing to wilful malice or gross negligence, the Court, with the assistance of Trinity Masters, being of opinion that the damage was occasioned by accident solely imputable to the mismanagement of the vessel first, and not to the misconduct of the other vessel, dismissed the owners of the other vessel with costs. Catherine of Dover, 2 Hag. 154.

If a vessel at sea is going close hauled to the wind, and another meeting her is going free, the rule of the sea is, for the latter vessel to go to leeward; and, although such vessel may either go to leeward or windward as she best can, yet she ought as a general rule, to suppose that the vessel going close hauled will keep her position. Handaysyde v. Wilson, 2 C. & P. 548. [Best]

In a case of collision against a steam vessel, the Court, assisted by Trinity Masters, pronounced for damages and costs, holding, that the steam vessel, being under command, and manifestly having [illegible] the other vessel, was to blame. Shannon, 2 Hag. [illegible]

By the stat. 1 & 2 Geo. 4. c. 75, the Court of Admiralty is authorized not only to arrest a foreign ship, but to proceed to judgment in a case of collision. Plea of foreign owner overruled. But a [illegible] pilot being intrusted with the navigation of a vessel, the owner is exonerated under [illegible] Geo. 3. c. 123, s. 55, which applies equally [illegible] to British ships. Foreign owner and [illegible] arrested. Christiana, 2 Hag. 183.

In a case of collision, the protest of the master of a foreign vessel, which being in distress, was in tow by the vessel run foul of, is res inter alios acta, and not admissible evidence where no necessity exists. The Court may order compensation for consequential damage. Betsey Caines, 2 Hag. 23.

In a case of collision, the crew of the ship charged with committing the damage, admitted (on the ground of necessity, and that no other evidence could be expected) as witnesses, though being sharers in the profits and losses of the vessel, they would not swear they were disinterested in the result. Catherine of Dover, 2 Hag. 145.

In a case of collision, where payment of a sum for damage, interest, and costs reported to be due, had been delayed by the party liable, the other party is entitled to interest on the whole sum, fifteen days after the date of such report; and stat. 53 Geo. 3. c. 159. s. 1, limiting the liability of owners to the value of the ship, appurtenances and freight, applies only to the original claim for damage, and extends not to costs and interest. Dundee, 2 Hag. 137.

In a case of collision, the Court will, preparatory to a decree of sale, sign a primum decretum, on an affidavit of a perishable condition. Sylvan, 2 Hag. 155.

(L) Ship Brokers.

A broker, who is employed by a ship-owner to procure the effecting of a charter-party, and who procures a person to treat, but with whom ultimately no charter-party is effected, is not entitled to his commission, although the treaty has gone off in consequence of the unusual and unreasonable demands made by the ship-owner upon the proposed charter.

Nor, semble, is he entitled to any compensation for his work and labour on the quantum meruit, the usage of the trade being against it. Read v. Rann, 8 Law J. K.B. 144, s. c. 10 B. & C. 438.

It seems that, by the custom of London, a ship-broker is not entitled to commission for negotiating the terms of a charter-party, if from any cause the charter-party is not afterwards executed. Broad v. Thomas, 9 Law J. C.P. 32, s. c. 4 M. & P. 732, s. c. 7 Bing. 99.

Where a broker is employed by a ship-owner to procure a charter-party, if the negotiation goes off on account of any fault in the broker, he is not entitled to recover anything in the shape of remuneration; nor is he, in such case, entitled to recover for expenses which he may have been put to, unless such expenses are unusual, and have been incurred in consequence of the ship-owners having urged him to extraordinary expedition in the matter. And, semble, that where the negotiation is not carried into effect, but there is no fault in the broker, he is not entitled to anything, unless the charter-party is actually signed. Dalton v. Irvin, 4 C. & P. 289. [Tindal]

SIMONY.

By the stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6. s. 5, it is enacted, that "if any person, &c., shall, for any sum of money, reward, gift, profit, or benefit, directly or indirectly, or for or by reason of any promise, agreement, grant, bond, or other assurance of or for any sum of money, reward, gift, profit, or benefit whatsoever, directly or indirectly present or collate any person to any benefice with cure of souls, dignity, prebend, or living ecclesiastical, or give or bestow the same for or in respect of any such corrupt cause or consideration; that every such presentation, collation, gift, and bestowing, and every admission, institution, investiture, and induction thereupon, shall be utterly void, frustrate, and of none effect in law."

In quare impedit it was found, by special verdict, that B, the incumbent of a rectory, was, on a certain day, afflicted with a mortal disease, of which he died at eleven o'clock at night, and that at three o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, T, the patron of the living, and F, both knowing the condition of B, in pursuance of an agreement, executed a deed, by which, in consideration of 6,000*l.*, T granted to F the advowson for a term of ninety-nine years, if F should so long live, with a proviso that as soon as F, by vacancy or otherwise, should have made presentation to the rectory, he should re-assign to T the residue of the term. It was found also by the verdict, that this agreement and deed was a device to convey the next presentation; but that the deed was executed without the knowledge or privity of H (the person afterwards presented by T, and rejected by the bishop ordinary), and without any intention to present him.

Upon this finding, judgments having been given for the defendant in the Courts of Great Sessions, Chester, and the King's Bench, they were reversed in the House of Lords upon writ of error, the House being of opinion that this sale of the next presentation was not void under the statute. Fox v. the Bishop of Chester, 3 Bligh, N.S. 123, s. c. 1 Dow. & Cl. 426, s. c. 6 Bing. 1.

(A) ACTION FOR, WHERE MAINTAINABLE.
(B) PLEADINGS.
(C) EVIDENCE.

---

(A) ACTION FOR, WHERE MAINTAINABLE.

The agent for R, a person convicted for poaching, applies to the convicting Magistrate for a mitigation of the penalty, on the ground that the poacher supported his father and mother by his labour or industry. A, one of the Magistrates, said, "I do not think the defender deserves any mercy, as I am informed that, besides being a poacher, he is a thief, and has been known to steal bee-hives and leather;" and he appealed to B, another Magistrate, who said, "I cannot say as to the bee-hives; but I was informed by a respectable farmer now dead, that he stole a quantity of leather." R brings his action of damages against the Magistrates for defamation, and the action held by the Court below to be relevant and sent to a jury, and the verdict for the pursuer for 125*l.* damages against each of the Magistrates, and the verdict confirmed by the Court. The interlocutor of relevancy affirmed by the House of Lords, but the interlocutor confirming the verdict reversed, and the case remitted for a new trial. Allardice v. Robertson, 1 Dow. & Cl. 495.

Words, where spoken of a person in office, to be actionable, must be spoken of him in reference to that office, and must have a tendency to occasion the loss of such office, or must impute the want of some qualification for such office, or some misconduct in it. Thus, where the words charged in a declaration, and which were spoken of the plaintiff, who was the clerk to a Gas Light Company, were—"You are a fellow, a disgrace to the town, unfit to hold your situation for your conduct with whores;" such words were held not to be actionable.

Where the words charged in a declaration are not actionable, but are proved at the trial, the plaintiff cannot be nonsuited in that case, as the defendant should demur, or after trial move in arrest of judgment. Lumley v. Allday, 9 Law J. Exch. 62, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 217, s. c. 1 C. & J. 301.

The repeating of slanderous words is not justified by the person who repeats them merely naming, at the time, from whom he heard them. Macpherson v. Daniels, 8 Law J. K.B. 14, s. c. 10 B. & C. 263.

(B) PLEADINGS.

Where a count for slander, after alleging that the plaintiff was a livery-stable keeper, and was about to prove a debt under a commission of bankrupt, stated that the defendant spoke of and concerning the plaintiff, and of and concerning the matter in that count mentioned, and of and concerning the plaintiff in his trade, these words: "You are a regular prover under bankruptcy, (meaning that the plaintiff was accustomed to prove fictitious debts under commissions of bankrupt,) you are a regular bankrupt maker:"—Held, that the count could not be maintained, for the words were not actionable, as spoken of the plaintiff in his trade; nor were the words as laid actionable, as imputing a crime punishable by law, because the innuendo was broader than the words, which were unexplained by prefatory averment, and did not of themselves necessarily import a crime. Alexander v. Angle, 1 C. & J. 143, s. c. 7 Bing. 119, s. c. 4 M. & P. 870, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 9.

(C) EVIDENCE.

The words imputed the prescribing of medicines in improper doses, and the defendant justified:—Held, that medical books, which were stated by the medical witnesses to be works of medical authority, could not be put in, to shew that such doses were sanctioned; but that the medical witnesses might be asked their judgment, and the grounds of it, which might in some degree be founded on these books as a part of their general knowledge. Collier v. Simpson, 5 C. & P. 73. [Tindal]

In an action of slander, the plaintiff, in shewing special damage, must confine his proof to the evidence of persons who received the slanderous statements from the defendant himself. Rutherford v. Evans, 4 C. & P. 74. [Tindal]

In an action of slander, averring special damage to have accrued to the plaintiff from the speaking of the words by the defendant, evidence that the words were spoken by the defendant to J S, who repeated them to J B, who thereupon refused to trust the plaintiff—held, not sufficient to support the declaration. Ward v. Weeks, 9 Law J. C.P. 6, s. c. 7 Bing. 211, s. c. 4 M. & P. 796.

In an action of slander, where three witnesses were called for the plaintiff, the evidence of two of whom was quite inconsistent with the notion of a confidential communication, it was held, that it was not a misdirection in the Judge, to leave it to the jury to say, whether, or not, they believed the communication to be confidential; and that it was not necessary in such a case for him to tell them in distinct terms, that, if they believed the evidence, they must find their verdict for the plaintiff. Picton v. Jackman, 4 C. & P. 257. [Gaselee]

The declaration in slander stated, that the defendant, intending to injure the plaintiff in the opinion of certain persons, who had been in the habit of employing him as a fruit-broker, represented to those persons that the plaintiff had prejudiced the sale of a cargo of oranges belonging to them, by reporting in the sale room that he (the plaintiff) had three or four ships laden with fruit between Gravesend and London. The proof at the trial was, that the plaintiff had said, that there were three or four ships laden, &c. This was held, at Nisi Prius, to be a fatal variance; and the plaintiff was nonsuited; and the nonsuit was confirmed in the Court above, a rule for setting it aside being refused. Wood v. Acton, 4 C. & P. 268. [Tindal]

SLAVES.

A female attendant, by birth and servitude a domestic slave, accompanied her mistress to England, resided there for a year, and then voluntarily returned with her mistress to the place of her birth and servitude; though during the residence in England, no dominion, authority, or coercion can be exercised over such persons, yet, on her return to her place of birth and servitude, the right to exercise such dominion revives. The Slave Grace, 2 Hag. 94.

The regulations in the 59 Geo. 3. c. 120, were made to prevent slaves being transferred from one of our own colonies to other settlements, and also the introduction of new slaves into any of our colonies; but have no reference to the transit of slaves to or from this country and its colonies. The Slave Grace, 2 Hag. 98.

The 5 Geo. 4. c. 113. s. 47. is only indefinitely retrospective as to importations: the Court, therefore, on appeal, reversed a sentence, condemning a slave as illegally exported nine years before. The Slave Fanny Ford, 2 Hag. 271.

Where the master, unknown to the owners, receiving persons on board as pledges, and not under an absolute sale, the Court, on appeal, holding such conduct did not, under the particular circumstances of the case, subject the ship to condemnation under the slave acts, reversed the sentence of the Court at Sierra Leone, but allowed the captor his expenses, costs, and insurance of the vessel. Malta, 2 Hag. 241.

Where, on a voyage to North Carolina from Roseau in port in Dominica, to which the vessel belonged, the master, discovering two slaves from Dominica on board, landed and delivered them up at St. Kitt's, the nearest British port he could reach: such an importation was not held to amount to a forfeiture under statute 5 Geo. 4. c. 113; and the superior Court, upon an appeal on behalf of the Crown, holding that the master was ignorant of the slaves being on board, and that the importation arose from unavoidable necessity, declined to disturb the sentence, though it was undefended on the part of the owners. Two Slaves, 2 Hag. 273.

An inhabitant of Trinidad, after a residence of about a month at Bermuda, purchased there a slave and her four children, aged eleven, nine, seven, and three, and shortly after embarked with his family and them for Trinidad, the mother and four children being described in the indorsement on the clearance as domestic servants in personal attendance on himself and others of his family: the owner of the vessel, who had a residence at Bermuda and Trinidad, also embarked with two slaves, born in his family, aged eleven and seven, similarly described in the indorsement. There had been no registry act in the island since the year 1822, but the late registrar gave a certified copy of the expired registry, and there was an affidavit of the late owner as to the birth of the youngest child. The vessel was seized while lying at anchor near the port of Hamilton, (having cleared out for Trinidad,) and preparing to weigh anchor. The Court, on appeal, holding, that the circumstances and situation in which the vessel was seized brought the case within the 5 Geo. 4. c. 113, and that the removal of none of the slaves was protected by section 17, reversed the sentence of the Court at Bermuda, and pronounced for the penalties prayed. Adelaide, 2 Hag. 232.

SMUGGLING.

The magistrates of the place, on land, to which a person charged under the 6 Geo. 4. c. 108. s. 74. is carried, have jurisdiction over the subject-matter; although the person may have been taken on board a vessel, upon waters within another jurisdiction. Rex v. James Nunn, 7 Law J. M.C. 10, s. c. 8 B. & C. 644, s. c. 3 M. & R. 75.

An action of debt for the penalty of 50*l.* (given by the statute 32 Geo. 2. c. 28, for carrying a prisoner to gaol on an arrest within twenty-four hours) against a revenue officer acting under a warrant granted to him by the sheriff by the directions of the solicitor of Excise, pursuant to the statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 53. s. 95, and founded upon an attachment for not appearing to an information filed in the Court of Exchequer for smuggling, may be removed from the Court of Common Pleas into the Office of Pleas of the Exchequer. Sidden v. East, 1 C. & J. 12.

SPECIAL CASE.

[See SESSIONS.]

The Court of Exchequer does not direct a case for opinion of a court of law, as the Court of Chancery does, but only directs the matter to be heard before a full Court. Gaskell v. Gaskell, 3 Y. & J. 305. Semble, the Attorney General has not power to turn a special case into a special verdict, no leave having been given for that purpose at the trial. Attorney General v. Dimond, 1 Tyr. 286.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

[See VENDOR AND PURCHASER.]

(A) BILL FOR, WHERE SUSTAINABLE.
(B) PRACTICE.

(A) BILL FOR, WHERE SUSTAINABLE.

A written undertaking will be enforced against the party entering into it; although the party, to whom it is given, is not bound to be satisfied with it. Palmer v. Scott, 8 Law J. Chanc. 127, s.c. 1 Russ. & M. 391, s.c. 1 Tam. 488.

A court of equity will not entertain jurisdiction to compel the performance of an agreement to pay a sum annually upon the happening of a certain event. Brough v. Oddy, 8 Law J. Chanc. 23, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 55, s.c. 1 Tam. 215.

A husband being prosecuted and found guilty at the Quarter Sessions of an assault upon his wife, the Court recommended an accommodation of the disputes and differences between them. The counsel of the parties signed a memorandum of agreement, that the husband should allow the wife an annuity of 50*l.*; and the Court, adverting to the arrangement, passed a sentence upon the defendant, imposing only a nominal fine upon him. It was proved, that the defendant's attorney stated publicly in court, that the defendant had come into the agreement, and that the defendant was in court when the arrangement was entered into. The defendant, by his answer, denied that he ever consented to it; and, on his part, there were depositions that, to some extent, supported it:—Held, that it was not incumbent on the plaintiffs to prove that the defendant did assent to an agreement entered into by his counsel, but on the defendant to disprove it:—Held also, that the weight of the evidence being that the defendant did not dissent, a Court will conclude a counsel had authority: Held also, that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for a specific performance, with costs. Elworthy v. Bird, 1 Tam. 38.

Bill for the specific performance of a covenant, by which the defendants engaged, within two years, to procure the heir-at-law of A B to convey certain lands to the plaintiffs, or, within the same period, to prefer a petition to the House of Lords for, and to use their utmost endeavours to procure an act of parliament for substituting a trustee in the place of the heir, in case such heir could not be found, or there should not be any heir. On inquiry, no heir being found, the Court decreed the defendants to allow their names to be used in an application to parliament for the act, expressing, however, a doubt whether such an application could succeed, the estate appearing to have escheated. Frederick v. Cexwell, 3 Y. & J. 514.

A agrees to lend B 3,000*l.* on mortgage of leasehold houses, and not to call for the title of the lessor, and advances 600*l.* in part. He then calls for the lessor's title, and files a bill for specific performance, or sale of the property to repay him the 600*l.* and interest:—Held, that he was not entitled to the title, but only to a specific performance of the contract, as proved, and that the plaintiff, not obtaining the decree he asked, shall pay the costs. Bass v. Clivley, 1 Tam. 80.

Where a person having a clear title to 12*l.* for rent, and claiming the property of the land, is induced, by the representations of two professional persons, that he had no right to either rent or land, to agree to accept 10*l.* in full for rent and land, the Court will not entertain a bill for the specific performance of the agreement.

It is no defence to a bill for specific performance by the vendor, that, during the treaty, he falsely assumed the character of agent for another, when, in fact, he was dealing on his own behalf, and that he thereby deceived the purchaser as to the party with whom the contract was made, provided the purchaser does not shew that the deception induced him to enter into the contract, or occasioned any loss or inconvenience to him otherwise. Fellowes v. Gwydyr and Page, 1 Russ. & M. 83.

A, B, and C, being jointly interested in certain property, A contracts with B to take a lease of the whole of it; and the contract expresses that B is to be bound by the contract only so far as it is to be performed by him; but that A is to be answerable to B, even for what is to be done by C:—Held,

That B will be precluded from enforcing the contract against A, by the circumstance that C, under a deed, which the parties either were not aware of or had forgotten, has taken proceedings in a court of equity, which deprive A of that possession and enjoyment of the property, the subject of the contract, which it was the purpose of the contract to give him.

That it is a defence to a bill for specific performance, if the plaintiff has made inaccurate representations with respect to the property which was the subject of the contract, although those representations proceeded upon, and had reference to, sources of information which were open to all parties, and which might have enabled them to detect the alleged inaccuracies.

That in such a case the Court will not decree specific performance, even though the defendants have taken possession of the property, and materially altered its management or lessened its value. Harris v. Kemble, 7 Law Journ. Chanc. 79.

A, a shareholder in a theatre, entered into an agreement with B, C, and D, three other shareholders, by which the theatre was to be leased to them at a certain rent. He subsequently filed a bill against them for specific performance, on which they proved that another agreement, of which they had before had no notice, had been entered into some years before between A and other parties, his then co-shareholders in the theatre, and that the earlier agreement contained conditions incompatible with the performance of that into which they had entered; they also proved, that two transactions, with regard to the letting of boxes, had not been truly represented to them. The Vice Chancellor held, that, as the theatre had, in substance, the benefit represented to accrue from these lettings, the misrepresentation as to mere form was no bar to A's claim for a specific performance. The Lord Chancellor reversed that decision, and the reversal was held right by the House of Lords. Harris v. Kemble, 2 Dow. & Cl. 463.

If an agent for a purchaser, having a general authority, contracts to purchase such title as the vendor has, the Court will compel specific performance of the contract. St. John v. Stirling, 7 Law J. Chanc. 189, s.c. 1 Tam. 23.

If, after a contract for sale of an estate, but before the title is accepted, the title deeds be destroyed by fire, this Court will not compel the specific performance of the contract, unless the vendor can furnish the purchaser with the means of shewing what were the contents of the destroyed deeds, and proving that such deeds were duly executed and delivered. Bryant v. Busk, 4 Russ. 1.

Specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of a reversionary interest refused, where the sale was by private contract, and the price inadequate. Kendall v. Beckett, 9 Law J. Chanc. 24.

Where an agreement is entered into for the sale of an estate, and the parties differ as to the quantity agreed to be sold, and the vendor files a bill for specific performance of the agreement as to part, and the vendee offers to complete the contract as to that part; but the vendor adds, as a condition, that the vendee shall pay the costs of the bill;—the Court will refuse a decree for specific performance. Spence v. Mawson. 9 Law J. Chanc. 10.

Leasehold property given by a will to the separate use of a female infant. On her marriage, a settlement is made under the orders of the Court (she being still an infant), containing certain trusts for sale. The trustees offer the property for sale by auction, and file a bill against the purchaser for a specific performance:—Held, that the settlement of the female infant's chattel interest (already secured to her separate use), though made under the orders of the Court, was invalid, and the purchaser not bound to take the title. Simson v. Jones, 9 Law J. Chanc. 106.

M, being possessed of a house and lands for a term of years under a lease, by the covenants of which he was bound to keep and deliver up the premises in repair at the expiration of the term, entered into an agreement with C, who had acquired the reversion in the premises, subject to the term, that C should grant to him a new lease: and, thereupon, an agreement between M and C was executed, whereby C agreed to grant to M a lease of the premises for a term of forty-seven years, at such yearly rent as should be put upon the same by two chosen arbitrators, and in case of difference between them, that an umpire should be named by them, and the rent fixed by a majority of the three.

The arbitrators having differed, an umpire was called in, who, with the arbitrator for M the tenant, received evidence to shew that, at the date of the agreement between M and C, the premises were in a very ruinous state, and that it would require 800*l.* to put them in repair. Upon this view of the case, and assuming as the basis of their award, that M was not bound to repair, and that he had agreed to expend 800*l.* in repairs, they adjudged and awarded that a rent of 60*l.* per annum should be paid by M to C during the term of forty-seven years. But the arbitrator for M the tenant had differed from the umpire as to the amount of rent, and refused to concur in a larger rent than 43*l.*, until he was prevailed on by the entreaty of M's wife to concur with the umpire in fixing the rent at 60*l.*

Held, on appeal, reversing the decree in the court below, that M was not entitled to a specific performance of the agreement under the circumstances attending this award. Chichester v. M'Intire, 4 Bligh, N.S. 78, s.c. 1 D. & C. 460.

F C, under a settlement executed in 1715, was tenant for life of certain lands, with a power to lease for any term not exceeding thirty-one years, remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail male. In 1745 F C granted to S O, who was then acting as his attorney, a lease of lands comprising two hundred acres of good land, Irish plantation measure, for three lives, or thirty-one years, which ever should last the longest. M C was the only son of F C. In 1749 M C, by a writing indorsed upon that part of the lease of 1745, which was in the possession of S O, in consideration of 20*l.* agreed to ratify that lease; and, on the expiration of the term, to grant a renewal for a further term of lives, a blank being left in the agreement as to the number of lives. The agreement was not indorsed on the counterpart of the lease in the possession of F C, and was not registered till June 1760. In May 1760 F C died, leaving M C surviving, who, by deed in 1760, settled the lands in trust for himself for life; remainder to his two daughters as tenants in common. The respondent became entitled to one moiety of the lands, as the only son of one of the daughters; and, at a sale under a decree in Chancery in 1814, purchased the other moiety. At the time of the sale, it was mentioned, that the lands were sold subject to the lease of 1745. S O died in 1780, leaving S L O, who was the last surviving life in the lease of 1745, and held the lands under the lease till his death, which took place in 1817. The appellants claimed as devisees of S L O. In 1820 the appellants filed a bill in Chancery stating the facts above mentioned, and praying a specific performance of the agreement to grant a renewal of the lease.

Held, that under the circumstances the appellants were not entitled to such relief. Blakeney v. Bagott, 3 Bligh, N.S. 237, s.c. 1 D. & C. 405.

(B) Practice.

The plaintiff, the vendor, having notice from the purchaser that the latter abandoned his contract, did not file his bill for specific performance till about a year afterwards: the bill was dismissed on the ground of unreasonable delay. Watson v. Reid, 1 R. & M. 236, s.c. 1 Tam. 382.

Unless the evidence of identity of a plan referred to in an agreement is clear and satisfactory, specific performance of such an agreement will be refused. Hodges v. Horsfall, 1 Russ. & M. 116.

In a suit for specific performance by a vendor, the costs will be thrown upon the purchaser, though the master reports that a good title was not shewn till after the filing of the bill, if that finding proceeded on the ground that certain evidence had not been previously furnished, which the vendor had offered to produce, but which had not been actually produced before the institution of the suit in consequence of the purchaser insisting upon other and unsubstantial objections. Long v. Collier, 4 Russ. 269.

STAGE COACH.

In an action against the proprietor of a stage coach for damages, occasioned by negligence, it is not a defence to the action that there was a want of sufficient care and attention by the passenger. The action is maintainable, notwithstanding that want of care and attention, if the injury would not have occurred but for the negligence which is the subject of the action. Curtis v. Drinkwater, 9 Law J. K.B. 175, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 159.

In an action against the proprietor of a stage coach for negligence, evidence of his name being on the coach, is evidence of his being owner or proprietor, according to the 50 Geo. 3. c. 48. and 9 Geo. 4. c. 49. Barford v. Nelson, 9 Law J. K.B. 93, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 571.

(A) IN GENERAL.

The proper stamp to be borne by a written instrument, must depend on what is the leading character of such instrument. Pratt v. Thomas, 4 C. & P. 554. [Patteson]

Where an instrument, if executed by one person only, would require but one stamp, the circumstance of its being executed by several, for one common purpose, will not render it necessary that there should be more than one stamp, although the interest of the different persons may not be the same.

Accordingly, where several persons, members of an insurance club, executed a power of attorney, to underwrite policies of insurance on their account, one stamp on the instrument was held to be sufficient, although some of the members themselves insured with the club for their own ships. Allan v. Harrison, 7 Law J. K.B. 106, s. c. 8 B. & C. 565, s. c. 3 M. & R. 70.

(B) AGREEMENTS.

[Doe d. Morgan v. Amos, 2 M. & R. 180, Dig. Law J. 492; Cornish v. Searell, 1 M. & R. 703, Dig. Law J. 493.]

If an agreement, or other written instrument, be charged to be part of a fraud or other crime, it is immaterial whether it is stamped or not. Rex v. Fowle, 4 C. & P. 592. [Tenterden]

Where work has been done under a written contract, and the plaintiff seeks to recover for extra work, which, as he contends, is beyond the contract, he must offer the written contract in evidence, properly stamped, in order that it may be seen whether the contract includes the work in question or not. The Judge at Nisi Prius will not look at the contract for that purpose unless it be stamped. Vincent v. Cole, 7 Law J. K.B. 130.

A draft agreement, on the back of it the following memorandum: "We approve of this draft." And this was signed by the parties:—Held, that it did not require any stamp. Doe d. Lambourn v. Pedgriph, 4 C. & P. 312. [Tenterden]

A note given by a broker to his principal, containing an account of a purchase made by the former for the latter, of shares in a public company, is not subject to a stamp (as an "agreement" under the 55 Geo. 3. c. 184,) in an action by the principal against the broker, in respect of the subject-matter. Tomkins v. Savory, 7 Law J. K.B. 334, s. c. 9 B. & C. 704, s. c. 4 M. & R. 538.

An agreement to supply a house and buildings with water, by means of pipes to be laid in a certain manner and to a certain height, is an agreement relating to the sale of goods, and need not be stamped. West Middlesex Waterworks Company v. Suwerkropp, 2 M. & M. 408, s. c. 4 C. & P. 87. [Tenterden]

In assumpsit by the indorsee against the drawer of a bill of exchange, the defence was, that time had been given to the acceptor. To meet this defence, a copy of a paper that the defendant had promised to sign, was offered in evidence. By this the defendant consented to the plaintiff's using any means to obtain payment from the acceptor, without prejudice of his right to recover from the drawer:—Held, that this paper did not require a stamp. Hill v. Johnson, 3 C. & P. 456.

Three persons, in the same line of business, had "agreed to divide, and not to interfere with certain districts of the several cities, boroughs, &c. set forth on Bowles's post map of England and Wales, thereto annexed and referred to;" and that the three parties should respectively sell, without interruption, in the several cities, &c., marked and set forth, and described in the said map, which was annexed to the agreement:—Held, that all the names of places on the map must be counted as words, and, that if the words of the agreement, with the names on the map, amounted to more than 1080, the agreement must be stamped accordingly with a 1*l.* 15*s.* stamp. Wickins v. Evans, 4 C. & P. 359. [Park and Bosanquet]

(C) AWARDS.

[Doe d. Suffield v. Preston, 1 M. & R. 713, Dig. Law J. 349.]

A bond conditioned for the due discharge by A M of the duties of clerk, provided that such discharge should be ascertained by the inspection of A M's accounts by J S; and that the amount so ascertained should be liquidated damages. A paper by which J S has ascertained such amount, requires to be stamped as an award. Jebb v. M'Kiernan, 1 M. & M. 340. [Parke]

(D) Deeds.

Where two parties were interested in a sum invested in the funds, one having a life interest, and the other a reversion, and a deed was executed between them, by which, in consideration of the person entitled for life consenting to a sale of part of the stock for the benefit of the reversioner, the latter covenanted to pay an annuity to the person entitled for life:—Held, that such deed was not a conveyance upon the sale of an annuity, so as to render it liable to the ad valorem duty, according to the 55 Geo. 3. c. 184, schedule, part 1, title "Conveyance."

An assignment of a policy of insurance of goods is not an assignment of property within the above act, so as to require an ad valorem duty. Blandy v. Herbert, 7 Law J. K.B. 223, s. c. 9 B. & C. 396.

A conveyance liable to ad valorem duty, by the 55 Geo. 3. c. 184, (schedule, part 1, title "Conveyance,") is not void, because the true consideration money is not expressed on the face of the deed. The duty is payable merely on the sum expressed; though, under the 48 Geo. 3. c. 149, the parties may be liable to punishment for not truly expressing the consideration.

And such a conveyance is therefore admissible in evidence, though it be not properly stamped.

So, a lease granted in consideration of a premium, as well as of an annual rent, which made no mention of the premium, held admissible in evidence; inasmuch as the ad valorem duty under the title "Lease," in the above schedule, referred to the title "Conveyance," which regulates the ad valorem duty, according to the sum expressed to be paid. Doe d. Keppel v. Lewis, 8 Law J. K.B. 300, s. c. 10 B. & C. 500.

Mortgage to three persons to secure a certain sum, stamped with the ad valorem duty on that sum. It appeared that the three were separate creditors, and that the duties upon their three several debts exceeded the duty on the deed:—Held, that the stamp was sufficient.

In mortgages of copyhold and other property, by separate deeds, the ad valorem duty must be upon the deed relating to the other property.

A mortgage of barges, without delivery of possession, is valid, if the mortgagor's continuing in possession is not contrary to the deed. Read v. Wilmott, 9 Law J. C.P. 176, s. c. 7 Bing. 577, s. c. 5 M. & P. 553.

(E) Leases.

By indenture, in the form, and containing the usual covenants, of a lease, A demised premises to B, and B and C covenanted to pay the rent, but C was not otherwise referred to in the instrument. In an action against C on the covenant to pay rent:—Held, that the indenture was available against him, though stamped as a lease only, and that a deed stamp was unnecessary. Price v. Thomas, 2 B. & Ad. 218, s. c. as Pratt v. Thomas, 4 C. & P. 554.

(F) Policies of Insurance.

A policy of insurance on a ship from an English port to foreign parts, accepted in England by the agent of an Irish insurance company, subject to the approval of the directors, was transmitted to them in Ireland; and there by them signed:—Held, that an Irish stamp was sufficient upon such policy, and that it did not require an English stamp under the 1 & 2 Geo. 4. c. 55. s. 1. Iveson v. Hunter, 8 Law J. K.B. 146.

A policy of insurance was effected on a ship from Liverpool to Quebec. The policy was duly stamped. The ship being detained, a memorandum was indorsed, by which, in consideration of one guinea per cent. additional, the underwriters continued the policy, changing the destination of the ship from Liverpool to St. John's, New Brunswick:—Held, that the memorandum came within the meaning of the 35 Geo. 3. c. 63. s. 13; and that no new stamp was necessary. Brocklebank v. Sugrue, 8 Law J. K.B. 371, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 81.

(G) Promissory Notes.

A promissory note for 100*l.* and interest, made payable to M S or order, on demand, held to be properly stamped with a stamp for 3*s.* 6*d.* under the Stamp Act, 55 Geo. 3. c. 184, schedule, part 1, title "Promissory Note," c. 2. Moyser v. Whittaker, 7 Law J. K.B. 228, s. c. 9 B. & C. 409.

A promissory note thus—"On demand, we jointly and severally promise to pay to I G or order, the sum of 100*l.*, &c." requires a 3*s.* 6*d.* stamp only; the larger stamp in the 55 Geo. 3. c. 184, schedule, part 1, being only necessary where the note is payable, on demand, to the bearer. Armitage v. Berry, 7 Law J. C.P. 229, s. c. 5 Bing. 501, s. c. 3 M. & P. 211.

(H) Receipts.

A receipt in the following form "Received of W C the sum of 9*l.* in full, for what I done for him," is not a receipt in full of all demands, so as to require a 10*s.* stamp. Law v. Gunby, 4 C. & P. 149. [Tindal]

(I) Feloniously cutting off Stamps.

It was the duty of the prisoner, who was a clerk in the Stamp Office, to cut off the corners of parchments which bore the blue paper stamps allowed for as spoiled by the commissioners of stamps, and to put the blue paper stamps and the small pieces of parchment so cut off, and which were glued to them, into the fire, without separating them. Instead of doing this, he separated a blue paper stamp from the small piece of parchment to which it had been glued, and glued it to a new skin of parchment, on which the words "This Indenture," had been written. The jury found, that he had no fraudulent intent when he cut the stamp from the skin of parchment, but that he had when he separated the blue paper stamp from the small piece of parchment; and that he then intended to apply the stamp to a parchment intended to be used as an indenture:—Held, that this was a capital offence. And, it being uncertain whether the stamp so separated was impressed before or after the passing of the stat. 55 Geo. 3. c. 184, it was held, that the party might be properly convicted on a count stating the stamp to be the impression of a die made and used in pursuance of the statute made and provided for denoting a certain duty; being one of those under the management of the Commissioners of Stamps. Rex v. Smith, 5 C. & P. 107. [Bosanquet]

STATUTE.

(A) CONSTRUCTION.
(B) EVIDENCE.

(A) CONSTRUCTION.

If an act of parliament, by general words, purports o confer a power upon special donees, one of whom ossesses the same power more amply at common aw as incident to his estate, the statute shall not e intended to apply to him, so as by implication to bridge his power; and acts of his, therefore, which he statute would have authorized, will be referred o his common-law right. Ex parte Clayton, 1 Russ. & M. 369.

A private act of parliament, which directs a compensation to be made to the several persons interested "in any lands, sands, tenements, buildings, or other hereditaments," used for the purposes of he act, "or for any damage which shall have been lone thereto, or to the parties interested therein," loes not entitle a vicar or lay impropriator to a compensation in respect of titheable lands taken for the purposes of the act, and thereby rendered incapable of producing tithes. Rex v. the Commissioners of the Vene Outfall, 8 Law J. K.B. 1, s.c. 9 B. & C. 875, s.c. 4 M. & R. 646.

An act of parliament authorized duties according to a schedule. The schedule, under the head 'metals," specified cast metal, copper, brass, pewter, and tin, authorizing a certain duty upon each, and then a certain duty upon "all other metals not enumerated:"—Held, that the latter words meant all other metals ejusdem generis; and that they did not include gold and silver. Casher v. Holmes, 9 Law J. K.B. 280, s.c. 2 B. & Ad. 592.

By a canal act, the company were empowered to purchase land for the use of their navigation; the minerals beneath to remain in the owners. Whenever the owner was desirous of getting the minerals, he was to give notice to the company. They, within a limited time, were to have the option of purchasing. If they did not purchase, the owner was to be at liberty to work his mines, doing no injury to the navigation.

An owner, who was desirous to work his mines, gave notice to the company. They did not purchase within the limited time. The owner then proceeded to work the mines, and his doing so produced an injury to the navigation; but it did not appear that he had worked them in an improper manner:—Held, that as the company had not availed themselves of their right to purchase, the proviso, that the owner must do no injury to the navigation, required to be so far qualified as to mean, that he was not to work them so as to do any injury beyond that which was necessary in the ordinary course of working; and, therefore, that the company were not entitled to maintain an action against the owner for the amount of the damage sustained by the ordinary course of the working. The Proprietors of the Dudley Canal Navigation v. Grazebrook, 8 Law J. K.B. 361, s.c. 1 B. & Ad. 59.

By a local act, power was given to the Bishop of Bath and Wells, and the Justices of the county, or to any five Justices in the absence of the bishop, at the Quarter Sessions, to examine certain accounts, and ascertain the balances. At a Quarter Sessions the accounts were produced; and the Court adjourned the examination to the following Sessions, when they examined the accounts, and ascertained the balance:—Held, that the authority given had not been properly pursued, as the power was given to the bishop, &c., not as a court; and that they had no power to adjourn the examination to a future Sessions. And, as it did not appear that any five Justices had adjourned the examination, and had been present subsequently when the accounts were examined,—Held, that the fixing of the balance at the subsequent Sessions was not binding. The Conservators of the River Tone v. Ash, 8 Law J. K.B. 226, s.c. 10 B. & C. 349.

By a drainage act, the commissioners were empowered, when required for the purposes of the act, to purchase, and to make satisfaction for damage done to lands, and if the land-owners refused to treat, then to apply to two magistrates to issue their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury to ascertain the amount of the purchase-money or satisfaction. By a subsequent section, if the land-owners and the commissioners could not agree as to the compensation for damages done by the commissioners, the same were to be ascertained by a jury to be impanelled as aforesaid:—Held, that, in that case, the owners of the lands damaged, and not the commissioners, were to apply to the magistrates. In re Eau Brink Drainage, 3 Sim. 435.

By statute 16 & 17 Car. 2, the trustees or adventurers for draining Deeping Fen were seised of 10,036 acres of land, and the rates and taxes for completing the drainage of the fen were to be levied on the 10,036 acres. They were called taxable lands. There were 500 acres called free lands, and the other lands in the fen consisted of common land. The adventurers were, at their own costs and charges, to keep the river Glen with sufficient diking, roading, scouring, and banking. By a subsequent act, of the 41 Geo. 3, reciting the former act, and that the works of drainage were insufficient, and that the owners and proprietors of free lands, and persons interested in the commons, notwithstanding their exemption from the costs of making works of drainage, together with the adventurers, being desirous to obtain a better drainage for all the said lands, and more effectually to protect the same from injury by a breach in any of the banks of the river, had agreed that the respective works of drainage thereinafter mentioned should be made, erected, maintained, and supported at the expense of the trusts, proprietors, and persons, in the proportions thereinafter mentioned. By a subsequent clause, the commissioners under that act were thereby required well and sufficiently to enlarge, deepen, and scour out the river, and straighten the course thereof, where necessary, and enlarge and straighten the banks of the river in such manner as in the judgment of the commissioners should be requisite; and the costs of executing all the said works were to be paid and borne by the several persons then respectively liable to the repairs of such banks, in conjunction with the owners and proprietors interested in the drainage of the said commons, in such proportions as to the commissioners should seem just and equitable, and as they by their award should appoint; and such respective banks, after the commissioners should have completed the same, should from time to time be repaired by such persons as the commissioners should by their award direct:—Held, that the adventurers were not, by this statute, released from the obligation imposed on them by the 16 & 17 Car. 2, of cleansing and scouring the river Glen. Syson v. Johnson, 8 B. & C. 795.

(B) EVIDENCE.

An act of parliament, private in its nature, is not made admissible in evidence against strangers, by a clause declaring "that it shall be deemed and taken to be a public act, and shall be judicially taken notice of without being specially pleaded."

A canal act is not rendered a public act by containing provisions empowering the company to regulate and take tonnage rates and tolls from persons using the canal. Brett v. Beales, 1 M. & M. 421. [Tenterden]

STOCK.

[See LEGACY.]

[Transfer of 4*l.* per cent. stock to 3½*l.* or 5*l.* per cent., 11 Geo. 4. c. 13, 8 Law J. Stat. 9.]

In a contract for the purchase of stock, time is of the essence of the contract.

Where a contract is made, by which a party binds himself to deliver stock, upon condition of the payment of certain sums, at certain times, and the terms of the contract do not render it obligatory upon the other party to accept the stock, but leave him an option to take or reject it; if he do not afterwards perform the condition, he cannot, in an action, recover back any deposit he has made at the time of entering into the contract. Rothschild v. Hennings, 7 Law J. K.B. 230, s. c. 9 B. & C. 470, s. c. 4 M. & R. 349.

Where a testator makes a specific bequest of stock in the public funds to one person, and appoints another as his executor, the executor is entitled to have the stock transferred into his name, unless he has previously assented to the legacy. Franklin v. the Bank of England, 7 Law J. K.B. 183, s. c. 9 B. & C. 156, s. c. 4 M. & R. 11.

The plaintiffs were possessed of certain stock, which was sold and transferred in the Bank books under a forged power of attorney. The plaintiffs entered into an agreement with the Bank to tender a proof of the sum thus surreptitiously obtained, under a commission of bankrupt issued against the firm of which the party who forged the power of attorney was a member, in consideration of the Bank agreeing without litigation to replace the stock:—Held, that the plaintiffs' right of action against the Bank in respect of this stock, was suspended until they had fulfilled their engagement. Stracey v. the Bank of England, 8 Law J. C.P. 234, s. c. 6 Bing. 754, s. c. 4 M. & P. 639.

Order made for a transfer of stock under 56 Geo. 3. c. 60, without a reference. In re Avery, 1 Russ. & M. 356.

The Court will, on the petition of an assignee of the reversion, order the accountant-general not to transfer stock, although the petition has not been served on the assignor. Salmon v. ——, 1 Tam. 74.

STOLEN GOODS.

[See RECEIVER OF STOLEN GOODS.]

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

Where goods sent directed to the residence of the buyer, arrived at the warehouse of a wharfinger, and subsequently, the buyer being insolvent, the contract between him and the seller was rescinded, but no application was made to the wharfinger until six weeks after their arrival at the warehouse: it was held, that the mere delay in applying to the wharfinger did not determine the transitus; that the goods were still in transitu; and consequently that the wharfinger could not set up a lien upon the goods in respect of the general balance due to him from the seller. Morley v. Hay, 7 Law J. K.B. 104.

Where the vendor has a right to stop in transitu, and exercises that right, and the whole matter rests in contract, without any completion, either by payment on one part, or by delivery on the other, the stoppage in transitu amounts to a rescinding of the contract, so as to revest the right of property in the goods in the vendor. Accordingly, where, under such circumstances, the vendor rescinded the contract:—Held, that the assignee of the bankrupt vendee could not maintain an action on a policy of insurance on the goods, effected in the name of the bankrupt, he having no insurable interest in them. Clay v. Harrison, 8 Law J. K.B. 90, s. c. 10 B. & C. 99, s. c. 5 M. & R. 17.

SUBPŒNA.

[See PRACTICE and WITNESS.]

SURGEON AND APOTHECARY.

[See MURDER and MANSLAUGHTER.]

An apprentice to an apothecary, who was in the habit of practising at a town nine miles from his master's residence, but bonâ fide on his master's account, in cases in some of which the patients never saw the master, and did not know of his existence, held to be liable to the penalty under the 55 Geo. 3. c. 194. s. 20, for practising as an apothecary without a certificate.

Semble—that the lawful practice of the apprentice is confined to his master's residence. The Apothecaries' Company v. Greenwood, 9 Law J. K.B. 351, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 708.

In an action by an apothecary, to prove practising as such previous to August 1815, the plaintiff ought to shew instances of compounding and making up prescriptions: merely attending local complaints is not enough. Thompson v. Lewis, 1 M. & M. 255, s. c. 3 C. & P. 483. [Tenterden]

An apothecary may either charge for his attendances, or for the medicines he sends, but he cannot be allowed to charge for both. Town v. Lady Gwyley, 3 C. & P. 581. [Best]

A surgeon and apothecary may, besides his charges for medicine, recover such charges for attendances as the jury shall consider to be fair and reasonable. Handey v. Henson, 4 C. & P. 110. [Tenterden]

SURRENDER.

The circumstance of an outstanding term not being noticed in the marriage settlement of the person entitled to the inheritance, does not warrant a presumption that the term has been surrendered. Doe d. Blacknell v. Plowman, 9 Law J. K.B. 289, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 573.

In ejectment, it appeared, that the premises were conveyed by deeds of lease and release for a term of six hundred years for raising a sum of money by mortgage, with a clause of cesser of the term on payment of the mortgage money and costs; and that in 1802, the Court of Chancery had decreed a sale of the mortgaged property for the payment of the money, under which decree some sales had taken place; but no evidence was given as to any further proceedings in the Chancery suit, nor of any title to the premises in the defendant. Under these circumstances, the Court refused to presume that the mortgage money was paid off, and that the term had either ceased under the proviso of cesser, or had been surrendered to the owner of the inheritance. Doe d. Hammond v. Cooke, 7 Law J. C.P. 255, s. c. 6 Bing. 174, s. c. 3 M. & P. 411.

TAXES.

[See STATUTE.]

Duties of receivers general of the land and assessed taxes, to be transferred to inspectors of taxes, and other provisions for the receipt and remittance of such taxes, 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 18, 9 Law J. Stat. 20.

33 & 38 Geo. 3, as to double assessments of the land tax, explained and amended by 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 21, 9 Law J. Stat. 24.

TENANT FOR LIFE.

Devise to trustees, in trust to sell, for payment of testator's debts, and subject thereto, to A for life, sans waste, remainder to his first and other sons in tail. The trustees sold timber on the estates, and applied the proceeds in payment of the debts:—Held, that A was entitled to have the amount raised by sale of the estates, and paid to him. Davies v. Wescomb, 2 Sim. 425.

Devise to trustees and their heirs, during the life of A, in trust for A, and after his decease to B in fee.

The trustees recover, in A's lifetime, damages for breach of covenants in a lease granted by the testatrix, and still subsisting. A dies; the damages belong to her estate. Noble v. Cass, 2 Sim. 343.

The Court will not, on the application of a tenant for life, direct an inquiry, whether it would be for the benefit of all parties interested in the property, that certain permanent and substantial improvements should be made in the mansion house. Nairn v. Marjoribanks, 3 Russ. 582.

Order made ex parte, under the 6 Ann. c. 18, that a lessee for lives should produce the cestuis que vie to persons named, and at a time and place specified in the order. Ex parte Whalley, 4 Russ. 561.

TENANT IN TAIL.

A tenant in tail, under a will, permitted to set aside a conveyance made by two successive tenants for life to a purchaser, on the ground that the transaction had been collusively managed between the tenants for life and the purchaser, to the injury of the interest of the tenant in tail. Mullins v. Townsend, 2 Dow. & Cl. 430.

TENDER.

If an attorney send a letter to demand payment, and the debtor make a tender to him, that is a good tender, unless he disclaims his authority at the time; and, if the attorney be absent, he is bound by the acts of those whom he allows to represent him at his office. Therefore, after such a letter being sent, a tender to the clerk of the attorney at his office (the attorney being absent) is good.

A tender to a person in the office of the plaintiff's attorney, who is referred to on the subject by a clerk in the office, and refuses the tender, as being of an insufficient sum, is a good tender, without shewing who that person was. Wilmott v. Smith, 2 M. & M. 138, s. c. 3 C. & P. 453. [Tenterden]

Where the amount of the debt, or the fact of an alleged tender, be in dispute, the Court will not refer either the one or the other to the Master, without the consent of both parties; but will leave the defendant, if he has made a tender, to plead it; or if he has not, to pay money into court under the common rule. Frowd v. Lucas, 9 Law J. K.B. 65.

Semble, that by a tender of a certain sum in an action of assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, the defendant admits his liability to that extent, but is not precluded from contesting it beyond the sum tendered. Where, therefore, the defendant had tendered 10*l.*, and at the trial the Judge told the jury, that, had the tender not been made, the plaintiff must have been nonsuited; but that, the tender having been made, the case was altered; and they accordingly returned a verdict for the residue of the plaintiff's demand:—The Court refused to nonsuit the plaintiff, no leave being reserved; but the Judge certified to deprive the plaintiff of costs. Seaton v. Espinasse, 9 Law J. C.P. 56, s. c. 5 Bing. 187, s. c. 2 M. & P. 301.

A tender not accepted in due time, may be reduced by the Court. General Palmer, 2 Hag. 180.

TERMS.

[Alteration of, by 1 Will. 4. c. 70. s. 6, 8 Law J. Stat. 157.]

THEATRE.

[See PLAYERS and SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.]

The statute 10 Geo. 2. c. 28. s. 2. prohibits acting plays, &c. for gain, without patent from the King, licence from the lord chamberlain. Section 5 provides that no person shall be authorized by patent or licence to act except within the city and liberties of Westminster, or where the King shall be resident — and that the prohibition in section 2 is not meant to interfere with the exempting power, as mentioned in section 5, but prevails throughout the kingdom.

The act 28 Geo. 3. c. 30. enables Magistrates in sessions to license theatrical performances in places where they cannot be authorized under the statute of 10 Geo. 2. A conviction under 10 Geo. 2. c. 28. s. 2 for performing without patent from the King, or licence from the lord chamberlain, at Manchester, is good, it is for the defendant to shew, if such be the fact, that he had a licence from the Sessions. Rex v. Mercier, 1 B. & Ad. 489.

THREATENING LETTERS.

An anonymous letter stated, that the writer had overheard certain persons agree together to do an injury to the person or property of the prosecutor, to whom the letter was sent; and that if thirty sovereigns were laid in a particular place, the writer would give such information as would frustrate the attempt:—Held, that this was not a threatening letter within the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 8, although it appeared that the letter was a mere device to defraud the prosecutor of thirty sovereigns. Rex v. Jackson, 4 C. & P. 227. [Bolland]

A letter was signed "I am your cut-throat," and stated, that if the person to whom it was sent had his deserts, he would not live the week out, and that the writer would be with him shortly; and if he made light of it, the writer would make light of him and his:—Held, that this letter so plainly conveyed a threat to kill and murder, as to render it unnecessary to insert either innuendos or prefatory allegations in the indictment to explain its meaning. Rex v. Fowcher, 4 C. & P. 562. [Patteson]

TIME.

[See CORPORATION (A, b,) and LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF.]

In computing the six months limited by 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. s. 8, for bringing an action against a Magistrate for false imprisonment, the day of discharge from imprisonment is to be reckoned exclusively. Therefore, where a party, discharged on the 14th of December, sued out a writ on the 14th of June following, it was held, that the action was commenced in time. Hardy v. Ryle, 7 Law J. M.C. 118.

Under 6 Geo. 4. c. 16. s. 81, where the computation of time is to be from an act done, the day when such act is done is to be included. For some purposes the Court notices the fraction of a day. Ex parte Vaughan, in re Starkey, 1 Mont. & M'Ar. B.C. 8.

TITHES.

[See STATUTE.]

(A) WHAT ARE.
(B) TITLE TO.
(C) WHAT TITHEABLE.
(D) EXEMPTION.
(E) SETTING OUT.
(F) COMPOSITION.
(G) SUITS IN EQUITY.
(H) PLEADINGS.
(I) EVIDENCE.
  (a) In general.
  (b) Title.
  (c) Exemption.
  (d) Modus.
  (e) Composition.
(K) PRACTICE.

(A) WHAT ARE.

The word "tithes," is a word of equivocal meaning, and as such, where found in written documents, is not conclusive, but may, according to circumstances, either mean tithes in kind, or may mean that which is in lieu of tithes in kind, viz. the ecclesiastical emolument or modus, or payment in lieu of them. Beck v. Bree, 9 Law J. Exch. 26, s. c. 1 C. & J. 246, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 132.

(B) TITLE TO.

Where the order of birth of calves can be ascertained, the tenth born calf is that which the tithe-owner is entitled to. Tratman v. Carrington, 9 Law J. Exch. 75, s. c. 1 C. & J. 320, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 167.

Whether the natural or artificial grasses, cut green and lying in the swathe, or set up in cocks, are great or small tithe? Lewis v. Allnutt, 2 Bligh, N.S. 83.

A purchaser entitled to tithe-hay, is not necessarily entitled to tithe of clover, vetches, and grass cut and carried away green — semble. Lewis v. Bridgman, 3 Sim. 316.

(C) WHAT TITHEABLE.

[See D.]

Wood cut from hedges is titheable, although used on the farm. White v. Smith, 1 Tam. 306.

A miller who grinds his own corn, and sells the flour, is not liable to tithes for his mill. Townley v. Colegate, 2 Sim. 297.

(D) EXEMPTION.

The word "or" in the 6th section of 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 13. is, from the context, to be read as "and." Consequently, barren land, inclosed under an inclosure act, into which the person entitled turned his cattle, but who did not act to render the land more productive than it was before,—was held, not to be improved thereby, within the meaning of the above section, so as to render the land liable to tithe seven years afterwards. Ross v. Smith, 9 Law J. K.B. 162, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 907.

Whether the natural or artificial grasses cut green, and lying in the swathe, if given to husbandry horses, there being other food grown on the farm sufficient for these horses, are exempt from tithe—quære. Lewis v. Allnutt, 2 Bligh, N.S. 83.

(E) SETTING OUT.

To set out the tithe of potatoes by the tenth basket, as raised, and immediately remove the nine parts, is not sufficient; reasonable quantity must be raised, before the setting out, in order to afford to the tithe-wner a fair opportunity of view. Bearblock v. Meains, 2 Hag. Ec. 495.

In a particular parish, the practice had been to set ut the tithe of potatoes in sacks, and for the tithe-wner to come once or twice a day to see the setting ut. The growers, of whom there were fifty in the arish, then had recourse to a new mode of setting ut the tithe, viz. in baskets called prickles, ten of hich could be filled every twenty minutes; and fter they had been suffered to remain half an hour, ine baskets were removed to the sorting places, to repare the potatoes for the London markets.

It appeared that an adherence to the old practice aused injury to the potatoes under the particular ircumstances; on the other hand, the new practice ould compel the tithe-owner, in order to prevent raud, to have a man in each field all day.

In an action against the tithe-owner for not taking way the tithe set out according to the new mode, he jury, against the opinion of the Judge, found hat the potatoes might be as well judged of in the rickles as in any other way; and that it would njure new potatoes to put them in sacks: they herefore found for the plaintiff. The Court would ot disturb the verdict. Thompson v. Bearblock, 9 Law J. K.B. 153, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 812.

(F) Composition.

[See post, I, e.]

A custom, that the rector shall occupy, from Lady-day to Michaelmas in each year, forty acres, part of a fen consisting of about 1200 acres, in lieu of the tithes of all hay and fodder arising on the fen, is a valid custom. Sparke v. Ivatt, 7 Law J. Chanc. 158.

(G) Suits in Equity.

[Cherry v. Legh, 1 Dow. & Cl. 98, Dig. Law J. 506.]

The language of an endowment being ambiguous, with respect to the tithe of hay, and being unexplained by any subsequent documents, and there being no modern evidence of usage, and no evidence of perception by the vicar, the Court declined to decree for the vicar, as against a portionist claiming the tithe in question, but directed an issue. Wyld v. Ward, 3 Y. & J. 192.

Issue directed, on the application of a vicar, to try the right to tithes. Townley v. Colegate, 2 Sim. 297.

Quære—whether a court of equity can make a decree to establish the right to tithes. Day v. Drake, 3 Sim. 72.

(H) Pleadings.

The landlord may be joined with his tenant as a defendant to a bill for tithes, where he has documents in his custody, a discovery of which is sought by the bill, in aid of the plaintiff's claim. Day v. Drake, 3 Sim. 72.

To a bill by a vicar, for some of the tithes of certain lands, no person except the occupiers ought to be made parties, although they allege that the tithes in question have been always received or demanded by the rector, and state that it is uncertain whether their lands are, or not, within the parish. Cook v. Blunt, 2 Sim. 417.

Defendant, in her answer to a bill for tithes of a mill, said that it was an ancient mill, built before living memory; that no tithes had ever been paid for it; and that it had always been considered exempt from tithes:—Held, that the exemption was well pleaded. Townley v. Colegate, 2 Sim. 297.

Mode of pleading a farm modus. Wharton v. Child, 7 Law J. Chanc. 106.

Moduses pleaded, as in the answer set forth in the statement of the pleadings in this case:—Held, not to be ill pleaded; but to be well and sufficiently laid as a defence to a bill for tithes, where it had been objected at the bar by the counsel for the plaintiff, 1st, that the moduses as there pleaded, were badly and insufficiently laid, having left it wholly in doubt, and uncertain to what lands they were meant to be pleaded, or, in other words, that the lands in respect of which the particular tithes were meant to be shewn to be covered thereby, were not set forth with sufficient certainty; and, 2ndly, that the character and nature of the moduses set up had not been distinctly stated or shewn. Southwood v. Foreman, 10 Price, 327.

(I) Evidence.

(a) In general.

The bishop's registry is the proper place of custody for the sequestrator's receipts, accounts (&c.), with reference to their admissibility, as legal evidence in questions of disputed right to tithes. Pulley v. Hilton, 12 Price, 625.

A terrier, though signed by churchwardens only, is admissible evidence in a suit for tithes, by a portioner against an occupier. Lewis v. Bridgman, 3 Sim. 316.

There being a question as to the local situation of the lands, and the extent of a grant to the defendant, and little or no evidence of perception on either side, the Court considered that they must be bound by the verdict of the jury.

Presumption of grant founded on non-perception, may be raised against a lay rector, if the pleadings are so framed as to admit it. Ringrose v. Todd, 12 Price, 650.

Where, on the trial of an issue,—whether a modus set up as covering a certain district or tract of land, has existed from time immemorial,—conflicting documentary evidence, and evidence of usage, &c. have been produced for and against such modus (not in itself rank, as a district modus,) and the jury have found their verdict establishing such modus:—The Court will not disturb such verdict by granting a new trial, unless on the score of misdirection, or it appears satisfactorily that the weight of evidence preponderates against such verdict, or that some plain ground is furnished by such documentary evidence, to shew that the verdict is an incorrect one. Beck v. Bree, 9 Law J. Exch. 26, s. c. 1 C. & J. 246, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 132.

(b) Title.

Where a vicar's general title is admitted, it is not necessary for him to prove more than perception of the particular tithes demanded by the bill to be paid to him by composition, and the defendants cannot insist on such payments as moduses. The Court may determine such a case without issues, notwithstanding conflicting evidence. Southwood v. Foreman, 10 Price, 327.

In a suit for tithes, an admission by the defendant of the plaintiff's right to a specified modus, in lieu of tithes, which cannot be sustained, in consequence of its being defectively pleaded, is an admission of his title to the tithes. Wharton v. Child, 7 Law J. Chanc. 106.

In favour of a long continued enjoyment of tithes in conformity with successive recitals in old leases, the Court will presume performance of conditions to endow, &c., and adopt every other presumption necessary to give effect to such a title so supported. Wooley v. Birkenshaw, 12 Price, 702.

A terrier is evidence as to personal tithes. Townley v. Colegate, 2 Sim. 297.

Though mere non-payment of tithes, for however long a period, would not be evidence of a grant, yet, a layman's adverse enjoyment or pernancy, for a long series of years, of the tithes of certain lands, or of a money payment in lieu of tithes, coupled with a succession of deeds, by which the tithes or money payments in lieu of tithes, have been conveyed from one person to another, corresponding with the enjoyment, affords evidence sufficient to justify a jury in presuming a legal grant of the tithes. Bacon v. Williams, 3 Russ. 525.

Upon a bill for tithes, by a vicar against the occupiers of an estate, which had belonged to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, and, after the dissolution of the monasteries, being vested in King Henry the Eighth, had been granted by him to the Archbishop of York and his successors, under whom the defendants occupied, the defendants pleaded that the lands were held by the Hospital exempt from tithes; that they were so held and granted by the king; and they proved that no tithes had, within memory, been paid for the lands. On the part of the vicar was produced an inspeximus of an inquisition made under the authority of the Archbishop of York in 1314, by which it was found, after specifying certain tithes, "that the vicar ought to receive all other tithes to the said church belonging, (except corn and hay,) which the master and brethren of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem received as rectors; but that all the vicars had, ever since the time of the ordination of the vicarage, received all other tithes, and peaceably, and did so at that time; but they were bound to give their tithe of corn and hay:"—Held, upon the evidence of this document, that the vicar was entitled to the tithes claimed by his bill. Elsley v. Donnison, 2 Bligh, N.S. 95.

A, the owner of the tithes of a district in a parish, and B, his lessee, in July 1824 file a bill in Chancery against C, the occupier of lands within the district, praying an account for six years back of the tithes of clover, vetches, meadow and rye grass, and other grasses, cut green, and partly left in the swathe, and partly cocked. C, by his answer, admits the title of A and B to the tithes of the district, and his own occupation, and the taking of the tithes; but contends, that the clover, &c. are small tithes, and belong to, and are claimed by the vicar, and that he pays to the vicar a composition for all the small tithes, and that the clover, &c. had been used as green meat for his husbandry horses; and upon these grounds he denies the title of the plaintiffs to the tithes in question. It appeared in evidence, that in the year 1822, C had written a letter to B, stating, that on the day of writing the letter he should cut vetches, and set out the tithes, and that he had no objection to compound; and in the year 1824, a letter having been written by the solicitor of A, threatening to file a bill for the tithes in question, C, by his answer to that letter, says, that he has never refused to pay the lessee the tithes of green clover, vetches, and grass.

Upon these admissions, notwithstanding the objections raised by the answer,—Held, (reversing the decree of the Court below,) that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for an account. Lewis v. Allnatt, 2 Bligh, N.S. 83.

(c) Exemption.

A general title to tithes throughout a parish in a vicar, gives him a primâ facie case, and casts upon the occupier claiming exemption on the ground of his lands being liable to pay tithes to a rector, the onus of proving that case on the trial of an issue directed, for the purpose of procuring to the court of equity the aid of the verdict of a jury. Pelley v. Hilton, 12 Price, 625.

Where tithes have never been paid since the dissolution, the Court of Chancery will presume all facts which, consistently with the evidence in the cause, would give legal origin to an exemption from the payment of tithes. Humphreys v. Waguaff, 1 Russ. & M. 529.

A party setting up an exemption from vicarial tithes for part of his farm, as being the demesne lands of a priory or monastery, the tithes of which were excepted from the endowment of the vicar, is bound to prove, that his lands actually were the demesne lands; and it is not sufficient for him to shew that the priory had a manor and lands in the parish; that, on the dissolution of monasteries, the manor and lands devolved to the crown, by whom the same, together with the rectory, were granted to persons under whom the defendant claimed title; and that the defendant's farm was known by the name of the Manor Grange, which, it was insisted, meant the demesne lands: and therefore, where a defendant set up such an exemption, but did not actually prove that his lands were the demesne, and there was evidence of the receipt for a century past of a composition for tithes for the farm in question, though alleged by the defendant to be paid for a part of the farm only, which he admitted not to be demesne lands:—The Court decreed an account, with costs. Young v. Merchant, 3 Y. & J. 467.

To support a parochial modus, it is not sufficient for the defendants to prove the non-render of tithes in kind; they must distinctly shew the acceptance of the modus for some time, and to some extent. Lynes v. Lett, 3 Y. & J. 405.

A modus decimandi may be proved by a document signed by a former rector, setting out what tithes are usually paid in the parish, although it be not found in the registry of the bishop or archdeacon, but is in the custody of a parishioner. Maddison v. Nuttall, 8 Law J. C.P. 27, s. c. 6 Bing. 226, s. c. 3 M. & P. 544.

A single terrier, unsupported by usage, is wholly sufficient to establish a modus, though there be ot only no proof of payment of tithes in kind, but niform evidence of the non-payment of tithes in kind, rithin living memory. Lynes v. Lett, 3 Y. & J. 405.

S, as vicar of A, filed a bill in equity, stating a itle by endowment, usage, or otherwise, and claiming against the occupiers of certain farms all tithes, xcept of corn and grain. The defendants, by answer, admitted that S was vicar; but stated, that hey did not know whether he was entitled by endowment, or usage, or otherwise, to all the tithes, xcept grain, or to what tithes he was entitled, except as after mentioned; and they set up a modus, which they stated to be payable, in respect of their arms, in lieu of all tithes belonging to the vicarage. No proof of endowment was given on the part of he vicar, nor of any perception of tithes. On the contrary, it was proved that no tithes had been rendered in kind for thirty years before the commencement of the suit; but that a sum of 37*l.* had been paid to the vicar for the tithes of the farms occupied by the defendants. At the hearing, an issue was directed to try the validity of the modus. Denchfield v. Strong, 4 Bligh, N.S. 136, s. c. 1 D. & Cl. A.C. 480.

(e) Composition.

By the act 37 Hen. 8, after reciting that divers variances, contentions, and strifes had grown within the city of London, between the parsons, vicars, and curates, and the citizens and inhabitants, touching the payment of tithes, oblations, and other duties, for appeasing whereof, as well the said parsons, vicars, and curates, as the citizens and inhabitants, had compromitted and put themselves to stand to such order and decree touching the premises as should be made by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the several other persons therein named, for a final end and conclusion to be had and made touching the premises for ever: it was enacted, that such order and direction as should be made, decreed, and concluded by the archbishops, lords, and knights therein named, or any six of them, before the first day of March then next ensuing, concerning the payment of the tithes, oblations, or other duties within the said city or liberties, and inrolled in the King's High Court of Chancery of record, should stand and remain and be as an act of parliament, and should bind, as well all citizens and inhabitants of the city and liberties for the time being, as the said parsons, vicars, curates, and their successors for ever, according to the effect, purport, and intent of the said order and decree so to be made and inrolled.

In a suit instituted by the impropriate rector of the parish of St. Helen's, Bishopsgate, against the occupier of a house within the parish, claiming payment by way of composition, as under a decree made in pursuance of the act, it appeared that at various times, from the date of the act to the time of filing the bill, decrees and orders had been made in all the courts of Westminster Hall, and in the House of Lords, upon the supposition or presumption that a decree according to the act had been made and inrolled; but no proof of such inrolment was produced in the cause; and the defendants to the suit proved that the records had been searched, and that no such inrolment was to be found.

Upon these pleadings and evidence an issue was directed in the court below, to try whether the decree mentioned in and authorized to be made by the statute was duly inrolled according to the provision in the statute.

This order was reversed upon appeal; and it was declared, that if to give effect to the statute it was necessary that the decree should be inrolled, it ought to be presumed that the decree had been duly inrolled. Macdougall v. Purrier, 4 Bligh, N.S. 433.

In a suit for tithes, by the rector, the defendant set up a real composition of 10*s.*, as covering, with other lands, the lands in his occupation. In support of this defence he proved, that in the reign of Charles the Second the lands in question were divided among three persons, on a partition, and from which persons the title was regularly deduced by numerous instruments, many of which conveyed the tithes of the portions of the lands comprised in them; and from some of them it appeared that a money payment, parcel of a larger payment, amounting to 10*s.*, was provided for the parson, in lieu of tithes; he also proved, that, in 1666, in an action on the statute, for not setting out tithes, by the then rector, against an occupier of the lands, a verdict was found for the defendant. It appeared, from the evidence, that the tithes had been rendered prior to the reign of Edward the Second; but from that period no trace could be found of any tithe having been rendered; nor was there any evidence of the payment of the 10*s.*, or any part of it. There was no reference in the pleadings, or in the evidence, to the actual deed of composition:—The Court held, that there was not sufficient evidence from which a real composition could, in the present state of the law, be inferred, and decreed an account with costs. Lediard v. Austie, 3 Y. & J. 548.

It is clearly settled, that mere non-payment will not support the defence of a real composition, nor be evidence from whence to presume the deed which must have been the foundation of it. Lediard v. Austie, 3 Y. & J. 548.

(K) PRACTICE.

[Ross v. Aglionby, 4 Russ. 489, Dig. Law J. 512.]

Motion by defendants in tithe suits, in all of which the same defence was made, that the suits might be consolidated, refused. The Warden and Fellows of Manchester College v. Isherwood, 2 Sim. 476.

Leave refused, in a tithe suit, to file a supplemental answer, setting up a modus, after the cause had been set down for hearing. Macdougal v. Purrier, 4 Russ. 486.

Defendant, in her answer to a bill for tithes, pleaded a modus for all tithes. She then discovered that the modus covered part only of the tithes, and moved to correct the mistake by filing a supplemental answer:—Ordered, that the cause should proceed as if the modus had been laid in the manner proposed. Popmore v. Skipwith, 2 Sim. 565.

TOBACCO.

[Growth of, in, and importation from Ireland, permitted. 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 13, 9 Law J. Stat. 14.]

TOLLS.

[Turnpike acts regulated, so far as they relate to certain exemptions from toll. 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 25, 9 Law J. Stat. 47.]

A grant of a fair or market, with an express grant of toll, passes reasonable toll, though no amount of toll be specified. Corporation of Stamford v. Pawlett, 1 C. & J. 57, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 291.

The grant of a fair or market, "cum omnibus tolentis, et aliis dictis feriis sive nundinis pertinentibus et spectantibus," passes a reasonable toll to the grantee, though the amount of toll be not specified. Pawlett v. the Corporation of Stamford, 1 C. & J. 400.

A prescription to take a toll of all fish landed in a particular place, in consideration of keeping a capstan and rope for the use of the fishermen, to draw their boats up from the sea,—Held good. The Earl of Falmouth v. George, 7 Law J. C.P. 40, s. c. 5 Bing. 286, s. c. 2 M. & P. 457.

In support of a claim of toll thorough, over the whole of a town, it is not a sufficient consideration to shew that the party claiming is liable to repair roads and bridges in a part of the town. Brett v. Beales, 8 Law J. K.B. 141, s. c. 10 B. & C. 508, s. c. 1 M. & M. 426.

Where the king, before the time of legal memory, was entitled to the soil of the town of C, and to toll traverse within it, and afterwards granted to the burgesses of the town, "the town of C, with all its appurtenances," the words were held sufficient to pass the toll. Brett v. Beales, 1 M. & M. 426. [Tenterden]

A company formed by act of parliament, in order to render a river navigable, were empowered to take certain tolls, until the expenses incurred, and interest, should be satisfied. To enable themselves to compete with a rival canal company, they took lower tolls than they were authorized:—Held, that they had a right to do this, and could not be compelled by mandamus to take the full sum authorized. Rex v. the Conservators of the River Tone, 9 Law J. K.B. 80, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 561.

Where a person entitled to toll of a commodity, (wheat, for instance,) takes more than he is entitled to, an action of trover lies against him for the excess, although the part lawfully taken be mixed up with the excess. Norman v. Bell, 9 Law J. K.B. 177, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 190.

An old deed between a public body claiming tolls and others liable thereto, regulating the amount of payment, is evidence in the nature of reputation of the existence of the tolls. Brett v. Beales, 1 M. & M. 416. [Tenterden]

In an action for tolls claimed by a corporation, an ancient schedule produced from among their muniments, copies of which were delivered by their officer to the lessee of the tolls, and by the lessee to the collectors, by which they have actually collected, is admissible in evidence for the corporation.

Contrà, where the copies in the hands of the lessee are not shewn to have been delivered to him from the corporation, although they correspond accurately with the old schedule. Brett v. Beales, 1 M. & M. 419. [Tenterden]

Semble—That, in convictions under the 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, and 4 Geo. 4. c. 95, the following is the result as to appeal and certiorari:—

1st. If the conviction be for a sum not exceeding 40*s*., there is neither appeal nor certiorari.
2nd. If it be for a sum exceeding 40*s*. and not exceeding 5*l*., there may be an appeal, but no certiorari.
3rd. If it be for a sum exceeding 5*l*., there may be appeal or certiorari.

In case of an appeal against a conviction, the informer, and not the Justice, is the party appealed against, though the notice of appeal is to be served upon the latter; and, although the informer do not appear at the Sessions to support the conviction, costs may be awarded to the appellant against him.

And if the Sessions award such costs, the Court of King's Bench will, by mandamus, compel them to issue a warrant of distress for their payment. Rex v. the Justices of Hants, 9 Law J. M.C. 109, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 654.

TRADE.

[See Covenant and Contract.]

[Payment of wages in goods, in certain trades, prohibited by 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 37, 9 Law J. Stat. 66.]

The custom in favour of unrestrained trade among the King's subjects is so strong, in point of law, that even the Lord Mayor's Court of London cannot support proceedings upon by-laws in restraint of trade among the citizens, without first shewing the immemorial custom, that none but freemen of the city shall carry on trade within it. The shewing the general custom to make by-laws is not sufficient. Clark v. Le Cren, 7 Law J. K.B. 186, s. c. 9 B. & C. 52.

TRANSPORTATION.

[Amendment of 5 Geo. 4., 1 Will. 4. c. 39, 8 Law J. Stat. 94.]

TRESPASS.

[See Assault.]

(A) Where maintainable.
(B) Pleading.
(C) Evidence.
(D) Verdict and Damages.
(E) Costs.
(F) Malicious Trespass Act.

(A) Where maintainable.

Held, that trespass for breaking and entering plaintiff's dwelling-house, and taking away goods of a lodger of plaintiff, who had not paid part of a year's rent, under the circumstances of the case, might be maintained by the plaintiff on such a possession as he had, although he had not actually distrained them, the plaintiff being entitled to a species of lien on the goods of the party in his custody, under the circumstances. Symons v. Hearson, 12 Price, 369.

Where goods, apparently the property of A, pass upon his death into the possession of his widow, she is entitled, upon her mere possessory right, and without shewing that she is her husband's legal representative, to maintain trespass against a wrongdoer for the taking of the goods; or, if they be sold, he may waive the tort, and maintain assumpsit for he proceeds, without proof of title. Oughton v. Seppings, 8 Law J. K.B. 394, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 241.

By rule of court, a writ of fi. fa. was ordered to be set aside, the defendant (who was plaintiff in this action) undertaking not to bring an action for the seizure; and it was further ordered, that an alias writ should be set aside. The sheriff, who had seized under the first writ, continued in possession, and sold under the second writ:—Held, that the rule of court did not prevent the present plaintiff from bringing trespass against the plaintiff in the former action, for what was done under the second writ; and that the defendant in this action could not justify under either of the writs, which must be considered to be void. Parkins v. Plympton, 9 Law J. C.P. 223, s. c. 7 Bing. 676, s. c. 5 M. & P. 731.

A man who takes possession of a ship by the consent of plaintiff's agent, not liable to an action of trespass. Miles v. Dawson, Pea. A.C. 59. [Kenyon]

Where a person goes out sporting with his friends, and purposely conducts them to another's land, he is equally guilty of a trespass, although he may remain off the land whilst his friends go on it. Hill v. Walker, Pea. A.C. 234. [Lawrence]

A Judge will not certify a wilful trespass, unless there be proof of personal notice. Bevans v. Reynolds, Pea. A.C. 217. [Lawrence]

(B) Pleadings.

[Fancy v. Scott, 2 M.& R. 335, Dig. Law J. 518.]

Where a plea justifies a trespass, it need not expressly aver the identity of the trespass justified, with that declared for, provided the identity be manifest from the whole subject-matter. Carridge v. Lautour, 7 Law J. K.B. 33.

Plea of leave and licence, to trespass for breaking and entering plaintiff's dwelling-house, and taking away goods of plaintiff's lodger, from whom rent was due, under the circumstances in evidence, rebutted by the replication de injuriâ absque tali causâ, without replying or new assigning excess; the principle being, that such replication traverses the defendant's justification to the extent pleaded. Symons v. Hearson, 12 Price, 369.

Where a plaintiff complains of a trespass in a close which he names and describes by metes and bounds, and the defendant pleads a justification as to the trespass in the close "in which, &c.," such expression, "in which, &c." means not the whole close, but the spot in which the trespass was committed; and the plea will be proved if the justification proved apply to that spot, although it do not extend to the whole of the close. Bassett v. Mitchell, 9 Law J. K.B. 140, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 99.

Special plea, by way of justification to an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, that the locus in quo was part and parcel of the liberty of the Rolls, and lying and being within the same, situate at and being part of the boundaries thereof; that the defendant then was, and at the time when, &c., was an inhabitant and resident within the said liberty, and beadle thereof; and that all and singular the inhabitants of the said liberty, from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, had used and been accustomed, at their free will and pleasure, yearly and every year, on the feast of the Ascension of our Lord, called Holy Thursday, to go and perambulate the boundaries of the said liberty; that at the same time when, &c., being the feast of the Ascension, called Holy Thursday, the defendant, then being such inhabitant and beadle of the said liberty, together with other inhabitants of the said liberty, was and were perambulating the said liberty and the boundaries thereof; and in their said perambulation it then and there became necessary, for the purpose of such perambulation, for the inhabitants of the said liberty to enter, pass, repass, and perambulate, in, along, and over the said closes in which, &c.; wherefore defendant, as such inhabitant aforesaid, for the purpose of the said perambulation, did enter, pass, repass, and perambulate, in, along, and over the said closes, as he lawfully might, for the purpose aforesaid; and, in so doing, defendant, with his feet in walking, unavoidably a little trod, &c. the grass, &c. in the said closes; averring that the railing was an obstruction to the defendants, standing over and across the way by which said inhabitants were in the said perambulation to pass, so that without a little digging up, throwing down, and removing, &c., the inhabitants of the said parish and liberty could not proceed to make said perambulation; and therefore defendant did, &c.

Replication, Precludi non, because, protesting that the said last-mentioned plea, and the matters therein contained, are wholly insufficient in law: protesting also, that the said close called the Kitchen-garden, and the said other close near and adjoining to the same, in the said first count of the said declaration mentioned, are not, nor at the said time when, &c. were, nor from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary have been, part and parcel of the liberty of the Rolls, in the county of Middlesex, and lying and being within the same, situate and being part of the boundaries thereof; and that all and singular the inhabitants of the said liberty, from time, &c., have not used or been accustomed, at their free will and pleasure, yearly and every year, on the feast of the Ascension of our Lord, called Holy Thursday, to go and perambulate the boundaries of the said liberty, in manner and form as the said defendant hath above in the second plea in that behalf alleged. For replication in this behalf, the said plaintiffs say that there is not, nor from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary hath been, any custom used and approved of within the said liberty, for the said inhabitants of the said liberty, on perambulating the boundaries of the said liberty, to go into, over, and along the said closes in which, &c.; and thereupon issue is joined.

Held, that protestation of the matter protested in the replication, has not the effect of admitting it, so as to dispense with proof of it on the trial of the issue.

Verdict for defendant set aside, and entered for the plaintiffs non obstante, on the ground of defendant failing to support the special pleas by way of justification by evidence.

Replication (semble) bad, as traversing more than the pleas alleged, if specially demurred to. Grant v. Kearney, 12 Price, 773.

(C) Evidence.

[Johnson v. Howson, 2 M.& R. 226, Dig. Law J. 519.]

In trespass, for breaking and entering a close called the Lord's Leys, the defendant pleaded that the Lord's Leys was part of B Common, and that he had a right to dig stone upon the waste and uninclosed parts of the common, and upon the Lord's Leys as part and parcel thereof; the plaintiff in his replication, protesting that the Lord's Leys was not part of the waste of B Common, traversed the right claimed in the Lord's Leys. At the trial, the defendant admitted that he had no evidence of the exercise of a right to take stone on the Lord's Leys, and the plaintiff admitted the defendant's right over the whole of B Common, with the exception of the Lord's Leys:—Held, that, upon these pleadings, the affirmative of the issue was upon the defendant, and therefore that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment. Maxwell v. Martin, 8 Law J. C.P. 174, s.c. 6 Bing. 522, s c. 4 M. & P. 291.

A document appearing to be a presentment by the homage of a manor, stated that the jurors had examined a certain place described, and claimed by one of the tenants of the manor to belong to his tenement; and they presented that the land so claimed by that tenant, was parcel of the common of the manor. In an action touching the title, this document was held not admissible—

As a presentment; because the jurors had no jurisdiction to try the right to the soil; and besides, they were interested in the enlargement of the boundary of the common:

As an award; because no submission appeared; and the lord was not a party:

As evidence of reputation; because it was post litem motam. Richards v. Bassett, 8 Law J. K.B. 289, s. c. 10 B. & C. 657.

Property in goods transferred by bill of sale to the assignee of the plaintiff's lodger, subject to plaintiff's lien as landlord, is not such an interest as would support a plea, by way of justification of an alleged assault, that it was committed in the protection of the defendant's rightful possession, under the circumstances. Symons v. Hearson, 12 Price, 369.

Evidence of a custom to perambulate the boundaries of a parish, not sufficient to support the allegation in the pleas of a right to perambulate the boundaries of a liberty. Grant v. Kearney, 12 Price, 773.

Trespass for stopping and turning back the plaintiff's cart, and seizing and converting the goods in it. Plea, not guilty, as to converting the goods: judgment by default, as to stopping and turning back the cart.

Evidence, that the defendant had authorized the stopping and taking back the cart, and saying to a man, that he left him in possession.

The Judge thought this not sufficient evidence of the conversion of the goods; and, therefore, the jury found a verdict for the defendant upon the issue; and gave nominal damages on the judgment by default. And held to be right. Hopkins v. Ainsworth, 8 Law J. K.B. 71.

Action of trespass.—Pleas, first, general issue; secondly, a justification, setting up a certain right. New assignment, that the trespasses were committed in excess of the exercise of that right. No plea to the new assignment:—Held, that, on the trial, as the defendants had not pleaded to the new assignment, they could not be allowed to offer evidence to shew that no excess had been committed, and so obtain the verdict; but that the plaintiff, on proving the trespass committed, was entitled at all events to a verdict with nominal damages. Hamilton v. Pentress, 8 Law J. K.B. 331.

If there be a joint action of trespass against six defendants, and the plaintiff prove a joint trespass committed by all, and then go on to prove another act of trespass by three of them, expecting to connect the other three with this also, but fail in so doing, the latter three are entitled to be acquitted before the defence is opened, as the plaintiff must be taken to have elected to waive the joint trespass, and to have gone on as against those three for the second act of trespass only.

If an action be brought against six, for a single act of trespass, and the plaintiff by his evidence only fix three of them, the Judge will not direct the other three to be acquitted, until all the evidence for the defence is gone through. Wynne v. Anderson, 3 C. & P. 596. [Park]

In an action of trespass, quare clausum fregit, the defendant pleaded that A C was seised in fee, and, being so seised, granted a right of way by non-existing grant. The plaintiff replied, traversing the grant:—Held, that on these pleadings it was not competent for the plaintiff to give evidence to shew that A C was not seised in fee, for the purpose of rebutting the presumption of the grant. Cortishaw v. Cheslyn, 1 C. & J. 48.

(D) Verdict and Damages.

Trespass for breaking and entering a dwelling-house, and taking away goods, brought by a plaintiff against defendants, who professed to be authorized to take away the goods of a person who had lodged in the plaintiff's house, and had left the occupation without paying part of a year's rent, under pretext of a bill of sale executed by the tenant to the defendant's employer by the vendee, by whom they were engaged to lot and carry them away.

Second count, for carrying away the goods and assaulting the plaintiff.

Pleas—Not guilty. 2ndly, Leave and licence as to the breaking and entering; 3rdly, As to the taking and carrying away, that the goods, &c., were the property of a third person, whose authority the defendants had for removing them; 4thly, Son assault demesne; 5thly, Justification, whilst protecting the possession of the goods. Verdict for plaintiff, 29*l.* 5*s.*, 20*l.* damages for the assault, and 9*l.* 5*s.* for the rent:—Held, the verdict sustainable on the whole case, and not to be disturbed; although, in explaining their assessment of the damages, the jury had not given a good reason; for, if bad (though semble not) for the 9*l.* 5*s.*, it would be good for the 20*l.*

The questions raised by the issues on the pleas, are rather questions for the jury applying the evidence to the pleadings, under the direction of the Judge at Nisi Prius, than for the Court applying the evidence to the pleadings in Banc after verdict, on occasion of application for a new trial. Symons v. Hearson, 12 Price, 369.

In an action of trespass, quare clausum fregit, it was proved that the defendant had let his land to the plaintiff, under terms reduced into writing. One stipulation was, that the plaintiff should have a right to take two-thirds of the corn sown, and left y him growing on the land, at his leaving it at Lady-day, the custom of the country being that he should have the whole. It was also proved that the defendant had refused to let the plaintiff cut the corn, but had turned his labourers off the land, and cut and carried all into his own barns. The value of the corn was proved to be about 285*l.*; other trifling trespasses were charged in the declaration, to the whole of which the defendant had pleaded the general issue. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, with 315*l.* damages:—Held, that the excess was not so large as not to be covered by the circumstances of the trespass as proved, and that it was certainly no ground for disturbing the verdict; the jury being entitled to take into consideration independently of the trifling damages not attempted to be justified, and for which the Judge had directed nominal damages to be found,) the nature of the case, and were not bound to a minute calculation of value.

Had the damages been very excessive, semble aliter. Quære, as to the effect of the agreement, which was for one year only, as evidence of the terms on which the plaintiff continued to hold the land after the expiration of the year, and as to the necessary directions to be given to the jury on such evidence. Cox v. Dugdale, 12 Price, 708.

(E) Costs.

To an action of trespass for breaking down the plaintiff's wall, the defendant pleaded not guilty, and seven special pleas, justifying under a right of way; the plaintiff joined issue on not guilty, traversed the other pleas, and new assigned. The defendant joined issue on the traverses, and suffered judgment by default on the new assignment. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff on the plea of not guilty, with 1*s.* damages; and 40*s.* damages were assessed on the new assignment; the parties consenting that the question of costs should not be affected thereby. But a verdict was found for the defendant on one of the special pleas:—Held, that the plaintiff having been obliged to go down to trial on the plea of not guilty, he was entitled to the general costs of the cause. Vickers v. Gallinore, 7 Law J. C.P. 82, s. c. 2 M. & P. 359, s. c. 5 Bing. 196.

Where, at the time of committing a trespass, the defendant asserts title, the Judge will certify under statute 23 & 24 Car. 2. c. 9, although defendant disclaim title at the trial. Hamber v. East, Pea. A.C. 237. [Ellenborough]

Where, in trespass, issue is joined on a plea of the general issue, and upon other issues, but judgment goes by default upon a new assignment, and a general verdict is found for the plaintiff, but a new trial granted on the whole record by reason of some one or more issues being improperly found for the plaintiff, the plaintiff will not be entitled to the costs of the first trial in respect of the judgment by default on the new assignment. Holland v. Deakin, 7 Law J. K.B. 145.

To trespass, quare clausum fregit, defendant pleaded, 1st, not guilty; 2ndly, a right of common; 3rdly, a right of way. The plaintiff took issue on the plea of not guilty, and traversed the rights of common and of way; and new assigned to the second and third pleas, that the defendant, on other occasions, and for other purposes than those mentioned in the special pleas, committed the trespasses complained of. Defendant, in his rejoinder, took issue upon the traverse of the right of common, and right of way, and withdrew the plea of not guilty, so far as it related to the trespasses newly assigned, and suffered judgment by default to the new assignment: at the trial, the issue on one of the special pleas was found for the defendant, and the jury assessed the plaintiff's damages on the new assignment at 5*l.*:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to the costs of the trial. Cross v. Johnson, 9 B. & C. 613, s. c. 4 M. & R. 290.

Two defendants, sued in trespass, defended jointly throughout the cause. On the trial, the plaintiff obtained a verdict against one of the defendants, and a verdict was returned for the other. The Master, on taxation, taking into consideration that the defence was joint, allowed to the defendant, who obtained a verdict, only 40*s.* costs. And held, by the Court, to be sufficient. Gibbs v. Stead, 7 Law J. K.B. 37, s. c. 8 B. & C. 528, s. c. 2 M. & R. 547.

(F) Malicious Trespass Act.

Where shrubs are cut, upon an unproved allegation that they were likely to be injurious to an adjoining wall, the case is within the Malicious Trespass Act, though the title to the spot on which the shrubs grew be in dispute between the parties.

Where a Magistrate, upon whose property a malicious trespass had been committed, issued a summons, requiring the offender to appear before himself, or some other Magistrate, and purporting that information had been given to him (the Magistrate) on oath, whereas no oath had been taken, and the information had been communicated by the Magistrate to the informer, the Court, in discharging a rule for a criminal information against the Magistrate, refused to give him his costs. Rex v. Whately, 4 M. & R. 431.

A party using unreasonable violence to beat off a dog which runs at him, is guilty of a wilful trespass, under the statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30. s. 24. And if he is seen committing the act, and a constable immediately sent for, who follows him (he having quitted the place) and apprehends him at the distance of a mile, this is an "immediate apprehension" of a person "found committing" an offence under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30. s. 28. Hanway v. Boultbee, 2 M. & M. 15, s. c. 4. C. & P. 350. [Tindal]

A defendant, who fairly and bonâ fide believed that the plaintiff was liable to be proceeded against under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30, (Malicious Trespass Act,) gave the plaintiff in charge to a constable, by whom he was carried before a Magistrate. The latter, not conceiving the case to be within the act, (nor was it,) discharged the plaintiff. In an action by the plaintiff for false imprisonment,—Held, that defendant was entitled to the notice of action provided for by section 41 of that act; and, such notice not having been given, that the action could not be maintained. Beechy v. Sides, 8 Law J. K.B. 71, s. c. 9 B. & C. 806, s. c. 4 M. & R. 634.

The plaintiff having brought an action of trespass against the defendant for wrongfully causing him to be apprehended under the Malicious Trespass Act, 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30, obtained a verdict, which was afterwards set aside, and a nonsuit entered, on the ground of the absence of the notice of action required by s. 41. of the act:—Held, that, under that clause, the defendant was entitled to costs as between attorney and client. Wright v. Wales, 7 Law J. C.P. 171, s. c. 3 M. & P. 96.

(A) Where Maintainable.

[See Master and Servant.]

Two persons jointly interested in a chattel, having made a joint demand of it, may, notwithstanding, maintain separate actions of trover in respect of it, against a person who unjustly detains it. Bleaden v. Hancock, 4 C. & P. 152, s. c. 1 M. & M. 465. [Tindal]

Where a man and woman had been married, and goods, which had been the property of the woman before marriage, were seized and sold under an execution against the goods of the man; and the woman, two years afterwards, discovered that the man had a wife living at the time he professed to marry her:—Held, that she was entitled to maintain trover against the sheriff for the value of those goods, though no blame was attributable to the sheriff or his officers. Glasspoole v. Young, 7 Law J. K.B. 305.

A, being indebted to B, with a view to secure the payment of his debt, gave him an order on C, a wharfinger, for the delivery to him of goods, then in C's possession, the property of A, to which order C assented. Afterwards, A being indebted to X, gave him an order for the same goods, which latter order C accepted conditionally, subject to X obtaining an order from B, at the same time promising to let X know before giving up the goods;—the debt to B still remaining undischarged, B afterwards gave an order to A for these goods, who thereupon received them from C:—Held, that X had no property upon which trover could be maintained against the wharfinger. Mellin v. Kelshaw, 9 Law J. Exch. 45, s. c. 1 C. & J. 184, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 109.

An agent sold goods to be paid for by bills. The purchaser gave the bills, and directed the agent to hold the goods for him, unless he could sell them at a certain profit. While the goods thus remained, the acceptors of the bills stopped payment. The agent thereupon applied to the purchaser for further security. The purchaser then gave the agent an order to sell the goods, and pay the bills. Subsequently, and before any sale, the purchaser became bankrupt: his assignees claimed, and brought trover for the goods:—Held, that they were not entitled; that the application by the agent for security must be considered as an application on behalf of the vendor, whose assent to the arrangement might be presumed, it being for his benefit; and whose subsequent assent would relate back to the transaction which required the assent. Bailey v. Calverwell, 7 Law J. K.B. 19, s. c. 8 B. & C. 448, s. c. 2 M. & R. 564.

Where a person brings an action of trover to recover goods, which have been pawned upon an usurious contract, the plaintiff may recover, although he may not have paid or tendered to the defendant the sum lawfully due.

Where title deeds are deposited as a security for money advanced, before the borrower has had a conveyance made to him, the lender has a right to the possession of the deed of conveyance as soon as it is made.

Where title deeds are so deposited upon a lawful contract, and afterwards, and before the conveyance is executed to the borrower, an usurious contract is made between the parties, such usurious contract will not affect the right of the lender to hold the title-deeds under the legal contract, nor his right afterwards to the custody of the deed of conveyance. Wood v. Grimwood, 8 Law J. K.B. 192, s. c. 10 B. & C. 609.

(B) Demand and Refusal.

Where goods are distrained, which are not liable, an action of trover may be brought by the owner, without a demand and refusal. Ward v. Venton, Pes. A.C. 126. [Kenyon]

The messenger, under a commission of bankrupt against the father, went to the uncle and said, "I am come for some bacon belonging to S D (the father); the uncle replied, "I have none of S D, but I have some of E D;" the messenger answered "It is S D's;" he produced his warrant and said, "Keep it safe; you will hear more of it." The uncle afterwards sent away the bacon, and when the messenger applied again, said, "I have sent it back to where it came from:"—Held, a sufficient conversion and demand and refusal. Hawkes v. Dunn, 9 Law J. Exch. 184, s. c. 1 C. & J. 528, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 413.

(C) Conversion.

[See ante, B.]

Semble, that the attaching by process from the Sheriff's Court in London, of property in the hands of the garnishee, is not such a conversion as will enable the owner to maintain trover. Mellalieu v. Laugher, 3 C. & P. 551. [Best]

Where, in an answer to a demand of property, the defendant referred the applicant to his attorney, and the applicant did not make any objection to being so referred, and an action of trover was brought, without any application to the attorney, and without any other evidence of conversion by the defendant:—Held (under certain circumstances, in the case, which warranted the inference, that the reference to the attorney was, bonâ fide, for communication), that this was not sufficient evidence of a conversion. Jones v. Yates, 7 Law J. K.B. 217, s. c. 9 B. & C. 538, s. c. 4 M. & R. 613.

A, who was paying his addresses to a lady, lost her letters and two memorandum books, containing remarks of his own; B found them, and kept them on the ground that the books contained matter injurious to him, and also shewed them to others; A sent a person to demand them of B, who at first refused to give them up at all; but, before the person left, said he would not give them to him, but would to C or D; C went, and B offered to give him the letters and one book, which C, after consulting with A, accepted, saying that he made a sacrifice to obtain the letters:—Held, that there was a conversion of the whole; but the verdict was only for nominal damages. Clendon v. Dinneford, 5 C. & P. 13. [Patteson]

(D) EVIDENCE.

The servant of a party who had been bargaining for the purchase of a chattel, came to the owner and said that his master desired to look at it, and would keep it if approved of. The chattel was in consequence delivered to the servant, but was neither purchased nor returned. Trover was brought against the servant:—Held, that the master was a competent witness to prove in defence that the message had been delivered by his authority, and the chattel received and kept by him. Grylls v. Davies, 2 B. & Ad. 514.

In trover for a written document, the plaintiff may prove the nature and description of the document by secondary evidence, though the defendant offers to produce it.

A party has a right to call for and have read, a letter making a demand on the other party, for the purpose of proving the demand, though the counsel for the other party offers to admit the demand. The statement of facts in such letter is not evidence of the facts, but only of their having been communicated to the other side. Whitehead v. Scott, 2 M. & M. 2. [Tenterden]

The defendant, a wharfinger, having admitted, by parol, that he held certain goods for the plaintiff: in trover for the value—Held, that the defendant was estopped, by such admission, from shewing that the right of property was in another person. Gosling v. Birnie, 9 Law J. C.P. 104, s. c. 7 Bing. 339, s. c. 5 M. & P. 160.

(E) PRACTICE.

The defendant, a police-officer, in the exercise of his duty, seized certain bank-notes and cash and a watch-seal, found in the possession of the plaintiff, whom he had apprehended on a charge of having forged a cheque on the receiver-general of the Customs, which money was supposed to be part of the produce of the forged cheque. The plaintiff was afterwards tried for the forgery and acquitted, whereupon he brought trover for the money and seal. The defendant was indemnified by the commissioners of Customs, and they directed their solicitor to defend the action, who not being an attorney of the court, the plaintiff, on delivery of a plea of the general issue, treated it as a nullity and signed judgment. The Court, on motion, set aside the judgment, holding that the language of the plea—which stated that the defendant "by J G W, who had been duly appointed solicitor on behalf of his Majesty, under the directions of the commissioners of his Majesty's Customs, and who acted as such solicitor under such directions in that behalf, came and defended, &c."—sufficiently disclosed to the Court that the person defending as attorney was acting in a matter concerning the revenue, within the protection of the 9 Geo. 4. c. 25. It was further ordered, that, on payment of costs, and the delivery up of the seal, the proceedings should be stayed; or (the plaintiff not consenting to accept the seal in discharge of the action) that so much of the declaration as related to the seal should be struck out. West v. Taunton, 8 Law J. C.P. 129, s. c. 6 Bing. 404, s. c. 4 M. & P. 79.

[Stair v. Macgill, 1 Dow. & Cl. 24, Dig. Law J. 524.]

Monies in the English stocks were assigned to trustees upon trust to pay the dividends to the settlor during his life, and after his death to apply them in printing and promoting the circulation of a book in the Latin and French languages, inculcating the peculiar doctrines of the Roman Catholic religion; and the deed contained a proviso, that if any of the trusts should be declared by a court of law or equity to be void, then the trustees should stand possessed of the fund in trust for the executors and administrators of the settlor:—Held,

That the trusts, after the limitation for life to the settlor, were in the nature of superstitious uses, and therefore void.

That the fund was not in the disposition of the Crown, to be applied to some other charitable purpose by the sign manual.

That the settlor was entitled to have the fund transferred to him.

That the Attorney General was a necessary party to a suit for that purpose. De Themines v. De Bonneval, 7 Law J. Chanc. 35.

G, by trust-deed, disponed lands at his death to trustees, to convey to his first and other sons in succession, and the heirs male of their bodies respectively, and in default of such issue to the first son of either of his daughters, who should first attain the age of twenty-one years, and his heirs; but in case his daughters should both die, and have no such son of either of them, to convey to G and R, his nephews. The residue of his real estate he gave to the same trustees to sell, for the use of his daughters; and he assigned and disponed to the same trustees, for the use of his heirs and substitutes, &c., in the order in the deed mentioned, the charters, &c., and rents, "for now and in all time coming:"—Held, that the rents accruing between the death of the disponer, and the event on which the lands were to vest in a son of the daughter, belonged not to the daughters, as heirs portioners, nor as disponed to them under the residuary clause of the deed, but were to be held in trust for the parties who should become entitled under the dispositions of the deed. Graham v. Templer, 3 Bligh, N.S. 381.

(b) Creation and Execution.

[Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russ. 423, Dig. Law J. 526.]

Words sufficient (standing alone) to create a trust controuled and explained.

A trust in equity, under a will, cannot be set up after the death of the person to whose discretion it had been referred to perfect it, by settling and stating the amount of the benefit to be conferred, because such a discretion is personal. But the case of a charity forms an exception to that rule. Heneage v. Lord Andover, 10 Price, 269.

Where a debtor, by a deed-poll, directs inter alia the receiver of the rents of his estate to keep down the interest of a certain debt, the direction does not create a trust in favour of a creditor, if it be without consideration, and without the privity of the creditor. Page v. Broom, 4 Russ. 6.

A testatrix appointed A B to be her executor, to see that her will was put in force; the executor is a trustee for the next of kin. Braddon v. Farrand, 4 Russ. 87.

A mother, entitled to a considerable property under the will of a relation, in a conversation with the executor of that relation, expressed an intention to make a settlement of part of that property which was standing in his name, upon her daughter, and requested the executor to instruct her solicitor to prepare such a settlement; on the prepared settlement being brought to her for execution, she had changed her mind and refused to sign it:—Held, that her intention, expressed in the conversation with the executor of her relation, did not amount to a declaration of trust, although the property was personal estate. Bayley v. Boulcott, 4 Russ. 345.

A trust for sale vested in A and his heirs, cannot be executed by an assign of A. Bradford v. Belfield, 2 Sim. 264.

Where a conveyance of property is made to several trustees, it is not necessary that all should execute or assent to it. The property will vest in those who accept the trust. Small v. Marwood, 7 Law J. K.B. 197, s. c. 9 B. & C. 300, s. c. 4 M. & R. 81.

(B) Trustee.

(a) Appointment.

Where a sole trustee in a will, to whom a term of 2,000 years was devised, dies in the testator's lifetime, the Court will refer it to the Master to appoint a new trustee, and to settle and approve of a demise for the like term. Devey v. Peare, 1 Tam. 77.

Where the decree, among other things, refers it to the Master to appoint a new trustee, the certificate of the appointment of such new trustee is to be considered as a separate report. Harris v. Kemble, 4 Russ. 474.

(b) Power and Duty.

[Laws respecting conveyances and transfers of estates and funds vested in trustees and mortgagees, amended, 1 Will. 4. c. 60, 8 Law J. Stat. 120.]

Where an act of parliament gives a power, in relation to a public trust, to a definite number of persons, it is necessary for a majority of that number to attend at each meeting. Freeman v. Meymott, Blackett v. Blizard, 9 B. & C. 851, s. c. 4 M. & R. 641, s. c. 8 Law J. M.C. 103.

Authority of trustees to let from year to year—Apportionment of rent. Monson v. Lord Essex, 8 Law J. Chanc. 162.

It is not the rule of equity that every person to whom the artificial name of trustee applies, is incapable of dealing with his cestui que trust, respecting the fund; but the rule is, that the trustee shall not deal with the cestui que trust, where the relation between them gives the former any possible advantage over the latter. Naylor v. Wynch, 7 Law J. Chanc. 6.

A, by will, gave real property to trustees to sell; one of the trustees became the purchaser, the consideration being sums due from the testator's estate to him; the estate descended to his son and grandson.

Bill filed by a person having a reversionary contingent interest in the produce of the sale under the will, forty years after the transaction, and twenty-seven years after she came of age, to set aside the contract:—Held, that the conveyance was void;—that no laches were committed; and that the representative of the purchaser should be allowed the additional value of the estate, caused by the money expended in improvements—a reference being directed to the Master for the purpose of ascertaining it. Chenuell v. Martin, 9 Law J. Chanc. 208.

Semble—a trustee under an old trust, creating successive limitations of equitable interests, some of which had failed, is entitled, before he can be required to convey, to have the equitable title of those who call for a conveyance ascertained by inquiry, and to have the deed of conveyance settled in the Master's office. Goodson v. Ellison, 3 Russ. 533.

A contracted to sell a freehold estate to B, and by his will gave the purchase-money and the interest to become due in the meantime to trustees, for certain purposes; and if the contract should not be completed, he devised the freehold estate to the trustees upon trust to sell the same, and apply the purchase-money to the like purposes. A died, leaving a son, his heir-at-law, who died, leaving an only daughter, his heiress-at-law, an infant. The Court held, that she was not a trustee within the act 6 Geo. 4. c. 74, and dismissed a petition that the infant might be ordered to convey. In the matter of Moody, 1 Tam. 4.

Where a trust estate descended to one who refused to execute a conveyance to the cestui que trust, after it had been approved by his solicitor, unless he were paid a sum of money, the Court ordered the conveyance, with costs against the defendant. Watts v. Turner, 1 Russ. & M. 634.

Plaintiff, in case for an injury to his reversionary interest in copyholds, was a trustee for a person who had demised the premises:—Held, that an allegation that plaintiff was possessed of the reversion was not a variance, as the bringing the action by plaintiff as reversioner was an adoption of the letting by the cestui que trust, who was his agent. Vallance v. Savage, 9 Law J. C.P. 181, s. c. 7 Bing. 595, s. c. 5 M. & P. 576.

A trustee allowed one of his cestuis que trust to have the trust fund, with a view to its investment in the foreign funds. The cestui que trust went to America, and invested it in his own name; he afterwards sold out a part, and, remitting the money to agents in London, came home. The trustee impounded the money so remitted, in the Lord Mayor's Court, and this Court granted an injunction, restraining proceedings on the part of the cestui que trust to get it out. Hipkins v. Newton, 9 Law J. Chanc. 227.

A party having purchased land, and signified at the time, that he made the purchase on behalf of the trustee in his marriage settlement, who had money vested in him to be laid out in land, and a bill being filed against him for specific performance, the Court would not allow the cause to proceed, until the trustee was made a party; and the cause stood over for that purpose. Wynniat v. Lindo, 1 Tam. 512.

(c) Liability.

Trustees not affected by notice to their agent, which he did not receive in that character.

Trustees having contracted to purchase land, sell out stock, and deposit the produce at a bankers' when the purchase seems to be near completion: they are not liable to make good the money if the bankers fail. France v. Woods, 1 Tam. 172.

Where a settlement requires that a retiring trustee should assign the trust property to the continuing trustee, and that a new trustee should be chosen in the place of the retiring trustee, and there is no power to appoint a sole trustee: then, if a retiring trustee assign the trust property to the continuing trustee alone, and he, in abuse of his trust, dispose of it, the retiring trustee is answerable. Wilkinson v. Parry, 4 Russ. 272.

On a marriage, a sum of stock was settled for the separate use of the wife for life, remainder for the husband for life, remainder for their children, with power to change securities with consent of the wife. The dividends on the stock being reduced, one of the trustees, in whom the husband and wife principally confided, and who, with his partners, was their solicitor, informed his co-trustees that he had an opportunity of investing the property in a mortgage at 5*l.* per cent., and with the consent of the husband and wife, requested his co-trustees to execute a power of attorney, to enable him to sell the stock. The co-trustees, without inquiring into the matter, complied: the trustee sold the stock and absconded:—Held, that the co-trustees were liable. Hanbury v. Kirkland, 3 Sim. 265.

By a marriage settlement, the interest of a trust fund was limited to a wife for life, for her separate use, with power to the trustees, upon her consent in writing, to advance the trust fund to her husband, upon the security of his bond. If the trustees, with consent of the wife, advance the fund to the husband, but without her written consent, and without the husband's bond, and if the trust fund be lost by his subsequent bankruptcy, the trustees are not entitled to be indemnified to the extent of the wife's interest. Cocker v. Quayle, 1 Russ. & M. 535.

Monies directed by a settlement to be laid out in government or real securities, were lent by the trustees to the husband on bond; the trustees were ordered, on motion, to pay the sums into court. Collis v. Collis, 2 Sim. 365.

Bill for the conveyance of an estate, alleged by the plaintiff to have been purchased and paid for by him, and to have been conveyed to an ancestor of the defendant, as a trustee for the plaintiff, dismissed, but without costs; there being no written agreement or declaration of trust, signed by the defendant's ancestor, and no actual evidence of the payment of the purchase-money by the plaintiff; though there was evidence of constant possession by the plaintiff, and of conversation in which the defendant's ancestor had stated that the plaintiff had purchased the property in his name, with a view of giving him a vote for the county; this evidence was however, rather contradictory. Groves v. Groves, 3 Y. & J. 163.

(C) Costs.

A person named a trustee without his knowledge, and in that character made a party to the suit, having never accepted the trusts, is entitled to his costs as between solicitor and client. Sherratt v. Bentley, 1 Russ. & M. 655.

A trustee is not entitled to be allowed, without question, the amount of bills of costs which he has paid bonâ fide to the solicitor to the trust; and the Master, without regularly taxing the bills, will moderate their amount. Johnson v. Telford, 3 Russ. 477.

A trustee, refusing to pay a legacy without the direction of the Court, in a case which admitted of no doubt, was refused his costs, but was not made to pay the costs of the suit, because he might have acted from ignorance, and not from any improper motive. Knight v. Martin, 1 Russ. & M. 70, s. c. 1 Tam. 237.

Where a cestui que trust, having a life interest only, is declared entitled to his costs out of the trust property, the Court will not give him a mere lien on it, to be enforced by subsequent proceedings, but will direct an immediate sale for the purpose of defraying them.

Decree varied on appeal, in respect of costs only. Burkett v. Spray, 1 Russ. & M. 113.

USE AND OCCUPATION.

[See Landlord and Tenant.]

Actual occupation is not necessary to a party liable to be sued in assumpsit for the use and occupation of premises. Pinero v. Judson, 8 Law J. C.P. 18, s. c. 6 Bing. 206, s. c. 3 M. & P. 497.

The putting up of a board for the purpose of letting houses by a person who built them, and agreed to become tenant of them from a certain time, is sufficient to enable the person for whom they were erected, to recover rent on a count for use and occupation. Sullivan v. Jones, 3 C. & P. 579. [Best]

Where the agreement under which a party holds a house, states, that he "agrees to become tenant by occupying," it will be an answer to a claim of rent, in an action for use and occupation, if he shews that the house was not in such a reasonable and decent state of repair, as to be fit for comfortable occupation. Salisbury v. Marshal, 4 C. & P. 65. [Tindal]

Agreement to grant a lease to S, when S should have erected certain buildings on the premises to be demised: no covenant to pay the rent before the execution of the lease. S, after the buildings are erected, holds the premises, subject to the terms in the lease, but is liable in assumpsit for use and occupation. Banister v. Usborne, Pea. A.C. 76. [Kenyon]

In an action for use and occupation, it is not sufficient that the plaintiff should shew legal title in himself, and occupation by the defendant. He must shew other circumstances, from which the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties may be inferred. Place v. Ashby, 9 Law J. K.B. 174.

In an action for use and occupation by the reversioner, against a person who had been tenant for years, determinable on three lives, a register of burials of a Wesleyan chapel is not admissible to prove the death of one of the cestuis que vie; nor is the evidence of a witness, who heard in the family that another of the cestuis que vie was dead. Semble, that a copy of an inscription on a tombstone in the burial ground of a Wesleyan chapel, is also not evidence for this purpose. Whittuck v. Waters, 4 C. & P. 375. ## USURY.

(A) In general.
(B) Loans.
(C) Discount.
(D) Securities.
(E) Actions for.

(A) In general.

Where an annuity is granted for a term of years, to be paid half-yearly, and, at the same time, promissory notes are given by the grantor for the payment of each half-year's annuity when it becomes due, and it appears that the several half-yearly payments will repay the purchase-money with interest, exceeding the rate of 5*l.* per cent., the transaction is usurious. Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. & M. 45, s. c. 1 Tam. 250.

(B) Loans.

[See Pawnbroker.]

An agreement on a loan to re-invest the money in stock at a fixed price, or to pay it in money on receiving six months notice from the lender, gives the option of receiving stock or money to the lender, and is, therefore, usurious. Chippendale v. Thurston, 2 M. & M. 411, s. c. 4 C. & P. 98. [J. Parke]

A contract on a loan of money to add the interest to the principal at the end of each year, and pay interest on the whole sum as principal, is valid in law, and may be inferred from accounts stated by the debtor on that footing. Newal v. Jones, 2 M. & M. 449, s. c. 4 C. & P. 124. [Tenterden]

Loan of 200*l.*; 300*l.* to be repaid by three instalments, the latest at about a year and a half from the time of the loan, if both parties should be living, as the instalments fell due. No fact appeared to shew that this was a mere contrivance to cover usury, and the Court refused to set aside the judgment on a warrant of attorney given to secure the 300*l.* Flight v. Chaplin, 9 Law J. K.B. 137, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 114.

A party applied for a loan, which was refused—he then bought of the same person, to whom he applied, goods to the amount of the sum he wanted to borrow, and gave a mortgage, judgment, bond, and promissory note for the amount. On a bill filed, to set aside the transaction, the Court restrained the defendant from taking any steps to enforce the securities, until the hearing of the cause. King v. Hamlet, 9 Law J. Chanc. 243.

A revolted colony of Spain, not recognized as an independent state by Great Britain, executed bonds at six per cent. interest, as securities for a loan. P, acting in collusion with B, a holder of the bonds in England, by falsely representing that he had purchased some of them, induced the plaintiff to become a purchaser: Held, on demurrer, that the bonds were not usurious, as it did not appear, by the bill, that the contract for the loan was made, or the amount of it to be paid, in this country; that P and B would have been answerable to the plaintiff for losses sustained upon his purchase, but that, as the original contract was made with a government not acknowledged by Great Britain, the Court could not relieve him. Thompson v. Powles, 2 Sim. 194.

(C) Discount.

Where, on the discount of a bill, part of the amount was given in cash, and the remainder in goods, legal interest being charged for the money, and an advanced price being charged for the goods for the time the bill had to run, which was the charge usually made in the trade for an extension of credit: Held, not usurious. Evans v. Wade, 7 Law J. C.P. 205, s. c. 5 Bing. 485, s. c. 3 M. & P. 130.

The defendant being collector of salt duties at Droitwich, and A B being proprietor of salt works there, it was agreed that the weekly payments to be made by A B to the defendant, on behalf of government, should be made by bills payable three days after sight, allowing 2*s.* per cent. to the defendant for discount; which, reckoning the time the bills were going from Droitwich to London, and the days of grace, gave eight days credit, and was not usurious. The defendant, however, by putting the bills into the post at Worcester, gained a day, and thereby got more than five per cent.:—Held, that as the agreement was not usurious, the act of the defendant, in fraud of the agreement, would not subject him to the penalties for usury. Hart v. Gwinnell, Pea. A.C. 177. [Lawrence]

(D) Securities.

A bond given to secure 1,000*l.*, which was usurious, is afterwards cancelled, and a new bond is entered into for securing the principal, with legal interest: it was held, that as this last bond was not made to secure the performance of the original usurious contract, it was valid. Wright v. Wheeler, Pea. A.C. 175. [Lawrence]

Where money is lent professedly on respondentia, and upon the security of a respondentia-bond on a ship bound to the East Indies, the fact of the borrower having no interest in either the ship or the goods does not, by means of the 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. s. 5, f necessity convert the transaction into an usurious ran.

The fact may be used as matter of observation to he jury upon the question, whether the transaction ras really at respondentia, or whether it was a loan ipon usurious terms, and the form of the respondentia used as a contrivance.

(E) Action for.

The time at which the year begins, within which in action for penalties under the 12 Anne, st. 2. c. 16. must be brought, is the time when the usurious nterest is paid; and an action brought after a year rom that period, is out of time; although it be rought within a year after the payment of the principal. Wood v. Greenwood, 8 Law J. K.B. 252.

A grant of annuity of 120*l.* for four lives, in consideration of 1,000*l.*, contained a covenant by the grantors to insure the last of the four lives, within thirty days after the dropping of the third life:—Held, upon demurrer, that the transaction appearing upon the face of the deed in other respects to be a sale and purchase of annuity, and not a loan—the nature of the covenant did not confer upon it a contrary character; for that during the lapse of thirty days the principal was in hazard.

Semble, that the plea should have expressly averred, issuably, the fact that the transaction was in reality a loan, and that the deed was colourably devised to cloak the corrupt agreement. Holland v. Pelham, 9 Law J. Exch. 139, s. c. 1 C. & J. 575, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 238.

VARIANCE.

(A) Between Pleadings and Process.
(B) Between Pleadings and Evidence.

(A) Between Pleadings and Process.

Where, in trespass, the process was against twenty defendants, of whom but eighteen could be served in time, the plaintiff thereupon declared against seventeen only:—Held, by Mr. Justice Bayley and Mr. Justice Parke, that, according to the rule of court, Easter, 1827, the proceedings were irregular.—Contrà, Mr. Justice Littledale. Beeston v. Beckett, 7 Law J. K.B. 193.

A plaintiff who sues out process generally, not describing himself in any particular character, may afterwards declare specially, describing himself as executor, or qui tam, &c.: and this even in a bailable action.

But this rule does not apply è converso; and, therefore, a plaintiff who sues out process in a limited character, must declare in that character. Ashworth v. Ryal, 8 Law J. K.B. 387, s.c. 1 B. & Ad. 19.

In a criminal suit, it is not a fatal variance that the defendant, in the citation, was designated "Harris," and in the articles, "Harris, alias Harry." Griffith v. Reed, 1 Hag. Ec. 196.

(B) Between Pleadings and Evidence.

Declaration, in an action of debt on bond, stated, that the defendant acknowledged himself to be bound in the sum of 7,700*l.* Plea—Non est factum. On the trial, it appeared, that in the bond the word "pounds" was omitted. The condition was for the payment of several sums amounting to 4,859*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*:—Held, by Lord Tenterden and Mr. Justice Bayley, that the declaration was well proved by the bond; and that the word "pounds," by necessary intendment, might be supplied. Dissentiente Mr. Justice Littledale. Coles v. Hulme, 7 Law J. K.B. 29, s.c. 8 B. & C. 568, s.c. 3 M. & R. 86.

In debt on a joint and several bond, the condition set out was for payment by the defendant and R and R, the bond being given in evidence, it was found to have been altered, one H being substituted for R in the condition:—Held, that this was a fatal variance. Adams v. Bateson, 7 Law J. C.P. 251, s. c. 6 Bing. 110, s. c. 3 M. & P. 339.

The plaintiff, a fruit-broker, was employed by J P to sell a cargo of fruit. The defendant represented to J P that the plaintiff had, with a view to deteriorate the sale, reported in the sale-room "that there were three or four vessels laden with fruit between Gravesend and London." In an action on the case for special damage resulting to the plaintiff from this representation, J P having discontinued to employ him, the declaration alleged the representation to have been that the plaintiff had said, "that he had three or four vessels laden with fruit between Gravesend and London:"—Held, a material and fatal variance. Wood v. Adam, 8 Law J. C.P. 156, s. c. 6 Bing, 481, s. c. 4 M. & P. 208.

Tenant from year to year subdemised from year to year. In pleading the latter, it was described as a tenancy from year to year, and so from year to year as long as the parties should respectively please, during the continuance of the demise to the party who subdemised:—Held to be no variance, as the description in pleading properly described the legal effect of the subdemise. Pike v. Eyre, 8 Law J. K.B. 69, s. c. 9 B. & C. 909, s. c. 4 M. & R. 661.

Declaration alleged that the plaintiff was possessed of a messuage, &c., belonging to and supporting which there were certain foundations, which the plaintiff had enjoyed, &c., and ought, &c., to enjoy. On evidence, it appeared, that the plaintiff was only entitled to an easement in the foundations, which belonged to the defendant:—Held, no variance. Brown v. Windsor, 1 C. & J. 20.

Declaration, stating the consideration of the purchase of a horse to be, "that the buyer would give one hundred guineas": Evidence, that the buyer was to give "one hundred guineas, and 10*l.* more if the horse suited him:"—Held, to be no variance. Cave v. Coleman, 7 Law J. K.B. 26, s. c. 3 M. & R. 2.

Declaration, "that in consideration, the plaintiff would buy of the defendant a horse, at and for a certain price or sum, to wit, 63*l.*, the defendant undertook, that the horse was sound." Evidence: that the bargain was for sixty guineas, "and if the horse was lucky to the plaintiff, he was to give 5*l.* more, or the buying of another horse:"—Held, that there was no substantial variance between the declaration and the evidence. Gething v. Lynn, 9 Law. J. K.B. 181.

In an action for a libel, the declaration alleged, "that the plaintiff had been appointed the surveyor, &c. of a company or society of persons called 'The

New England Company,' and in such capacity had been and was employed by the said company.'' The name of incorporation of the company was, "A Company for establishing Christianity in New England and the parts adjacent, in America:''—Held, that this was no variance—Held also, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove an appointment by deed. Rutherford v. Evans, 8 Law J. C.P. 86, s. c. 6 Bing. 451, s. c. 4 M. & P. 162.

Where it is averred in the declaration for maliciously procuring the conviction of the plaintiff as a rogue and vagabond, that the conviction was quashed on the 22nd day of April, at the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace held on that day, and the proof by the order for quashing the conviction shewed that it was not a General, but an Adjourned Sessions, the variance was held not to be such as to furnish ground for setting aside the verdict in this case. Dubitante, Hullock, B., regarding the point as matter of pleading. Simpkin v. French, 12 Price, 394.

In an information for a libel, imputing improper conduct to A as town clerk of H, it was alleged that he was town clerk, and that it was his duty to issue his precept for summoning the grand jury. The precept was signed both by the mayor and town clerk: Held, that this satisfied the allegation, that he issued his precept, and the fact that he was an alderman of the borough at the time when he was elected town clerk, made no difference. Rex v. Hatfield, 4 C. & P. 244. [Vaughan]

Where, upon oyer of a deed, the defendant sets it out untruly, and the plaintiff replies generally, the defendant may take advantage of the variance on non est factum. Gunter v. Smith, Pea. A.C. 1. [Kenyon]

(A) Vendor.

(a) Rights.

Where a person sells goods to another, not knowing at the time that the buyer is an agent, the seller, upon afterwards discovering the principal, may resort to him for payment, although he had debited the agent; and he may recover against the principal, unless the latter has, in the meantime, paid the agent.

But, where the principal in such a case is living abroad, and the seller debits the agent, he will not in general be allowed afterwards to resort to the principal; it being presumed, until the contrary appear, that the seller gave credit to the English agent, and would not have done so to the foreign principal. Whether, for this purpose, the fact of the principal residing in Scotland is to be considered as a foreign residence—quære.

Where the seller knows that the buyer is an agent, but does not know the name of his principal, he may afterwards, on discovering who the principal is, compel payment from the principal, unless payment has been made to the agent in the meantime.

Where the seller, with a full knowledge of both facts, that there is a principal, and who that principal is, debits the agent as the person to whom he gives credit, he cannot afterwards resort to the principal, although the latter may not have paid the agent. Davenport v. Thomson, 7 Law J. K.B. 134, s. c. 9 B. & C. 78, s. c. 4 M. & R. 110.

(b) Lien.

[Winter v. Anson, 3 Russ. 488, s. c. Dig. Law J. 535.]

The lien of a vendor upon the land, and upon the title-deeds, until the purchase-money be paid to him, does not apply to a conveyance to the purchaser, executed by some of, but not all, the parties, where the contract has gone off by the vendor's default; and if there be any lien on such conveyance, it is vested in the purchaser as a security for his deposit. Ozenham v. Esdaile, 3 Y. & J. 262.

A vendor, who has taken, as a security for part of the purchase-money, the bond of the vendees, and a mortgage of part of the property sold, cannot, on the bankruptcy of the vendees, establish a lien on the entire estate. Copper v. Spottiswoode, 1 Tam. 21.

Where an estate has been sold to a person who has since died, the Court will direct an account to be taken of the personal estate, and decree that the vendor shall have a lien on the land for so much as the personal estate will not extend to pay. Topham v. Constantine, 1 Tam. 135.

(B) Purchaser.

[See Parties to Suits.]

Where a party has a privilege given to him to repurchase an estate sold, upon certain stipulations being complied with, and does not comply with them, the privilege is gone. Davis v. Thomas, 9 Law J. Chanc. 232.

By a deed dated in 1812, the mortgagor assigned to the mortgagee his interest in a policy of insurance. In the year 1813, the mortgagee having advanced a further sum of money, the mortgagor executed a deed, reserving a power of sale in case the mortgage-money remained unpaid on a certain day. In 1822 a further sum was advanced and a new deed entered into, converting the arrears of interest into principal. This latter deed omitted the power contained in the second deed. The mortgagee advertised the policy for sale "under a power." It was purchased by the plaintiff; but, the mortgagor having refused to concur in the conveyance—held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover back his deposit. Curling v. Shuttleworth, 8 Law J. C.P. 13, s. c. 6 Bing. 121, s. c. 3 M. & P. 368.

Under an agreement of exchange between A, who held lands under a college lease, and B, the owner of an adjoining estate, B occupied part of the college lands, and A had occupied, along with the residue of the leasehold, part of B's estate; A having become bankrupt, the college leasehold was sold, and was described in the particulars of sale as "late the residence of A:"—Held, that the purchaser was not to be considered as having implied notice of the agreement of exchange; and that he had a right to recover by ejectment that portion of the leasehold which was in B's occupation. Miles v. Langley, 1 Russ. & M. 39.

A purchaser entitled to title-deeds having paid his purchase-money into court, the Court will not order the money to be divided, and the deeds to remain in the hands of the Master until the completion of the sale of another lot. Hobson v. Neale, 1 Tam. 446.

Purchase for valuable consideration without notice, is not available as a defence against a plaintiff who relies upon a legal title.

A rector in 1811, demised his rectory to A for a term of years to secure the due payment of an annuity; in 1814, he, for valuable consideration, demised the tithes of certain lands within the rectory to the occupier B, who, at the time, had no notice of the prior charge: the annuity fell into arrear in 1816, and, in 1817, the rector took the benefit of the insolvent act: B remained in the occupation of the lands, and retained the tithes, claiming to be entitled to them under the deed of 1814; and no step was taken to enforce payment till 1827, when A filed against him a bill for an account; in answer to which, B insisted that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice:—Held, that that defence was of no avail against the legal title of the plaintiff, and that the defendant ought to account for the tithes for the six years before the filing of the bill. Collins v. Archer, 1 Russ. & M. 284.

(b) Duties and Liabilities.

The possession of a client's deeds by his solicitor is so usual, and so much in the ordinary course of transactions, that where a person purchases an estate, and is informed that the deeds are in the hands of the solicitors of the owner of the estate, there is nothing in that circumstance which renders it necessary for him to inquire under what circumstances the solicitor holds the deeds; and, therefore, where a solicitor acquires by contract a different interest beyond what his character of solicitor confers (such as an equitable mortgage), it is incumbent on him immediately to give clear and distinct notice of such interest to all persons in the visible ownership of the estate. And such a case is not within the principle of the cases in which a purchaser of land has been held bound to inquire of the tenant in possession the nature of his interest. Boton v. Williams, 3 Y. & J. 150.

After a decree has been pronounced for an account, and a reference made to see what proportion of an incumbrance two estates shall respectively bear, and the Master has made his report, which has been confirmed, and nothing remains but to carry the decree into effect, such a state of things is not to be considered as lis pendens; and a purchaser not bound to notice it as such. Kinsman v. Kinsman, 9 Law J. Chanc. 276.

Where the possession is vacant, a purchaser is not bound to inquire of the late occupier, what was the nature of his title. Miles v. Langley, 1 Russ. & M. 39.

A person who has entered into an agreement for the purchase of land, which was formerly part of the glebe of a rectory, and had been before sold for the redemption of the land-tax, is not bound to complete his purchase, when it appears that, upon the prior sale for the redemption of the land-tax, the rector was himself the actual purchaser in the name of his curate. Grover v. Hugell, 3 Russ. 428.

Where a judgment is entered up against the owner of lands, of which the legal estate is outstanding in a trustee or mortgagee, a purchaser who has notice of the judgment will be bound by it, although the creditor may not have taken out execution on his judgment. Tunstall v. Trappes (Lawson's case), 3 Sim. 286.

Notwithstanding the West Riding Register Act directs that no judgments shall affect lands, but only from the time when the judgment shall be registered, a purchaser, with notice of an unregistered judgment, will be bound by it. Tunstall v. Trappes (Gosling's case), 3 Sim. 301; (Lawson's case), Ib. 299.

(C) Sale.

(a) In general.

Semble—The solicitor of the plaintiffs, who has the conduct of the sale under a decree, is to be considered, for the purposes of the sale, as the agent of all the parties to the cause. Dalby v. Pullen, 8 Law J. Chanc. 74, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 296.

Premises held under distinct leases ordered to be sold in one lot upon the speculative probability arising from the nature of the property, that a higher price would be obtained by that mode of sale, than if they were put up in distinct lots. Cook v. Collingridge, 3 Russ. 520.

(b) Particulars and Conditions.

If land, generally reputed to be water-meadow, is sold by the assignees of a bankrupt by the description of an uncommonly rich water-meadow, whereas, in fact, it is very imperfectly watered, this is not such a misrepresentation as will avoid the sale. Scott v. Hanson, 1 Russ. & M. 128.

An estate sold under a decree, was described as of a certain annual value; and, by the conditions, compensation was to be made for any error in the particular. The purchaser paid his money into court, was let into possession, and took a conveyance. After he got into possession, he discovered that the rent was overstated in the particular:—Held, that he was entitled to a compensation out of his purchase-money. Cann v. Cann, 3 Sim. 447.

An estate, consisting of fen land, and so described in the particular of sale, was charged by a local, but public, act of parliament, with drainage and embanking taxes, of which the purchaser had no express notice:—Held, that he was not entitled to a compensation for those taxes. Barraud v. Archer, 9 Law J. Chanc. 173, s. c. 2 Sim. 432.

An estate sold, and at the auction, eau brink tax stated at a certain amount, and a corporation tax at a certain amount. It was afterwards discovered that the eau brink tax was less than the amount stated, and the corporation tax more: and on a bill filed by the vendors for a specific performance, the defendant claimed compensation for the excess in amount of the corporation tax, after deducting the difference in the amount of the eau brink tax:—the Court allowed the compensation. Townshend v. Granger, 9 Law J. Chanc. 176.

(c) Biddings.

A direction for a reserved bidding ought not to be inserted in a decree for sale, but ought to be the subject of a separate order. Brooker v. Collier, 3 Russ. 369.

(d) Where void or set aside.

A party having a small interest in possession, and a large one in reversion, expectant on the death of his father, and being greatly indebted, agreed to sell both his interests for a certain sum of money. The purchaser from time to time advanced small sums of money on account of the seller, and, two years after the agreement, the deed of sale was executed, the purchaser with the purchase-money paying off the annuity debts of the vendor.

The Court held, that such a transaction was void, the vendor not having recognized it after he came into possession by his father's death; and that, as the heir was in a distressed situation, it would consider that he had no means of discharging his debts, except by the proceeds of the sale; and that, the interests sold being valued at far more than the sum given, it would hold that the whole value of the interest in possession should be taken as so much of the purchase-money, and the balance of the purchase-money should be the sum supposed to be paid for the reversionary interest, which, being less than the true value, the heir was entitled to relief. Portmore v. Taylor, 9 Law J. Chanc. 203.

A conveyance to a purchaser for valuable consideration, set aside, on the ground that it proceeded upon an appointment by a father to his eldest son, made in fraud of the power. Hall v. Montague, 8 Law J. Chanc. 167.

Certain estates were devised to A for life, then to B for life, then to the sons of B in tail male. During the tenancy of A, a bill was filed by a creditor of the testator for a sale of part of the estates. No inquiry into the incumbrances affecting the estates was directed, and the trustees for the tenants in tail were not made parties to the suit. The lands were sold, and a conveyance executed by the officer of the Court and by A, and subsequently (though not till after a compromise had been effected,) by B; and the residue of the purchase-money was ordered to be invested for the benefit of A:—Held, that the bill was defective for want of proper parties; and the whole transaction was properly set aside after the death of the two tenants for life, and at the suit of the first surviving tenant in tail; and that the accounts were properly directed to be taken from the period of the death of the second tenant for life. House v. Townsend, 2 Dow. & Cl. 430.

A, having contracted for the purchase of an estate, agrees, by deed, to convey it to two partners to whom he was indebted, upon trust to sell, and after paying prior charges, to retain their own debt; and it was provided, that the power of sale might be exercised, by the partners, before any conveyance should be made to them. No conveyance was ever made, or required to be made, to the partners, nor did they attempt to exercise the power of sale, and, one of them having died, the survivor agreed with an agent of A to purchase the estate:—Held, that he was not a trustee, but stood in the situation of a creditor, with a security for his debt, and, therefore, was not disqualified from purchasing the estate. Chambers v. Waters, 2 Sim. 42.

Whether a purchaser is, under any circumstances, entitled to resell (so as to recover the value of his bargain,) until he has been in possession of the property; or unless he can shew mala fides on the part of the vendor—quære. Walker v. Moore, 8 Law J. K.B. 159, s. c. 10 B. & C. 416.

A purchaser in this court having resold with a profit before his purchase was confirmed; the person to whom he has sold is to be considered as a substituted purchaser, and must pay the additional purchase-money into court, for the benefit of the parties to the suit. Hodder v. Ruffin, 1 Tam. 341.

(D) PURCHASE-MONEY AND INTEREST.

[Jones v. Mudd, 4 Russ. 118, Dig. Law J. 540.]

The rule, that the purchaser of a reversion must prove that he gave a full price, has so long been considered as settled, that it can be altered only by the court of appeal. Hincksman v. Smith; Smith v. Hincksman, 3 Russ. 433.

Contract for the sale of a piece of land. The contract was, that the seller was not to warrant the title, and the buyer was to take the conveyance with all faults and defects, if any. Before the sale was completed, the buyer asked the seller, if any rent had ever been paid. The seller answered, that no rent had ever been paid by the person through whom he claimed, or by any one through whom that person claimed. The seller believed this to be truth at the time, but the fact turned out to be otherwise; and the purchaser was afterwards evicted by title paramount:—Held, that he could not recover back his purchase-money from the seller. Early v. Garrett, 8 Law J. K.B. 76, s. c. 9 B. & C. 928, s. c. 4 M. & R. 687.

Semble—A party purchasing an estate, but not paying the purchase-money, is, by the law of Scotland, liable to payment of interest, and can only release himself from that liability by consigning the money into court. Napier v. Lady Gordon, 2 Dow. & Cl. 461, n.

A purchaser of a reversion ordered to pay interest on his purchase-money from the time of the purchase. Trefusis v. Lord Clinton, 2 Sim. 359.

Where a vendor agreed to sell an estate, and the title was to be made good on a day certain, on which day the remainder of the purchase-money was to be paid, but if any unforeseen circumstance occurred to retard the completion of the contract, interest was to be paid on the purchase-money:—the Court, in decreeing a specific performance of the agreement, gave interest only from the date of the decree, the ntiffs taking the rents to that time; it appearing he satisfaction of the Court, that the delay which occurred was occasioned by a defect in the intiff's title, of which he could not be presumed orant, and such defect not being such circumnce as was contemplated by the conditions of sale. ggart v. Scott, 9 Law J. Chanc. 54, s. c. 1 Russ. M. 293, s. c. 1 Tam. 500.

(E) TITLE.

Clarke v. Vaux, 3 Russ. 320, Dig. Law J. 540.]

A purchaser is not bound to accept a doubtful e. Where vendors derived title from a trader who s liable to the bankrupt laws, and who had comtted an act of bankruptcy by assigning his estate his creditors:—Held, that the purchaser was not und to accept the title, it not appearing that all creditors had released, or that some one of them d not the power of suing out a commission. Pott Turner, 8 Law J. C.P. 282, s. c. 6 Bing. 702, s. c. M. & P. 551.

A purchaser not compelled to take a title depend- upon the words of a will, which were too doubtever to be settled without litigation. Sharp v. lcock, 4 Russ. 374.

Where a man purchases at an auction two distinct ts which adjoin, and which would more conveently be occupied together, he is not obliged to go with the purchase of either, unless the seller can ake a good title to both. Gibson v. Spurrier, Pea. .C. 49. [Kenyon]

A purchaser will be discharged from his purchase, ough the vendors have, since the date of the rort against the title, put themselves in a condition make a good title, if the objection, which they ave enabled themselves to cure, was known to their licitor previously, and concealed from the purhaser. Dalby v. Pullen, 8 Law J. Chanc. 74, s. c. Russ. & M. 296.

As a general rule, where land is agreed to be old tithe free, the right to the tithe is to be conidered so material to the enjoyment of the land, hat a purchaser is not compelled to complete his ontract with a compensation, if a good title cannot e made to the tithe; but this rule admits of exception, where the circumstances manifest, that the right o the tithe did not form any inducement to the purhaser to enter into the contract. Smith v. Tolcher, Russ. 302.

A testator gave a certain sum in long annuities, after payment of his debts and certain other expenses which he charged upon the fund. After his death, in amicable suit in Chancery was instituted by the egatee against the executor, who admitted assets; and, thereupon, a decree was made, directing the ransfer of the fund into the name of the accountant general, in trust in the cause, subject to the further order of the Court; but no reference had been made to the Master to take an account of the debts:—Held, that the legatee could not make out a good title to the fund, until it reasonably appeared that there was no outstanding claim for debts. Curtis v. Blow, 9 Law J. K.B. 260, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 426.

Sale in 1800, by the testamentary guardians of M, an infant, of some lots of his land, to redeem the land tax. H purchases one of the lots, and pays the price into the hands of his own agent, who was agent for the vendors, but the agent neglects to pay it into the bank in the terms of the Land Tax Redemption Act. M comes of age in 1807, and afterwards accounts with the agent as if the agent were his debtor, for the purchase-money paid by H; and the agent not being able to pay, M, in 1825, brought his ejectment, and the appellants, representatives of H, filed their bill in the Exchequer to restrain proceedings in the ejectment, and to compel M to complete the title. Bill dismissed by the Lord Chief Baron (Alexander), and the judgment affirmed by the Lords, principally on the ground that H, all along, knew that the money had not been paid into the bank, and that that was not done which was necessary to give validity to his title. Hicks v. Morant, 2 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 414.

Old judgments existing against a former owner of leaseholds, who parted with the property in 1770, and to enforce which no steps appeared to have been taken, are no objection to the title. Causton v. Macklew, 2 Sim. 242.

The generality and vagueness of descriptions of copyhold property, on the court rolls, are so well known, that a vendor is not bound to shew how the description on the court roll is to be applied to the present state of the property, if he prove that the property had actually been enjoyed and passed under that description, for upwards of sixty years. Long v. Collier, 4 Russ. 267.

A having purchased land, left the investigation of the title to C and D, solicitors, in partnership. They advise that a good title can be made, and the purchase is, thereupon, completed. D, the solicitor, was a trustee in the conveyance to bar dower. A dies, and his devisee sells the property to D, one of the solicitors. D did not object to the title until eight months afterwards; in his answer he said, he had no recollection of the title:—Held, that a solicitor, who had been employed to advise on a title, could not, on purchasing it himself of his client, set up an objection to it, which he did not think of any importance when advising his principal. Decree for specific performance. Beevor v. Simpson, 1 Tam. 69.

The question of title or no title, being matter of opinion for the Court, the purchaser is bound by that opinion, and cannot object to take the title, on the ground that the difficulty of the question on which it depends, furnishes a sufficient objection to completing the purchase. Rushton v. Craven, 12 Price, 599.

Houses and lands were devised to trustees in fee, upon trust for sale. The surviving trustee appointed the plaintiffs his executors, but did not make any devise which comprehended trust estates. On the death of the surviving trustee, his executors sold the property in lots. The defendant became the purchaser of four of them, and, just as his purchase was about to be completed, it was discovered that the legal estate was in an infant, the heir-at-law of the surviving trustee. The plaintiffs thereupon presented a petition to the Court under the statute 6 Geo. 4, that the infant might be directed to convey. The plaintiffs apprised the defendant of this proceeding, to which he made no objection. Twelve months elapsed before the Master's report could be obtained, and, a short time previously, the defendant commenced his action for the deposit, and subsequently recovered it; in the meantime, the dilapidations of the houses purchased had increased:—Held, that, although the defendant might have retired from the contract on the discovery of the defect in the vendor's title, yet, as he did not do so, and acquiesced in the proceedings which were necessary to clothe the plaintiffs with the legal title, and there being no evidence that reasonable diligence was not used in the Master's office, the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for specific performance:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to the amount of the dilapidations:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to costs:—Held, that the plaintiffs were only entitled to interest from the date of the decree, but that they were entitled to the rents up to that date. Hoggart v. Scott, 1 Tam. 500, s.c. 1 Russ. & M. 293.

The owner of leasehold property contracted to to sell it "as he then held the same," and the purchaser engaged to buy it "without requiring the lessor's title." He subsequently, at his own expense, examined the lessor's title, and found it to be defective:—Held, that nevertheless he was not entitled to rescind the contract, and receive back his deposit money.

The leases granted in the above case, appeared to have been granted under a power, but the power was not properly pursued; and this was the defect in the leases. But the fact of their having been granted under a power was not known when the contract of sale was entered into:—Held, that for the purpose of such contract, those who professed to grant the lease, and not the donor of the power, must be considered as the "lessor," whose title was not to be inquired into. Spratt v. Jeffery, 8 Law J. K.B. 114, s. c. 10 B. & C. 249, s. c. 5 M. & R. 188.

(F) Actions and Suits.

(a) In general.

In an action to recover back the deposit paid on a purchase at an auction, (for defective title,) the question for a court of common law is, not whether the vendor's title be such as a court of equity would decline to compel an unwilling purchaser to take, but whether it be a legal title. Boyman v. Gutch, 9 Law J. C.P. 63, s. c. 7 Bing. 379, s. c. 5 M. & P. 222.

In general, a purchaser cannot recover from the vendor any damages for the breach of contract through defect of title, except his deposit-money, interest, and the expenses of investigating the title.

Therefore, where a purchaser, upon receiving an abstract of title, took an opinion upon it, and then entered into a contract of re-sale of part at a considerable profit; and it afterwards appeared, on comparing the abstract with the title deeds, that the former was incorrect and the title was defective:—Held, that the purchaser had been premature in his sub-sale; and that he could not recover, in damages against the vendor, the value of the bargain he had lost by the sub-sale; or even the claims for expenses made upon him by the sub-purchasers. Walker v. Moore, 8 Law J. K.B. 159, s. c. 10 B. & C. 416.

A having agreed to purchase an estate, and paid a deposit, B, the seller, is unable to make a good title by the stipulated day; A afterwards, upon negotiating a compromise with his creditors, states his apprehension that he may be compelled by B to complete the purchase, and applies to B to cancel the contract, and return the deposit. B refuses to do either, but says that he will never take any steps against A to enforce the contract. Upon this footing, the composition proceeds, C engaging to procure 7*s.* in the pound. It would be a fraud upon the creditors, and upon C, if B were to seek to enforce the contract; and, therefore, A cannot maintain an action against B for the deposit. Clark v. Upton, 3 M. & R. 89.

If goods be sold on credit, the vendor cannot, before the credit has expired, maintain assumpsit for goods sold, even though he can prove that the goods were not bought in the fair way of trade, but for the fraudulent purpose of being immediately resold at an under price:—Semble, that trover is his proper remedy. Ferguson v. Carrington, 3 C. & P. 157. [Tenterden]

It is no answer to an action at law for non-payment of the remainder of purchase-money agreed to be paid to the vendor on his executing a bond conditioned to cause the title to be completed and the premises to be conveyed to the vendee, that he, the vendor, purchased the estate sold at a sale of the property of a bankrupt, whose assignee he was.

Time is not of the essence of such a contract.

Nor is it an objection to the action, that the bond was not tendered to the obligee till two years after the time when the money was to be paid by him. Willett v. Clarke, 10 Price, 207.

It is not a ground for arresting the judgment, that such a tender is averred in the declaration to have been made "afterwards—viz. on the (&c.)" two years after the day when the money should have been paid: "afterwards" being the substance of the averment, the time under the videlicet being immaterial. Willett v. Clarke, 10 Price, 207.

(b) Pleadings.

To a bill, stating a settlement, under which, after a life-estate to A, the plaintiff was entitled to the estate, and praying the delivery of the title-deeds, the defendant pleaded a purchase for a valuable consideration, without notice, averring that A pretended to be seised in fee, and was in possession, but not averring that he had any title prior to, and independent of the settlement,—whether such a plea is a good defence to the bill—quere.

A plea of purchase for a valuable consideration, without notice, must aver, that the vendor pretended to be seised, not merely before, but at the respective times of the execution of the conveyance, and of the payment of the consideration. Jackson v. Rose, 9 Law J. Chanc. 32, s. c. 4 Russ. 514.

(c) Practice.

A decree, directing the sale of an estate, is absolute against all the defendants except one, who made default; against him it is only a decree nisi; the estates are sold, before it is made absolute; and A B is reported the purchaser: afterwards A B moves, before the Vice Chancellor, to be discharged from his purchase, on the ground that the decree is not binding, and an order discharging him is made; notice of an appeal motion to discharge this order is given before the Lord Chancellor, and before the motion is heard, the decree is made absolute against the defendant making default:—Held, that the purchaser entitled to be discharged at the time when he e his application; and that his right to be disged could not be affected by the steps taken subiently, to cure the imperfection. Coster v. Turr. 8 Law J. Chanc. 98, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 311.

/here the report is in favour of the title, the rt, on allowing exceptions to it, will give the lor a reasonable time within which to remove the ction, although the exceptions and further diions were set down to come on together. Portr v. Mill, 9 Law J. Chanc. 193, s. c. 1 Russ. & 696.

in estate having been sold, in which the petiers were interested, it was represented to them : a good title could not be made; and they were uced to give a brief to counsel to consent to the chaser being discharged; they subsequently covered circumstances which led them to conclude y had been deceived, and that, in fact, a good e could be made, and thereupon petitioned the urt that the order might be discharged. The Court charged this order, giving the purchaser his ts, and referred it to the Master to inquire wher a good title could be made—the solicitor for petitioner to have the conduct of the inquiry. tter v. Ommanney, 1 Tam. 344.

Upon the allowance of exceptions to a report proving of a title, the Court will, on the applicaa of the vendor, refer it back to the Master to rew his report, in order to give the vendor an oprtunity of producing evidence to remove the obtion. Egerton v. Jones, 3 Sim. 392.

VENIRE.

[See PRACTICE.]

VENUE.

(A) CHANGING.
(B) RETAINING.

(A) CHANGING.

The Court will not change the venue on the ere ground that many witnesses reside in the county which it is proposed to change it, if there be also any witnesses on the other side residing at the ace where the venue is laid. Alcock v. Cook, 8 aw J. C.P. 293, s. c. 6 Bing. 733, s. c. 4 M. & P. 73.

In an action for a libel, the venue cannot be hanged on the common affidavit; but there must be pecial circumstances shewn by affidavit: and this, lthough there be another cause of action—as, for aliciously apprehending the plaintiff. Murray v. Nicholls, 7 Law J. C.P. 14.

The defendant obtained a rule nisi to change the enue from London to Warwick, on the usual affilavit. Cause was shewn on an affidavit, which tated, that the defendant's attorney had declared hat he should change the venue, to postpone the trial ill the Assizes, when Lord Tenterden's Act, 9 Geo. k. c. 14, would have come into operation, and thereby eat the plaintiffs, as they had no promise in writing. The Lord Chief Justice, and Mr Justice Park, were of opinion that the rule should be discharged: Mr. Justice Burrough, and Mr. Justice Gaselee thought that the defendant's attorney should have an opportunity of answering the affidavit; but, as he did not do so effectually, the rule was ultimately discharged. Amner v. Cattell, 7 Law J. C.P. 78, s. c. 5 Bing. 208, s. c. 2 M. & P. 367.

The venue in an action upon an I O U, may be changed upon the usual affidavit. Roberts v. Wright, 1 C. & J. 547, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 532.

In the Court of Exchequer the rule nisi for changing the venue makes itself absolute, unless cause be shewn on or before the day mentioned in such rule. Bagnall v. Shipham, 9 Law J. Exch. 81, s. c. 1 C. & J. 377.

Where a rule had been granted for changing the venue, the Court would not discharge it on an affidavit stating that the cause of action arose in two other counties than that in which the venue had been laid; although the affidavit also stated circumstances to shew that fact, and falsify the defendant's (the common) affidavit, where the plaintiff would not undertake to give material evidence in the county of the original venue.

Nor would the Court, under the circumstances, change the venue to the third county, although the declaration laid the indebitatus in Stafford, in the first count, and, in the others, "in the county aforesaid."

Statement by the Court of the general principles, and the ground of the practice in this respect, in all cases. Whitehouse v. Hudden, 10 Price, 171.

(B) RETAINING.

In an action for a breach of promise of marriage, the defendant having obtained a rule nisi to change the venue from L to D, on the usual affidavit, that the plaintiff's cause of action arose in D, and not elsewhere—the Court discharged the rule, on the defendant's undertaking to give material evidence in L, or in the next adjoining county (Middlesex), it appearing that the letters containing the promises on which the action was founded, were written in the county of D, but received by the plaintiff in Middlesex. Anonymous, 8 Law J. C.P. 64.

The rule to bring back the venue will be granted, though after the rule for changing it has become absolute, but without discharging the former rule. Woolley v. Boates, 1 Tyrw. 285.

Proof of a conversation with the defendant in the cause, referring to the matters involved in it, taking place after the writ is sued out, will satisfy an undertaking to give material evidence in the county where the conversation took place. Gosling v. Birnie, 1 M. & M. 531. [Tindal]

VERDICT.

[Powell v. Sonnett, 1 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 56, Dig. Law J. 547.]

The Court of King's Bench will not grant a habeas corpus to discharge out of custody a person who has been convicted of libel at the commission of oyer and terminer, at the Old Bailey, on the ground that when the verdict was returned, only one commissioner was present, instead of two, as required by law. But quære, whether such a circumstance may not be assigned as error. Rex v. Carlile, 4 C. & P. 415. [Knowlys, Rec.]

The Court will not order a verdict to be entered for the defendant, on any given count, after disposal of a motion for a new trial. Symons v. Hearson, 12 Price, 369.

VESTRY AND VESTRYMEN.

[See 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 60, 9 Law J. Stat. 107, entitled 'An act for the better regulation of vestries, and for the appointment of auditors of accounts in certain parishes of England and Wales.']

A select vestry, though immemorial, cannot prevent the operation of the 59 Geo. 3. c. 12.

Accordingly, to a mandamus calling on churchwardens and overseers to summon a meeting for the purpose of establishing a select vestry for the concerns of the poor, pursuant to 59 Geo. 3. c. 12, a return was made, stating, that there was, by custom, an ancient vestry in the parish, which had from time immemorial consulted and deliberated on parochial matters, and acted as a select vestry for the concerns of the poor, and that they had immemorially been accustomed to perform the duties imposed on select vestries by the statute:—Held, that the return was bad, since the statute imposes some duties, as the management of money raised by poor rates, and making orders for the government of overseers, which could not have existed before the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2. Rex v. St. Bartholomew the Great, 9 Law J. M.C. 135, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 506.

Where an act of parliament gives a power, in relation to a public trust, to a definite number of persons, it is necessary for a majority of that number to attend at each meeting.

Accordingly, where a select vestry of twenty-six was appointed under the 58 Geo. 3. c. 45. and the 59 Geo. 3. c. 30, for the care and management of a district church, and a number less than fourteen met and made a church-rate:—Held, that the rate was bad. Freeman v. Meymott—Blackett v. Blisard, 8 Law J. K.B. 85, s. c. 9 B. & C. 851, s. c. 4 M. & R. 461.

WAGER.

[See GAMING and STAKEHOLDER.]

Money deposited in the hands of a stakeholder on an illegal wager, may be recovered by the party making the deposit as money had and received, although the stakeholder has paid it over, if such payment over has been made under an indemnity. Howson v. Houseman, 7 Law J. K.B. 26.

WAGES.

[See MASTER AND SERVANT, and SHIP AND SHIPPING.]

[Payment of wages in goods in certain trades, prohibited by 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 37, 9 Law J. Stat. 66.]

WALES.

[Welch jurisdiction abolished, 1 Will. 4. c. 70, 8 Law J. Stat. 157.]

The Judge at Nisi Prius cannot certify under the statute 5 Geo. 4. c. 106. s. 21, (Welch Judicature Act,) unless the plaintiff prove that the defendant was in Wales at the time of the service of process. Jones v. Kenrick, 2 M. & M. 179. [Tenterden]

The Court in banco have no power to assist a defendant under the 5 Geo. 4. c. 106. s. 21, unless the Judge who tried the cause has certified. Nor will they decide the question whether certain special facts, which are stated in the certificate, bring the case within the act or not. The Judge who tried the cause is himself to decide upon those facts, and is either to grant or refuse the certificate in the terms given by the act. Jardine v. Lewis, 7 Law J. K.B. 229, s. c. 9 B. & C. 545.

The Court of Exchequer cannot order judgment to be entered up in that court on a warrant of attorney, to confess judgment in the Great Sessions in Wales, given previously by the stat. 1 Will. 4. c. 70. Williams v. Williams, 1 C. & J. 387, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 351.

The late Court of Great Sessions for the county of Chester, at the Summer Sessions, 1830, issued an attachment returnable at the next Great Sessions, against the attorney in a cause for non-payment of the defendant's costs. Before next Great Sessions, the act abolishing the court (11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 70.) came into operation; but, previously to that time, the sheriff had taken a bail-bond for the appearance of the attorney, pursuant to the attachment. The sheriff being ruled, in the Easter term following, to return the writ in the Court of Exchequer, returned cepi corpus, and that he was ready to have had his body before the Justices of Chester at the return, but that, before the return, the Court was abolished:—Held, that the return was insufficient, and that the applications against the sheriff in Easter term were in time. Jones v. Clarke—Finleyson v. Same, 1 C. & J. 447.

The action by concessit solvere in Wales, cannot be commenced by notice, but only by original.

Where an attorney in Wales delivered a notice, that an action had been commenced, to a bailiff, to be served upon the defendant, who afterwards, and before the notice was served, paid the plaintiff his debt; and the attorney afterwards proceeded by concessit solvere, to recover the costs:—Held, that the notice did not operate as the legal commencement of the action, and that the payment was in time. Phillips v. Williams, 3 Y. & J. 207.

WARD IN CHANCERY.

[See GUARDIAN AND WARD.]

The husband's costs of the proceedings, in making a settlement of the fortune of a ward, whom he had married without the leave of the Court, were allowed to him out of the fund, he having no property of his own, and there being no circumstances of aggravation in his conduct. Anonymous, 4 Russ. 473.

WARRANT.

[See CONSTABLE and JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.]

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY.

(A) EXECUTION.
(B) DEFEASANCE.
(C) JUDGMENT.

(A) EXECUTION.

A prisoner who executes a warrant of attorney while in custody, is entitled to have the benefit of attestation, not merely by a person who is on the rolls of the court as an attorney, but who has a certificate at the time. And accordingly, a prisoner was discharged out of custody, when the warrant of attorney was attested by a person who had not for several years taken out a certificate; although he mentioned it at the time to the prisoner. Verge v. Dodd, 8 Law J. K.B. 302.

The statute 3 Geo, 4. c. 39. s. 1. enacts, that within twenty-one days after the execution of every warrant of attorney to confess judgment in a personal action, such warrant must be filed, together with an affidavit of the time of the execution thereof, with the clerk of the dockets and judgments. An affidavit, filed with the warrant of attorney, stating, that the deponent was present, and saw the warrant of attorney, dated the 25th of April 1827, signed, sealed, and delivered by the party in the warrant named, and delivered as and for his act and deed, is not sufficient, inasmuch as it did not set forth the time of the signing, sealing and delivery, within the terms of the statute. Dillon v. Edwards, 7 Law J. C.P. 110, s. c. 2 M. & P. 550.

(B) DEFEASANCE.

Whether a warrant of attorney, which is subject to a defeazance, but which defeazance is not written on the warrant of attorney before it is filed, is void, as between the parties, as well as against assignees of bankrupts and insolvents, under the 3 Geo. 4. c. 39. s. 4, and 7 Geo. 4. c. 57. s. 33—quære.

Held, by Lord Tenterden, Mr. Justice Bayley, and Mr. Justice Littledale, that an omission so to write the defeazance does not avoid the warrant of attorney as between the parties; but only as against such assignees.

Held, by Parke, J. (concurring with an opinion previously expressed by Holroyd, J.), that such omission rendered the warrant of attorney altogether void, even as between the parties. Bennett v. Daniell, 8 Law J. K.B. 190, s. c. 10 B. & C. 500.

(C) JUDGMENT.

[See WALES.]

The defendant gave a warrant of attorney authorizing I S to enter up judgment against him for 400*l.*, with a memorandum, stating the object of the warrant of attorney to be, to secure to I S, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, the payment of 200*l.*:—Held, that judgment could not be entered up by the executrix of I S. Henshall v. Matthew, 9 Law J. C.P. 117, s. c. 7 Bing. 337, s. c. 5 M. & P. 157.

Entering up judgment on an old warrant of attorney. Anonymous, 8 Law J. C.P. 174.

The Court allowed judgment to be entered up on an old warrant of attorney, upon an affidavit by the plaintiff's agent, that he saw the defendant execute the warrant of attorney, which was given to secure a sum of money due to the plaintiff, which remained due and unpaid. Huthwaite v. Hood, 5 M. & P. 21.

Where judgment is entered up in debt on a mutuatus for non-payment of an annuity secured by a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, it is not necessary to assign breaches under the statute 8 & 9 Will. 3. c. 11. Shaw v. the Marquis of Worcester, 8 Law J. C.P. 98, s. c. 6 Bing. 385, s. c. 4 M. & P. 21.

Where a warrant of attorney authorizes a judgment to be entered up for double the sum actually due, and the judgment is entered up accordingly, interest will be allowed on the debt. Tunstall v. Trappes (Gosling's case), 3 Sim. 301, (Lawson's case), Ib. 299.

WARRANTY.

As a general rule, whatever a seller represents during the treaty for the sale, respecting the subject-matter, is a warranty.

Therefore, upon the treaty for the sale of a mare, the following dialogue having passed between the buyer and seller:

B. She is sound, of course.

S. Yes; to the best of my knowledge.

B. Will you warrant her?

S. I never warrant; I do not even warrant myself."

Held, that this was a qualified warranty; and that upon proof, not only that the mare was unsound, but that the seller knew her at the time to be so, the buyer was entitled to maintain his action upon the warranty.

Where the facts, as between buyer and seller, amount to a warranty, the buyer may maintain assumpsit upon the contract, although the facts amount to deceit on the part of the seller; and might support an action of deceit. Wood v. Smith, 8 Law J. K.B. 50, s. c. 5 M. & R. 124, s. c. 4 C. & P. 45, s. c. 1 M. & M. 539.

A manufacturer who sells an article for a particular purpose, impliedly warrants it to be fit for that purpose. Where, therefore, the defendants, copper-manufacturers, sold to the plaintiff copper for sheathing the bottom of a vessel, which in a short time became corroded and unfit for use, and the jury found the decay to have arisen from an intrinsic defect in the quality:—Held, that the defendants were liable for the breach of this implied warranty, that the copper was fit and proper for the purpose of sheathing the vessel. Jones v. Bright, 7 Law J. C.P. 213, s. c. 5 Bing. 533, s. c. 3 M. & P. 155.

Where, in the course of dealing between the buyer and seller of a horse, the seller described him as being "perfectly quiet and free from vice," and afterwards a bargain was struck, nothing being expressly said on either side about warranty:—Held, that the description given by the seller before the purchase was concluded, amounted to a warranty. Cave v. Coleman, 7 Law J. K.B. 25, s.c. 3 M. & R. 2.

A receipt on the sale of a colt, contained the following words after the date, name, and sum, "for grey four year old colt, warranted sound in every respect:"—Held, that such part as related to the age was a representation only, and not a warranty. Budd v. Fairmanner, 5 C. & P. 78. [Tindal]

Defendant warranted sound wind and limb, at the time of the bargain, and sold for 90*l.*, a race-horse which had broken down in training, and was affected with a splint: circumstances which were disclosed to the plaintiff, and but for which the horse would have been worth 500*l.*:—Held, that this warranty did not import that the horse was fit for the purposes of an ordinary horse.

The warranty being restricted to the time of the bargain, semble, the plaintiff could not sue in respect of the horse breaking down afterwards.

Defects apparent at the time of a warranty are not included in it. Margetson v. Wright, 7 Bing. 603, s. c. 5 M. & P. 606.

A warranty of a ship being American, does not mean that she is American built; but that she is the property of an American subject. Wilson v. Backhouse, Pea. A.C. 119.

Where goods are sold with a warranty, and it appears that they are inferior to the warranty, semble, that it is incumbent on the buyer to return them to the seller, in order to his setting up the inferiority as a defence in an action upon the contract for sale. But, at all events, it is not incumbent on the buyer to return articles sold under a warranty, merely because he may have reason to believe that they are inferior to the warranty. He may rely upon the warranty and apply the articles to their intended purpose.

Where goods have been sold under a warranty, and, in an action for the amount, the defence is, that they were inferior to the warranty, although the buyer kept and used them, and the contest on the trial is upon the question as to the alleged inferiority,—whether the plaintiff in such action, if he fail upon the question of warranty, will be entitled to recover in that action, upon the quantum meruit, a reasonable compensation for the value of the goods—quære: Parke, J. being of opinion that he would; and that the claim to reasonable compensation could be answered only by shewing that the goods were of no value at all. Poulton v. Lattimore, 7 Law J. K.B. 225, s. c. 9 B. & C. 259, s. c. 4 M. & R. 208.

A person who has purchased a horse warranted sound, sold it again, and then re-purchased it, cannot, on discovering that the horse was unsound when first sold, require the original vendor to take it back again; nor can he, by reason of the unsoundness, resist an action by such vendor for the price. But he may give the breach of warranty in evidence, in reduction of damages.

Semble, that the purchaser of a specific chattel under warranty, having once accepted it, can in no instance return the chattel, or resist an action for the price, on the ground of breach of warranty, unless in case of fraud, or express agreement authorizing the return, or consent of the vendor.

But where the contract is executory only when the chattel is received, as where goods are ordered of a manufacturer, and he contracts to supply them at a certain quality, or fit for a certain purpose, the vendee may rescind the contract if the goods do not answer the warranty, provided he has not kept them longer than was necessary for the purpose of trial, or exercised the dominion of an owner over them, as, by selling them. Street v. Blay, 2 B. & Ad. 456.

In an action for breach of warranty of a horse, the warranty was not proved, but it appeared that, after it had been returned to him, the defendant had used the horse, and had offered it to a third person for sale:—Held, that by using and offering to sell the horse, the defendant had rescinded the contract for sale of it to the plaintiff. Long v. Preston, 7 Law J. C.P. 14, s. c. 2 M. & P. 262.

In an action on a warranty of a horse, the vendor of the horse to the defendant, who gave a similar warranty on that sale, is a competent witness for the defendant. Baldwin v. Dixon, 2 M. & M. 38. [Tenterden]

WASTE.

Ploughing old meadow land is waste; it alters the evidence of the title, and the land cannot be restored to its original state. On the plea of nul waste, evidence that such ploughing was for amelioration, was properly rejected.

Cutting timber-trees is also waste; and if done for repairs, that matter must be specially pleaded to a writ of waste, and cannot be given in evidence under the general issue. Simmons, demandant; Norton, tenant; 9 Law J. C.P. 185, s. c. 7 Bing. 640, s. c. 5 M. & P. 645.

Where tenant for life, unimpeachable of waste, cuts and sells timber planted for ornament or shelter, the proceeds of that timber belong to the person having then the first vested estate of inheritance: and parties having intervening estates for life, have no right to an account of the proceeds of the timber so cut, or to have such proceeds invested upon the same trusts with the lands. Butler v. Kinnersley, 8 Law J. Chanc. 67, s. c. 7 Law J. Chanc. 150.

WATER AND WATERCOURSE.

Flowing water is publici juris. The person first appropriating it, has the exclusive right, in derogation of the primitive right of the public; if he abandon the appropriation, it becomes again publici juris. Case will not lie, for lowering the bank of a stream, and erecting a weir, thereby diverting the flow of water from the plaintiff's mill, where the place cut down, &c. was the freehold of the defendant, who at the time had a parol licence, which was afterwards revoked. Liggins v. Inge, 9 Law J. C.P. 202, s. c. 7 Bing. 682, s. c. 5 M. & P. 712.

A prescriptive right to the use of water flowing through certain closes, for the purpose of supplying a water-mill, is not extinguished by unity of possession of the mill and such closes. Holland v. Deakin, 7 Law J. K.B. 145.

A person whose land is occasionally liable to injury by the overflow of river water, has no right, in is mode of protecting himself against that injury, produce injury or damage to his neighbour in respect of the course of the same water. Rex v. Trafford, 9 Law J. M.C. 66, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 874.

The plaintiff claimed a prescriptive right to pen back the water of a stream running through the defendant's land. The original mode of enjoying his right had for fifty years been by placing across the stream loose stones, and occasionally a board also; but, on one occasion, the plaintiff had, in addition to these, fixed the board into the bed of the stream by means of two hooked stakes. The defendant, conceiving this to give the dam a character of permanency more extensive than the legal right of the plaintiff, caused both the stakes and the board to be removed. In an action for the removal, the jury having found for the plaintiff, the Court refused to disturb the verdict, on the ground that, although the defendant might have been justified in removing the stakes, he could not justify the removal of the board also. Greenslade v. Halliday, 8 Law J. C.P. 124, s. c. 6 Bing. 279, s. c. 4 M. & P. 71.

A proprietor of land on the bank of a river, having commenced the building of a mound, which, according to the opinion and report of an engineer, would, if completed, in times of ordinary flood, throw the waters of the river on the grounds of a proprietor on the opposite bank, so as to overflow and injure them, was restrained by perpetual interdict from the further erection of any bulwark, or other work, which might have the effect of diverting the stream of the river, in time of flood, from its accustomed course, and throwing the same upon the lands of the appellant. Menzies v. Breadalbane, 3 Bligh, N.S. 414.

WAY.

[See HIGHWAY.]

Where A and B are in possession of lands under C, B cannot prescribe for a right of way over the land of A. Large v. Pitt, Pea. A.C. 152.

A right of way by prescription was claimed in respect of the occupation of a certain close. It appeared that the close was part of an open common which had been inclosed by act of parliament in 1774; and then the close had been allotted to the ancestor of him who claimed the right of way. But the user of the right of way by the commoners was proved to have been before 1774. The jury found a verdict in favour of the right of way. It was then objected, that this right of way, as claimed, could not have existed by prescription; but the Court held that it might, as the fee might have been in the lord, with a right of way for the tenants; to such of whom as took allotments, the right would pass. Codling v. Johnson, 8 Law J. K.B. 68, s. c. 9 B. & C. 933, s. c. 4 M. & R. 671.

The subsequent vesting, by act of parliament, in commissioners, of a piece of ground, does not take away a general right of way previously exercised by the public.

Semble—That an allegation in the declaration, that a way was a general highway for all purposes, is severable, and that plaintiff may recover for an interruption to the footway. Vollance v. Savage, 9 Law J. C.P. 181, s. c. 7 Bing. 595, s. c. 5 M. & P. 576.

A local act gave power to lay waggon-ways along or across any of the roads specified, on condition that the parties who did so should keep such roads in repair for twenty yards on each side of the waggon-way so laid down:—Held, that where there would not be twenty yards on each side of the waggon-way, there was no power to lay one on that part of the road.

A local temporary act gave power to lay a waggon-way. Whether, on the expiration of such act, the power to continue the waggon-way ceased; or whether, as in the case of a licence executed, the waggon-way, having been legally laid on, might be continued—quære. Rex v. Morris, 9 Law J. K.B. 55, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 441.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Contents of measures not to be proved but by a production in court. Chenie v. Watson, Pea. A.C. 123.

A sale of goods by the Winchester measure, the agreement not stating what proportion it bears to the imperial measure, is void by the 5 Geo. 4. c. 74. s. 15; the Winchester measure being, for the purposes of that section, a measure established by local custom. Watts v. Friend, 8 Law J. K.B. 181, s. c. 10 B. & C. 416.

(A) VALIDITY.

(a) In general.

A natural-born British subject may acquire a foreign domicile; nor will the animus revertendi, and claim to be considered, and treatment as a British subject, preserve his original domicile; and if domiciled abroad, he must conform in his testamentary acts to the formalities required by the lex domicilii. Stanley v. Bernes, 3 Hag. Ec. 373.

A feme covert having, under certain powers, made a will and codicil in February 1818, (eight months after marriage,) by which, after making provision for husband, and leaving sundry legacies, she bequeathed the bulk of her fortune to, and appointed executors, strangers in blood, such disposition (except the provision for her husband,) being similar to a will in 1816; made a will on the 9th of March 1827, and a codicil thereto on the 21st of April (she dying on the 8th of May) 1827; which papers, except legacies to three servants, and rings to three friends, left all her property to her husband, and appointed executors him and a total stranger:—The Court, holding that the latter papers were obtained by the husband's undue influence, when her faculties were much impaired, pronounced for the will and codicil of 1818, and condemned the husband (who, though he denied the validity of the papers, and nominally prayed an intestacy, was the real party setting up the latter papers,) in the costs of the executors of the will of 1818. Marsh v. Tyrrell, 2 Hag. Ec. 84.

Where the will of a married woman—obtained while she was in an extremely weak state, nine days before death, by the active agency of the husband, the sole executor and universal legatee—wholly departed from a former will, deliberately made a few months before, the presumption is strong against the act; and the evidence not being satisfactory, the will pronounced against, and the husband condemned in costs. Mynn v. Robinson, 2 Hag. Ec. 179.

Where an undue influence is exercised over the mind of a testator in making his will, the provisions in the will, in favour of the person exercising that influence, are void; but the will may be good as far as respects other parties; so that a will may be valid as to some parts, and invalid as to others; may be good as to one party, and bad as to another. Trimlestown v. D'Alton, 1 D. & Cl. A.C. 85.

If no suspicion of fraud exists, a will, consistent with previous affection and declarations, and supported by recognitions and circumstances shewing volition and capacity, is valid, though made in extremis, and though the instructions were conveyed through the party benefited. Ross v. Chester, 1 Hag. Ec. 227.

Instructions for a will containing the fixed and final intentions of the deceased, are valid, if the formal execution is prevented by death. Burrows v. Burrows, 1 Hag. 109.

Where there is final intention proved, and execution prevented by the act of God, the mere want of execution does not invalidate an instrument disposing of personalty. The disposition has the same legal effect as if the instrument had been actually signed and attested. Masterman v. Maberly, 2 Hag. Ec. 247.

A will, made by a joint tenant, is inoperative as to the property in joint tenancy, although he survive his companion. Doe d. Jackson v. Hiley, 8 Law J. M.C. 105, s. c. 10 B. & C. 885.

Letters containing final testamentary intentions, are valid as a will, the deceased considering no further act necessary; nor will they be invalidated by the deceased not having subsequently disposed (as she then purposed) of a small part of her property. Manly v. Lakin, 1 Hag. Ec. 130.

(b) Testator's Capacity.

[Dew v. Clark, 4 Russ. 511, Dig. Law J. 553.]

A will may be pronounced for, though both the attesting witnesses depose to the deceased's incapacity. Le Breton v. Fletcher, 2 Hag. Ec. 558.

Where there is a great change of disposition, and a total departure from former testamentary intentions long adhered to, it is material to examine the probability of the change, especially if at the time of making the latter disposition the capacity is doubtful; still more, if the person in whose favour the change is made, possessing great influence and authority, originates and conducts the whole transaction.

A person who can understand and answer rationally questions, may still not be capable of making a will for all purposes. The rule of law is, that the competency of the mind must be judged of by the nature of the act to be done, and from a consideration of all the circumstances of the case. Marsh v. Tyrrell and Harding, 2 Hag. Ec. 87, 129.

If there is no evidence of insanity at the time of giving instructions, the commission of suicide three days afterwards will not invalidate the paper, by raising an inference of previous derangement. Burrows v. Burrows, 1 Hag. Ec. 109.

Supervening insanity is sufficient to account for the non-execution of a paper written shortly before, and consistent with the intentions and affections of the deceased; nor will it so reflect back on previous eccentricity as to invalidate such paper. Hoby v. Hoby, 1 Hag. Ec. 146.

A testamentary paper cannot be set aside on the ground of monomania, (the deceased's belief of an attempt to poison him,) except there be the most decisive evidence that at the time of the factum of the paper the belief amounted to insane delusion.

Semble, that a will, of personalty only, agreeable to long entertained intentions, prepared two months before, and execution merely delayed for want of witnesses, would be valid as an unexecuted paper, even though the execution finally took place during supervening insanity. Fulleck v. Allinson, 3 Hag. Ec. 527.

Where the attesting witnesses, disinterested medical men, speak strongly to the sanity, the Court will not set aside a will on proof by interrogatories, but without plea, that the deceased, many years before, had been under an insane delusion. Kemble v. Church, 3 Hag. Ec. 273.

The clearest and most consistent evidence of capacity and volition, is required to support a codicil conveying bequests of such extent as to be irreconcileable with the character of the deceased, and with her intentions as proved by her affections and former testamentary dispositions: the deceased being at the time within ten days of her death, and in a state of extreme weakness and debility; all her confidential friends excluded or absent, and those only about her who are benefited under or engaged in the preparation or execution of the instrument. Brydges v. King, 1 Hag. Ec. 256.

The Court will not at once reject an allegation propounding a will, which sounds to folly, when facts are pleaded, shewing that the deceased, up to his death, conducted himself in the ordinary concerns of life as a sane man. Arbery v. Ashe, 1 Hag. Ec. 214.

The will (executed eight years before death) of a woman, who, though guilty of excessive drinking and great extravagances, managed her own property, received her dividends, did various acts of business, corresponded rationally with her friends, and was not shewn to be under any delusion, cannot be set aside on the ground of insanity; and though such will—in total exclusion of distant next of kin (with whom she had quarrelled)—be in the handwriting of, and executed at the office of her attorney (one of the executors, and residuary legatee to a great amount, he and his family having also very large legacies), and the attesting witnesses speak to a bare execution,—documents in her own handwriting, shewing both capacity and knowledge of contents, though not mentioning the residue, will supply the additional proof required by such circumstance.

Where no fixed and settled delusion is shewn, and consequently no decided actual insanity, and extravagant acts are accounted for by the excitement of liquor, while at times the mind was sound,—in order to avoid a will, it must be proved that the deceased was so excited by liquor, or so conducted himself during the particular act, as to be at that moment legally disqualified from giving effect to such act.

Delusion has been generally laid down as an essential constituent of derangement. Semble, that insanity has never been held to be established in any case where delusion has at no time prevailed.

Semble, that a lucid interval then exists when the mind is apparently rational on all subjects, and no symptom of delusion can be called forth.

Where clear and decisive insanity has been established at a prior time, acts of a doubtful character are of more force in proof of its existence at the time in question: and even subsequent decidedly insane acts may reflect back on acts otherwise equivocal; but when no decided acts, prior or subsequent, are proved,—equivocal acts, however numerous, will not establish insanity. Wheeler v. Alderson, 3 Hag. Ec. 574—608.

Where the deceased was admitted to have been insane before the execution of two asserted wills, and where there was evidence of delusion and other indicia of derangement existing shortly before, as well as subsequent to the acts,—proof of calmness, and of his doing formal matters of business under the sanction of his family, are not sufficient to rebut the presumption against the papers.

Every person is presumed sane till shewn to have become insane: the presumption then changes, and a party setting up any instrument executed after the existence of insanity, has the burthen of proof cast on him, and must shew the mind perfectly restored, and delusion removed.

In civil suits the law avoids every act done during the period of lunacy, even though such act cannot be connected with the influence of the insanity. Groom v. Thomas, 2 Hag. Ec. 433—6.

When the opinions of persons apparently intending to depose fairly are contradictory as to capacity, particularly if facts shew the deceased was occasionally capable, the Court will infer a fluctuating capacity. The will of a person in such a state, of which probate was taken out four months after the deceased's death, and not called in for two years and a half, pronounced for; there being satisfactory evidence of instructions, and of capacity, at the time of the factum; the disposition contained being consistent with his affections, and its variation from a will executed before his mind became impaired being accounted for by a change of circumstances.

The influence to vitiate an act must amount to force and coercion destroying free agency, and there must be proof that the act was obtained by this coercion. Williams v. Goude and Bennet, 1 Hag. Ec. 577—81.

Where the widow, in opposition to a will, sets up habitual intoxication, weakened capacity, and custody, she may also plead insane dislike, on the part of her husband, to account for their living apart, though the delusion may not be sufficient, per se, to invalidate the will. Reay v. Cowcher, 1 Hag. Ec. 75.

Where the drawer and attesting witnesses of a will (executed ten days before death, by a person of eighty-five, in weak bodily health,) are confirmed as to capacity, volition, and free agency, by adverse witnesses, and the deceased's affections and recognitions,—the general character of the drawer (an attorney employed by the deceased for many years), and slight discrepancies in the evidence of the factum, are not material. A will in such a case pronounced for; and the opposer, who had pleaded incapacity, conspiracy, fraud, and circumvention, condemned in the costs incurred since the giving in of his allegation. Bird v. Bird, 2 Hag. Ec. 142.

Where there is a general competency to devise, the Court will not, but upon strong evidence of fraud or coercion, grant a new trial.

Where the parol evidence is of a very contradictory nature, it is safer to judge by collateral facts, where they are sufficiently strong, as to the competency of a party to make a will.

A long and varied correspondence, carried on by and with the testator for a series of years, and the execution of various deeds by him, and of others to him, involving property to a large amount, is sufficient to shew his general competency to dispose of his property. Wright v. Tatham, 9 Law J. Chanc. 265.

Where the execution of a codicil was clandestinely, and without previous instructions, obtained from a testator of eighty, only one month before his death, by the son, the person solely benefited, and his associates, the disposition being contrary to the repeated former acts of the deceased, the clearest proof of capacity and free agency is necessary. Codicil pronounced against, and the son condemned in costs. Mackenzie v. Handasyde, 2 Hag. Ec. 211.

(c) Attestation.

The testator, in his own handwriting, made and executed a devise of his real estates. He afterwards requested two persons to sign their names to it, which they did in his presence, but they did not see the signature of the testator, nor did he inform them that the paper they subscribed was his will. Subsequently this paper was subscribed by a third witness, in the presence of the testator, who informed this last-mentioned person that the paper in question was his will. Above the signatures of the witnesses there appeared, in the handwriting of the testator, these words—"In the presence of us, as witnesses thereto:"—Held, that this was a sufficient attestation and subscription of the will within the Statute of Frauds. The Trustees of the British Museum v. White, 8 Law J. C.P. 73, s. c. 6 Bing. 310, s. c. 3 M. & P. 689.

Will of real estate, wholly a testator's writing, signed by him, but not in the presence of the witnesses, nor did they see his signature; nor did the witnesses sign in each other's presence, but one separately at one time, and two together at another time:—Held valid. Wright v. Wright, 9 Law J. C.P. 172, s. c. 7 Bing. 457, s. c. 5 M. & P. 316.

Doctrine of presumption as to the attestation of wills in the presence of the testator.

After two verdicts in favour of the due execution of a will, a third trial of an issue was directed, though the question was one, not of direct evidence, but of inference and presumption from probabilities. The Earl of Winchilsea v. Wauchope, 7 Law J. Chanc. 84, s. c. 3 Russ. 446.

(B) Probate.

(e) Granting.

A person, residing in one diocese, went on business into another, having with him on that occasion property exceeding 5*l.* in value. He there met with an accident, and died in consequence of it. He had no property in the latter diocese, except that which he had with him for the purpose of the journey:—Held, that a probate of his will, granted by the bishop of the diocese in which he resided, and in which his property lay, was sufficient, he having died in itinere; and the canon 9, 2 James 1, laying down, that when a man dies on a journey, the goods which are with him at the time of his death, are not bona notabilia. Doe d. Allen v. Ovens, 9 Law J. K.B. 223, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 423.

In decreeing probate, the Court is usually regulated by the grant of the Court of Probate, where the party was domiciled; i. e. the competent jurisdiction—in this instance the Court of Supreme Judicature at Fort William, Bengal. Larpent v. Sindry, 1 Hag. Ec. 382.

Probate of the will of a married woman, a native of and domiciled in Spain, granted according to the law of Spain, to one of her sons as executor, on affidavits as to the law of Spain, and the identity of the parties. In the goods of Donna Maria de Vera Maraver, 1 Hag. Ec. 498.

The will of a party who died in Scotland, and whose property within the province of Canterbury, was in the diocese of London (some of it in the funds), having been proved in the Consistory Court of London, and the deputy registrar of that court having appeared under protest to a monition to transmit such will, the Court will not overrule the protest, holding a prerogative probate unnecessary, as the Archbishop and Bishop of London have, by practice, a concurrent jurisdiction in such cases: it will, however, in aid of justice, grant an additional probate, if required, limited to the property in the funds. Scarth v. Bishop of London, 1 Hag. Ec. 626.

Semble—That a diocesan probate can give no authority, nor continue any privity, as to a satisfied term in another diocese. In the goods of Mary Powell, 3 Hag. Ec. 195.

Probate may be granted in common form of a will written entirely in pencil, by the deceased, who a few days before death, declared she wished it to operate, unless altered. In the goods of Armine Anne Dyer, 1 Hag. Ec. 219.

The widow having, after the testator's death, caused his will to be destroyed, probate of the draft of such will granted, and the widow condemned in the whole costs of the suit. Martin v. Larking, 1 Hag. Ec. 244.

The law presumes primâ facie, 1st, that if a paper (a will) be left at a party's house, it comes into his possession; 2ndly, that if it be thus traced into his possession, and be not forthcoming at his death, he destroyed it. A draft will being propounded under these circumstances, the Court pronounced the deceased was, as far as appeared, dead intestate, and condemned the party setting up the paper in costs. Lillie v. Lillie, 3 Hag. Ec. 184.

A draft of a will propounded, without setting forth how the executed will was lost, pronounced against. Lillie v. Lillie, 3 Hag. Ec. 189.

The deceased, supposing his will appointing his wife sole executrix, and universal legatee for life, to be lost, made in Peru a nuncupative will, (not in conformity with the Statute of Frauds,) with a general revocatory clause, and appointing two executors and his wife universal legatee absolutely. The executors renounced, and she took probate of that will in Peru. The former will being found (of which fact he was ignorant at the time of his death), probate thereof, at the wife's prayer, granted to her. In the goods of Richard Moresby, 1 Hag. Ec. 378.

A testator, while at variance with his relations, having made a will in favour of a stranger in blood, being afterwards reconciled to his family, and his full capacity down to his death being admitted; a subsequent will in favour of his family, (produced shortly after his death from the custody of the drawer, who took nothing under it, nor was acquainted with those benefited by it, the factum whereof, though occurring in secret, and in a strange manner, was proved by the drawer and two unimpeached witnesses,) pronounced for; and the executor of the former will condemned in 20*l.* nomine expensarum, he having directly alleged the second will to be a forgery, but succeeded in shewing the drawer to be of doubtful character. Young v. Brown, 1 Hag. Ec. 557.

If there is proof either, in the paper itself, or from clear evidence dehors, 1st, that the writer intended to convey the benefits by it which will be conveyed if the paper be considered testamentary; 2ndly, that death was the event to give it effect, an instrument, whatever be its form, may be admitted to probate. The King's Proctor v. Daines, 3 Hag. Ec. 221.

Probate granted to a deed, testamentary in its whole purport and effect, and not to operate till after death. In the goods of Joseph Knight, 2 Hag. Ec. 554.

Probate cannot be granted of a paper having nothing to give testamentary character, nor intended to operate upon the death of the writer, but to effect a gift inter vivos. Glynn v. Oglander, 2 Hag. Ec. 428.

When a paper is not intended as a will, but as an instrument of a different nature, if it cannot operate in the latter, it may in the former character, for the form does not affect its title to probate, provided it is to carry into effect the intention of the deceased after death. Masterman v. Maberly, 2 Hag. Ec. 247.

The Court will not (on affidavits of capacity and final intention and on consent,) decree probate in he common form of a paper written in extremis, and confused, where the interest of minors and of an infant is affected. In the goods of Hugh Ross, 1 Hag. Ec. 471.

Where minors are concerned, probate in common form cannot be granted of a mere memorandum of doubtful construction, on affidavits shewing that the deceased intended to increase the benefit to certain legatees under a formal will, and was prevented by death from giving his solicitor instructions to that effect. In the goods of James Gibbs, 1 Hag. Ec. 376.

A paper commencing "Memorandum of my intended will," but dispositive in terms, signed, and intended to operate if no more formal will was made, is, unless revoked, entitled to probate. Neither instructions, nor a will drawn up therefrom (which, though in the deceased's possession for several months, was not executed nor shewn to be finally determined on), will, either as entitled to probate, or as letting in an intestacy, revoke such a paper. Barwick v. Mullins, 2 Hag. Ec. 225.

Papers, on the face of them unfinished, with no circumstances to account for such their state, are presumed to be abandoned, and consequently, are not entitled to probate. Cundy v. Medley, 1 Hag. Ec. 140.

In order to the grant of probate in common form of an unfinished paper, there must be, 1st, affidavits, stating such a case as, if proved by depositions, would establish the paper; and, 2ndly, consent, implied or express, from all parties interested. In the goods of James Thomas, 1 Hag. Ec. 695.

When a paper is unfinished, the presumption of law is strong against it, especially when it is to alter an executed instrument; still more when to revoke a disposition of the bulk of the property to the deceased's own family, and transfer it to a stranger. Reay v. Cowcher, 2 Hag. Ec. 254.

The Court will not grant probate in common form of a paper formally drawn up, but unexecuted, and which the deceased clearly intended to alter, nor of a subsequent paper, in the deceased's hand-writing, but undated, unsigned, and apparently unfinished, and with nothing to ascertain that it was written shortly before the death, or that it embodied the final intentions of the deceased, the deceased being an illegitimate spinster, and the Crown opposing the grant. In the goods of Elizabeth Robinson, 1 Hag. Ec. 643.

Without the consent or citation of the next of kin, the Court will not, on motion supported by affidavit of the drawer, (the executor and a legatee) grant probate of the will unsigned, dated some years before, and with an attestation clause and no witnesses, and a recent codicil with a space between the last clause and signature. In the goods of Elizabeth Adams, 3 Hag. Ec. 258.

Written and verbal instructions being given, from which a will was prepared, the execution of which was prevented by unforeseen circumstances, and by death; the Court, the widow consenting, will grant probate of the will so prepared, (though never seen by, nor read over to the deceased,) in preference to granting administration with the instructions annexed, to the widow; the deceased's intention being clearly to secure the interests of his children by the interposition of executors. In the goods of Archibald Bathgate, 1 Hag. Ec. 67.

Probate in common form, of two papers (one unfinished), granted on a proxy of consent and on affidavits accounting for their state, and shewing that the deceased intended them to operate. In the goods of Charles Broderip, 1 Hag. Ec. 485.

Execution being only prevented by death, the Court will decree probate in common form on a proxy of consent from all in esse interested, but those not in esse will not be bound by the grant. In the goods of James Taylor, 1 Hag. Ec. 641.

A paper having an attestation clause in the plural number, but only one witness and the date of the year written on an erasure, (on affidavit of the executor to a recognition, and from the attesting witness to the time and intention of executing,) probate of such paper, in common form, decreed, though one of four persons, entitled in distribution, refused to consent, but had entered no caveat. In the goods of Thomas Vanhagen, 1 Hag. Ec. 478.

Probate in common form, decreed of a paper with an attestation clause in the plural number, and only one witness, on affidavit of an implied recognition. In the goods of George Winkfield Sparrow, 1 Hag. Ec. 479.

A paper, written by the deceased herself, at least three months before her death, with a blank for the date, an attestation clause—but no witnesses, and unsigned, with other evidence to shew it unfinished; and declarations that she intended to "settle her will in a few days," is not entitled to probate, either as intended to operate in its actual state, or on the ground that execution was prevented by her sudden death the day after such declaration. Bragge v. Dyer, 3 Hag. Ec. 207.

An engrossed copy of a will having been read over to, and approved by, the deceased who intended to execute it shortly afterwards, but was prevented by death; probate in common form granted, (with consent of the only person interested under an intestacy,) of one of the originally engrossed sheets, and of two fairly copied sheets substituted for, and, except as to some clerical errors, not affecting the disposition, corresponding with the sheets approved by the deceased. In the goods of Samuel Harvey, 1 Hag. Ec. 575.

Probate will not be granted to a paper never seen by, nor read over, but only explained to the deceased, who died suddenly, before he saw the solicitor; the answers of the executor (speaking against his own interest,) being the only evidence of instructions, which were verbally conveyed by him to the solicitor, especially when the intentions of the deceased, appeared fluctuating, and when there was a previous paper in his handwriting, clearly entitled to probate. Maclue v. Ewing and Reid, 1 Hag. Ec. 317.

Where a testator executed a will and two codicils, and afterwards had a new will and certain bonds prepared, which were in conjunction, to dispose of his property on the same principle as his former will, and died when preparing to sign the new will; first, the execution being thus finally determined on and prevented, the new will is entitled to probate; and, secondly, the new will being never intended to operate independent of the bonds, the Court is bound, in order to carry his intentions most nearly into effect, to grant probate of the new will, and of the unexecuted bonds, as together containing his will, and to revoke a probate of the former papers. Masterman v. Maberley, 2 Hag. Ec. 235.

On the testator's death, an alteration appearing in a will, which, during his lifetime, was in the custody of the writer (one of the executors), who swore such alteration was made with the testator's concurrence, but gave no further explanation, and declined to propound the will so altered,—the Court will assign the executors to take out probate of the will in its original state, the residuary legatees, on being personally cited to propound the will, or to shew cause, &c., not appearing. Parker v. Hickmott, 2 Hag. Ec. 211.

When pencil alterations are inferred to be deliberative, probate, in common form, will be granted of the paper, without such alterations; the only party materially injured by such grant having executed a proxy of consent. In the goods of John Howe, 1 Hag. Ec. 212.

The primâ facie presumption is, that pencil alterations are deliberative, and those in ink final: when they are of both kinds in the same instrument, the presumption is strengthened. A doubt whether a testator intended a particular bequest to form part of his will, and to take effect, will not vitiate the whole will, especially if a strong disinclination to die intestate be sworn. Hawkes v. Hawkes, 1 Hag. Ec. 321.

The presumption of law, that pencil alterations are deliberative, may be strengthened by circumstances; such as that the paper was originally carefully drawn up, and shews the deceased to have been a very precise man, while the alterations are incomplete and inaccurate, rendering the sense imperfect and the meaning doubtful. Edwards v. Astley, 1 Hag. Ec. 490.

Ink alterations in a will being carefully made and not improbably final, the Court will not, on the non-appearance after personal service, of executors appointed, and of minor legatees materially benefited, thereby grant probate, in common form, of the paper as originally executed.

Alterations in ink, (in the margin and body of a duplicate will,) carefully made and conformable to long entertained and lately expressed intentions—held, to contain the testator's final intentions, and entitled to probate. Ravenscroft v. Hunter, 2 Hag. Ec. 65—68.

The presumption being, that a will, when executed, contains the deceased's final intentions, to authorize an alteration on the ground of mistake, there must be, first, an ambiguity in the paper; secondly, clear proof of the omission. Allegation, pleading omissa, rejected. Shadbolt v. Waugh, 3 Hag. Ec. 570.

The deceased having between instructions for, and the execution of, his will, delivered to his solicitor a letter of testamentary import to be put with his will; probate thereof decreed, as, together with the formal instrument, containing the last will of the deceased. In the goods of John Dunn, 1 Hag. Ec. 488.

Of wills of the same date, that in the testatrix's possession, and to which she last added codicils, is entitled to probate, together with the codicils found therewith, and unrevoked codicils found with the other will. In the goods of Elizabeth Crosley, 2 Hag. Ec. 80.

The will and first two codicils of a British born subject, resident and naturalized in the Portuguese dominions, (the will disposing of effects partly in Portugal and partly in England,) executed and purporting to be executed according to the laws of Portugal, but inferring, that he considered himself an Englishman, admitted to probate; but two later codicils—fully proved as to capacity and intention, disposing solely of money in the British funds, attested by three witnesses, but not executed, nor purporting to be executed, according to the law of Portugal—refused probate by the delegates, reversing a sentence of the prerogative. Stanley v. Bernes, 3 Hag. Ec. 373.

A person dying in Scotland, having by his will directed that the legatees should appoint two persons to execute his testamentary bequests, probate granted to the nominees as executors. In the goods of William Cringan, 1 Hag. Ec. 548.

A testator having appointed two executors, and provided that, on the death of either of them, two others should be substituted: on the death of the original executor, who had proved the will, and on a proxy of consent from the other, probate will be granted to one of the substituted executors, it appearing to have been the testator's intentions that the substitution should take place on the death of either of the original executors, whether happening in the testator's lifetime or afterwards. In the goods of the Rev. Sir John Lighton, Bart., 1 Hag. Ec. 235.

Probate in common form, of a paper with an attestation clause, and no witness, decreed to the only person entitled under an intestacy, on affidavit of recognitions of it, as his will by the deceased. In the goods of William Holden Jerram, 1 Hag. Ec. 550.

Probate (as of a codicil) refused to a paper as not testamentary, though found in the same envelope as the will and a codicil, and explanatory to the executors of the nature and value of, and most advantageous mode of managing the deceased's property, but having no dispositive nor revocative effect. Taylor v. D'Egville and Bebb, 3 Hag. Ec. 202.

(b) Revalling.

A married woman living apart from her husband, being joined in the probate of a will (authorizing her "to act as executrix, in all respects, without her husband,") but not having intermeddled: the Court, on the Bank refusing to transfer stock without the husband, will revoke such probate, and grant it to the remaining executors. Mack v. Curtis, 1 Hag. Ec. 129.

Probate of a will of a feme covert (supposed at the time of the grant to have been sole,) revoked; and administration granted to her next of kin, the husband having died after her. The administration of a feme covert's goods left unadministered by the husband, having been held, in several cases, to belong, under the 31 Edw. 3. s. 1. c. 11, and 21 Hen. 8. c. 5, to the next of kin of the wife at the time of her death, though the right to the property is in the representatives of the husband. In the goods of Mary Alicia Gill, 1 Hag. Ec. 341.

Where capacity and volition are established, a party suing in formâ pauperis, who, after a long acquiescence, calls probate in a will, on a suggestion of incapacity, fraud, and circumvention, may be condemned in costs; and the taxation be suspended. Wagner v. Mears, 2 Hag. Ec. 524.

(c) Duty.

On proving a will, the executor need not, in the amount for which probate duty is paid, include debts due to the testator, which are either desperate or doubtful; and the executor has a right to exercise his judgment fairly and bonâ fide, whether a debt is doubtful or bad. Moses v. Chafter, 4 C. & P. 524. [Tenterden]

Probate duty is not payable upon such part of the assets of an English testator dying in this country as consists of property in a foreign country at his decease, although it be afterwards brought into and administered in this country by the executors; it not being the administration of the assets, but the local situation of those assets at the death of the testator, which renders the probate duty payable. Attorney General v. Dimond, 9 Law J. Exch. 90, s. c. 1 C. & J. 356, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 243.

(C) Proof.

Parol evidence of declarations made by a testator in his last illness, tending to impeach his will, is not admissible.

Where imputations were cast upon the conduct of the attorney who prepared a will, and who was one of the attesting witnesses, tending to charge him with fraud in the execution of it—the Court held, that witnesses might be called to prove his general good character. Provis and Rowe, demandants; Reed, tenant, 7 Law J. C.P. 163, s. c. 5 Bing. 435, 3 M. & P. 4.

In the case of a bill filed by an heir-at-law to set aside a will, on the ground of incompetency, the Court directed an issue devisavit vel non, to try the validity of the will:—Held, that it is no ground for a new trial, that the devisee did not call all the subscribing witnesses. Wright v. Tatham, 9 Law J. Chanc. 265.

(b) In the Ecclesiastical Court.

A next of kin, contesting a will propounded by an executor, may take out a decree citing all persons interested under the will, "to see proceedings." Colvin v. Fraser, 1 Hag. Ec. 107.

Where a testamentary paper is asserted to have existed since the death of the alleged testatrix, and to have been subsequently destroyed, these allegations must be proved by the clearest and most stringent evidence. Huble v. Clark, 1 Hag. Ec. 115.

A testamentary instrument may be established against the evidence of all the subscribing witnesses; but such a case would require to be supported by the whole res gestæ, by strong probability arising from the conduct of all parties, and by the improbability of the practice of fraud, circumvention, or undue influence. Mackensie v. Handasyde, 2 Hag. Ec. 219.

A legatee, whose legacy had been paid him, having been examined without releasing, allowed to be re-produced on his and the executor's giving mutual releases, and on the latter depositing in the registry, to abide the issue, a sum sufficient to cover the legacy. Cooper v. Derrienuis, 1 Hag. Ec. 482.

Mere evidence of execution of a will and codicil, by a person of weak and inert mind, appointing his attorney and agent sole executor, and almost universal legatee of a large property, is insufficient without proof of instructions by the deceased; instructions for the will being given to the solicitor, who prepared and attested it, by and in the handwriting of the executor's father (also the deceased's co-agent and attorney); the codicil being prepared exclusively for his own benefit by the executor, in whose house the deceased was living, apart from his family; and other circumstances strongly inferring fraud and circumvention. Ingram v. Wyatt, 1 Hag. Ec. 384.

In a case of perfectly sound mind, and free from any suspicion of imposition, evidence of bare execution is sufficient; but where the deceased's attorney is the drawer of the will, and the person principally benefited, the jealousy of the Court is excited, and demands more than proof of bare execution. Wheeler v. Alderson, 3 Hag. Ec. 587.

In courts of probate, it is almost a settled principle not to pronounce for disputed papers, on evidence of handwriting alone.

Evidence to the genuineness, not of a mere signature, but of a holograph of some length, is more cogent and weighty than evidence of a contrary tendency. Constable v. Steibel and Emanuel, 1 Hag. Ec. 60, 61.

The Court will not pronounce for a paper, on the evidence of handwriting alone; but that proof, joined with circumstances of probability, is sufficient. Headington v. Holloway, 3 Hag. Ec. 280.

Dissimilitude of handwriting is very weak and deceptive evidence, and of slight weight only against evidence of similitude; but against positive evidence of witnesses attesting and depositing to a signature, as actually made in their presence, it can scarcely have any effect. Young v. Brown, 1 Hag. Ec. 569.

In a case pregnant with appearances of fraud, and resting for support on the attesting witnesses alone, these witnesses must be beyond suspicion; if at all shaken in credit, no part of their evidence can be relied on. Bridges v. King, 1 Hag. Ec. 288.

Where a will is impeached on the ground of fraud, the parties who seek to establish the will must remove or explain, and so neutralize the facts out of which the suspicion arose.

The relation of client and attorney, between a testator and the party benefited by his will, excites suspicion. Wyatt v. Ingram, 3 Hag. Ec. 468.

To entitle an unfinished paper to proof, it is necessary, first, to connect it most clearly with the deceased; secondly, to shew fixed and final intention; thirdly, completion prevented. Jameson v. Cooke, 1 Hag. Ec. 82.

Extrinsic evidence is necessary to make an unfinished paper operative, nor will a proxy of consent from all entitled in distribution, or otherwise, justify the Court in granting probate to such an instrument, unless the affidavits set forth facts, which, if proved in solemn form of law, would sustain a disputed paper. In the goods of Aaron Hurrill, 1 Hag. Ec. 252.

A paper manifestly unfinished and imperfect, cannot be proved on mere affidavits of finding, handwriting, and the non-existence of any other testamentary paper. In the goods of Elizabeth Wenlock, 1 Hag. Ec. 551.

An allegation repropounding two unfinished papers rejected, the facts not being sufficient to rebut the adverse presumption of law; and the administrator who appeared under protest dismissed with costs.

When an instrument is unfinished, its state must be accounted for, either by shewing completion prevented, or that the deceased, abandoning his intention of finishing it, meant it to operate in that form without any further act. Wood v. Medley, 1 Hag. Ec. 661—71.

The indorsement "Heads of Will," on a paper fairly written, signed and dated, lets in parol evidence of intention; but the primâ facie inference rather is, that such paper was intended to operate, if no more formal instrument were drawn up. An allegation propounding such a paper, with alterations made from time to time, adapting it to the deceased's circumstances, and pleading facts inferring adherence, admitted to proof; but on the parol evidence, the paper pronounced against. Mitchell v. Mitchell, 2 Hag. Ec. 74.

The Court of Probate does not admit parol evidence, to shew an error in a testamentary paper, unless there be, 1st, some ambiguity on the face of the instrument; 2ndly, the means of obtaining clear and indisputable proof of the deceased's intention. Harrison v. Stone, 2 Hag. Ec. 538.

In the Court of Probate an ambiguity on the face of a paper, as to the factum, e. g. whether a revocatory clause was intended to operate as a general or only as a partial revocation, lets in parol evidence. Draper v. Hitch, 1 Hag. Ec. 677.

In order to the admission of parol evidence in a Court of Probate, to explain an ambiguity upon the factum of an instrument, the ambiguity must be on the face of the paper; and the facts to be proved must completely remove that ambiguity. Draper v. Hitch, 1 Hag. Ec. 678.

The party setting up, as a will, a paper not on its face testamentary, must shew testamentary intention; and as the law in such cases lends its aid only to effect intention, the question is, whether such a paper, if treated as testamentary, will in truth give effect to the deceased's intention, though the Court cannot look at the effect of an instrument clearly testamentary on its face. The King's Proctor v. Daines, 3 Hag. Ec. 218.

Declarations of testamentary intentions, if unaccompanied by any immediate acts, are always looked upon with great caution, and their weight depends upon all circumstances accompanying and connected with them. Mynn v. Robinson, 2 Hag. Ec. 187.

(D) Revocation.

[Hodges v. Green, 4 Russ. 28, Dig. Law J. 556. Kirke v. Kirke, 4 Russ. 435, Dig. Law J. 557.]

A will found in the deceased's repositories with the seal cut off, is to be presumed to be cancelled by himself, animo cancellandi, and can only be revived by some further act. Costs out of the estate. Administration to the widow refused. Lambell v. Lambell, 3 Hag. Ec. 568.

An executor having, in pencil, altered a will (by the direction of the testator, who approved of it when so altered,) and then cancelled it, only in order that another might be drawn up, the preparation of which will was prevented by the death of the deceased; probate of the cancelled will, in its original state, will be granted, on a proxy of consent being given by all the persons interested. In the goods of William Appelbee, 1 Hag. Ec. 143.

Cancellation of one duplicate a cancellation of both. In deceased's custody, must be presumed to be cancelled by deceased. Lillie v. Lillie, 3 Hag. Ec. 191.

Testatrix having (without destroying the seal or signature,) partially mutilated a duplicate will, but retained in her own possession, and carefully preserved entire the other duplicate: such mutilation is neither a total nor a partial revocation. On evidence of uninterrupted affection for the parties benefited, will pronounced for. Costs out of the estate. Roberts v. Round, 3 Hag. Ec. 548.

A will being executed in duplicate, one part of which was proved to have been in, and was never traced out of, the deceased's possession, and was not found at his death, the primâ facie presumptions are, first, that the testator destroyed the part in his own possession; and second, if the first be not repelled, that he intended thereby to revoke the duplicate not in his possession. The deceased pronounced dead intestate. Colvin v. Fraser, 2 Hag. Ec. 266.

A married woman having, under a certain settlement, and also under her mother's codicil, made a will; and under her mother's codicil specifically, and under "all and every other power," &c. generally, made a second will with a general revocatory clause:—the Court of Probate will grant a general administration with the latter will annexed, but not pronounce against the former will, leaving it to the Court of Construction to decide, whether the former will is thereby revoked. Draper v. Hitch, 1 Hag. Ec. 674.

Deceased having, under a trust-deed, power to dispose of certain effects, by a will attested by two witnesses, such a will is revoked by a subsequent will, containing an express revocatory clause, duly executed, but attested by only one witness; the disposition intended by the deceased being thereby completely effected. Richardson v. Berry, 3 Hag. Ec. 249.

Marriage and birth of issue, is not an absolute, but a presumptive revocation of a prior will, the law presuming an intention to revoke, arising from a change of condition and new obligations; if such change of condition and new obligations are provided for, and the intention to revoke cannot be presumed, the revocation does not take place. Therefore, a will, in favour of the issue of a former marriage, is not revoked by a subsequent marriage and birth of issue, such marriage and issue having been provided for by settlement. Talbot v. Talbot, 1 Hag. Ec. 705.

A second marriage, and the birth of issue, is not a revocation of a will made in favour of the children of a former marriage and an illegitimate child, where the second wife has some real property settled on her and her issue, under her father's will, and where the deceased had possession and full knowledge of the existence of such will. Johnson v. Wells, 2 Hag. Ec. 561.

A man devises freehold and copyhold lands, and surrenders the copyholds to the use of his will: afterwards, by a settlement made previous to his marriage, he conveys the freeholds to trustees and their heirs to the use of him, the husband, for life; and, after his death, to the intent that his wife may have a yearly rent-charge during her life, with remainder to the husband and his heirs; and he further covenanted to surrender the copyholds to the uses of the settlement:—Held, that the devise of the freeholds was revoked by the settlement: that the devise of the copyholds was not revoked by the covenant to surrender them to the uses of the settlement. Vawser v. Jeffery, 3 Russ. 479, s. c. 7 Law J. Chanc. 38.

The will of a feme covert, made during marriage, under a settlement, is not revoked by her surviving the husband. Morwan v. Thompson, 3 Hag. Ec. 239.

A and B, being tenants in common of certain premises, made partition by lease and release; and a satisfied mortgage term, which existed in B's undivided moiety, was assigned to a trustee on trust, as to the premises allotted to A, to attend the inheritance:—Held, that a prior will of A was not revoked by these transactions. Barton v. Croxall, 7 Law J. Chanc. 188, s. c. 1 Tam. 164.

A testator, in the case of an event which happened after his death, directed a freehold estate to be sold, and the produce applied upon the trusts, intents, and purposes afterwards expressed in his will, as to his residuary personal estate: by a codicil he revoked the gift in his will, of his residuary personal estate, and made a new disposition of it. The produce of the freehold estate is not thereby affected, but passes upon the trusts, intents and purposes, which were expressed in the will, as to the residuary personal estate. Francis v. Collier, 4 Russ. 331.

(E) Revival and Republication.

The destruction of a latter will revives a former will nearly of the same import; the motive, on which the variation was made, having ceased to operate; and reconciliation to, and declarations in favour of, the universal legatee under the former will, just previous to death, being shewn; such revival being always a question of intention, and admitting of parol evidence.

It is not settled, whether the principle of law is, that on the revocation of a latter will, a former will is presumed to revive, or not. Kirkcudbright v. Kirkcudbright, 1 Hag. Ec. 325, 6.

A widow having, after the death of her husband, delivered a will made during coverture, to her executor, for safe custody, such delivery, coupled with other recognitions, amounts, in a Court of Probate, to a republication, rendering it a new will of which the executors are entitled to a general probate.

A codicil duly attested by three witnesses, referring to the will, and desired by the testator to be taken as part of his will, passes freehold property, acquired between the publication of the will and that of the codicil; unless an intention to the contrary appear.

A testator by his will devised the residue to his wife in fee. He afterwards purchased freehold property, and made a conveyance of part to uses which rendered the conveyance void under the Statute of Mortmain. Subsequently, by a codicil, he gave a life interest to his wife in the whole of the after-purchased property; with remainder to other persons:—Held, that no intention appeared against passing the subsequently-acquired property; and consequently, that the part which, by reason of the void conveyance, fell into the residue, passed to the wife. Goodtitle d. David v. Williams, 8 Law J. K.B. 326, s. c. 10 B. & C. 893.

A testator, by his will, specifically devises an estate to his wife, and, after certain bequests, he gave and devised to her all other his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, not thereinbefore otherwise disposed of. By a codicil, after reciting the devises to his wife, he, in case his wife should die before him, devised all his said estates to trustees upon certain trusts:—Held, that the will was not republished by the codicil, so as to pass estates purchased between the date of the will and the codicil. Smith v. Dermer, 3 Y. & J. 278.

(F) Codicils.

Handwriting and finding are sufficient to support a codicil confirming a legacy under a will, which codicil, out of the custody of, and was propounded by, the person solely benefited under it, who had been sworn executor of the will and one codicil, four months before producing this paper, and the validity of whose legacy under the will was, at the time, a question depending in the Court of Chancery. Constable v. Steibel, 1 Hag. Ec. 56.

The presumption is, that a codicil, disposing of realty as well as personalty, unattested, only signed by initials, and with many interlineations, is unfinished and preparatory; and then it must be shewn, that the deceased thought it would operate in its actual form, or was prevented by a sufficient cause from finishing it. Reay v. Cowcher, 2 Hag. Ec. 249.

A codicil produced under mysterious circumstances, eighteen months after the deceased's death, there being no evidence of finding, nor of anything directly connecting it with the deceased, cannot be established on evidence of handwriting alone, particularly when such evidence is conflicting, and when other circumstances raise a suspicion of the genuineness of the instrument. Crisp v. Walpole, 2 Hag. Ec. 531.

A testator having, ten years before his death, when in perfect health, executed a will, and subsequently a codicil, conformable to his ascertained affections, and two and a half years before his death, after a paralytic stroke, producing at least great bodily infirmity, having executed a second codicil, materially departing from those instruments, and six months before his death, a third codicil, revoking the second, and reverting to the former disposition; probate of the will, first and third codicils granted—there being no satisfactory proof of a change of his affections, and the evidence of volition and capacity being at least as strong in support of the third, as of the second codicil. King v. Farley, 1 Hag. Ec. 502.

(G) Construction.

[Croker v. Martin, 1 Dow. & Cl. A.C. 15; Dig. Law J. 561.]

Where it is a question of construction of the meaning of the will, to be determined by intention of the testator, recourse must be had to the general tenor of the whole will. Heneage v. Lord Andover, 10 Price, 316.

Whether the expression in a will, "in case of death," refers to a death in the lifetime of the testatrix, or to a death at any time, depends upon the context. Tilson v. Jones, Tilson v. Thornton, 1 Russ. & M. 553.

The words "personal representatives," are to be understood in the ordinary sense of executors and administrators, unless controuled by the context of the will. Saberton v. Sheels, 1 Russ. & M. 587, s. c. 1 Tam. 383.

In order to exonerate the personal estate from the payment of debts, there must appear upon the whole will a manifest intention to that effect. Driver v. Ferrand, 1 Russ. & M. 681.

Parol evidence, when admitted relative to a will, is restrained to what the testator's intention was at the time of making the will. Whitaker v. Tatham, 9 Law J. C.P. 189, s. c. 7 Bing. 628, s. c. 5 M. & P. 628.

Where declarations to testator's solicitor, at the time of giving instructions for making a will, admissible in evidence. Guillebaud v. Mears, 7 Law J. Chanc. 136.

A book in the testator's handwriting, not attested so as to pass real estate, expressed to be the book referred to in his will, not admissible in explanation or aid of the will, although proved in the Ecclesiastical Court. Wilkinson v. Adam, 12 Price, 470.

Collateral circumstances relating to the ages of the several devisees, and to their being married or unmarried, admissible in evidence, for the purpose of ascertaining the construction of a will. Lowe v. Lord Huntingtower, 4 Russ. 532, n.

Under the description "children" in a will, evidence may be received, to shew that the testatrix knew there were only two such children, and that one of them was illegitimate; and, the parent being dead at the date of the will, that no other persons could answer the description of children:—Held, therefore that they took as personæ designatæ. Gill v. Shelley, 2 Law J. Chanc. 68.

A statuary bequeathed articles used in his business by their technical names, some of which were very obscurely written. Reference directed, to ascertain what was meant, the Master taking to his assistance persons skilled in writing, and acquainted with articles used by statuaries. Goblet v. Beechey, 3 Sim. 24.

J D having two sons, one of whom, T D, cohabited with a woman called Anne Robinson, in the year 1819, threatened to disinherit him, unless he would break off the connexion; whereupon T D drew up and signed a paper, in the words following: "I hereby solemnly declare, and with due awe and reverence appeal to the great searcher of all hearts, for the truth and sincerity of this declaration, that I am not married, or in any way contracted to the woman I have so long and so imprudently cohabited with, known heretofore by the name of Anne Robinson; and that from this moment to the end of my existence, I will have no kind of communication with her, directly or indirectly; and I am satisfied to be no longer considered by my father as his son, and in the estimation of the world not to have any further claim to that title, than while I strictly adhere to this declaration in the fullest sense, and to the true spirit and meaning of it: and from the moment I deviate from it in any degree, may I be renounced by him and by all. And I hereby call on such trustees and executors as my father may appoint to carry into effect the final distribution of his property, to withhold from me all and every part of whatever bequest he may think proper to make in my favour, and not to consider me as the object he had in view, whenever I cease to support this solemn declaration. Given under my hand, this 15th day of August 1819. (Signed) Thomas St. John Dillon."

Anne Robinson also signed a declaration in the words following: "I do hereby solemnly declare that I am not married, or in any way connected to the above-named Thomas Dillon; and I do solemnly and sincerely promise, that I will not from henceforth have any connexion, communication, intercourse, or correspondence whatever with him, directly or indirectly. Given under my hand, this 5th day of August 1819. (Signed) Ann Robinson." The declarations were attested by a witness, who proved that they were placed in the hands of J D.

J D, by his will, dated November 1819, devised and bequeathed all his property, upon trust, to invest the produce in the public funds or securities, as therein mentioned, and out of the interest thereof, after paying a yearly allowance to his wife, Catherine Dillon, for her life, "upon trust, to permit and suffer my eldest son, Thomas St. John Dillon, to have, receive, and take out of the interest of such stock securities that will remain after payment of said annuity to my said wife, one moiety of such interest to be paid to him by half-yearly payments, whilst he strictly adheres to the solemn engagement he has entered into, never to associate with, or have any further knowledge of Anne Robinson, and which engagement signed by him, I have put into the hands of my said trustees and executors, to be safely kept, so that it may be forthcoming when necessary; and as my said son Thomas has expressed his opinion to me, at present, that, to prevent the possibility of the continuance or renewal of such a connexion, it is necessary for him to absent himself from this country for some length of time, and that he is determined to do so as soon as he conveniently can after my decease; this restriction is not to be considered in full force, or to be acted upon until after his departure for such purpose, provided it be within three months after my decease; and I have allowed this latitude, least she should, while he continued in Ireland, intrude herself on him, and by such another act cause a forfeiture of his claims under this my will; and should it fully appear, that at any time after the said period, he may happen to break through this engagement, then all benefit that it was intended he should derive under this will, shall cease and be done away, and the property so bequeathed to him shall go as hereinafter directed, as in case of his dying unmarried and without lawful issue; and upon further trust to permit and suffer my younger son, James Dillon, to have, receive, and take the remaining moiety of the said interest of the said stocks or securities, to be paid to him, or to his order legally authorised to receive the same, by half-yearly payments; and on this further trust, to give, pay, or cause to be paid to my said sons, Thomas St. John Dillon and James Dillon, on their respective days of marriage, such marriage to be with the consent of my said trustees d of my executors, or the majority of them, the ll amount of the moiety to each of the monies so nded or secured; and in case either of them marry ithout such consent, or should die without having een married with such consent, then the interest f the moiety to which the person so marrying or ying was entitled, under this my will, to go to the ther or surviving brother during his life, and after is death the principal sum to go to his lawful issue, ' any, in such manner, proportion, and under such estrictions, and at such periods as he, by will or eed may direct or appoint; and in case both of ay said sons should so die unmarried, and without aving lawful issue," then he gave the interest of he estate for life to certain relations, and finally to ertain charitable institutions. The will concluded n these words: "And I do hereby appoint my said rustees and executors to be the sole judges of the nture conduct of my said sons; and they, my said rustees and executors, and they only, are to decide n what may amount to a forfeiture of the benefits to e derived under this my will."

In 1821, T D married Anne Robinson, having aked and obtained the consent of the trustees to a marriage with a person represented by him to be Mary Anne Madden. One of the trustees had iven a general consent to the marriage, but the najority of the executors and trustees had consented, specifically, to a marriage with Mary Anne Madden, described as "only surviving daughter of Andrew Madden, of Dunleary, Esquire;" and it was proved that Andrew Madden, who, upon the marriage, gave away Anne Robinson as his daughter, had a legitimate daughter, whose name was Mary Anne Madden, and who was unmarried.

Half the funds were paid to T D by the trustees and executors upon the marriage.

In 1822, T D filed a bill in the Court of Chancery, in Ireland, against the trustees and executors, and the devisees over, stating the will, and that he had complied with the conditions; that he had not since his father's death had any acquaintance with Anne Robinson, and had married Mary Anne Madden, with the consent of the trustees and executors; and praying that the trusts might be carried into execution.

On the 9th of December 1824, T D died, leaving Anne Madden (Robinson), with whom he had cohabited from the time of his marriage, and to whom, by the name of A. H. Robinson, otherwise Dillon, he bequeathed all his property by will; but he left no issue.

On the 23rd of December 1824, Anne Dillon, otherwise Robinson, as the representative of T D, filed an original bill in the Court of Exchequer, Ireland, against the trustees and executors, containing nearly the same statement and prayer as the bill of T D.

In their answer to this bill, the trustees and executors stated, that they believed that T D had complied with the directions and conditions of his father's will, and that otherwise they would not have consented to his marriage.

James Dillon, the other son of the testator, died before his father, never having been married.

In the court below, a decree was made in favour of the plaintiff, Anne Dillon, otherwise Robinson; but this decree was reversed on appeal, and the following points were decided: 1st, that the declaration of T D was not admissible in evidence, as part of the will; 2nd, that "and" in this will could not be construed "or"; 3rd, semble, that the word "associate" in the will, did not prohibit marriage. But 4th, that T D had not contracted a valid marriage, or at least not with such consent as was requisite; and that therefore the estates limited over, on his dying unmarried, and without issue, vested in the devisees. Dillon v. Harris, 4 Bligh, N.S. 321.

(H) Practice.

On affidavit, that an attesting witness has been diligently sought, and cannot be found, an executor may pray publication; but the other party has a right to a motion against the witness, to attend for cross-examination, if they can discover him. Mynn v. Robinson, 1 Hag. Ec. 68.

The executor of a former will, deriving all his interest from that will, and if deprived of such interest, being deprived by the act of the deceased, is not entitled, in opposing a later will, to the same indulgence as a next of kin, who has by law a right to the succession, unless ousted by the express directions of the deceased. Young v. Brown, 1 Hag. Ec. 574.

An original will, disposing of real estate in Scotland, may (certain conditions being complied with) be delivered out of the registry, in order to be proved and recorded at Edinburgh. In the goods of Alexander Russell, 1 Hag. Ec. 91.

The Court will not, when a competent party is opposing a will, stay the admission of the executor's allegation propounding such will, till the appointment of a committee of a lunatic next of kin to be confirmed, more especially such committee being already a party to the suit, as curator of other next of kin. Tyrrell v. Jenner, 2 Hag. Ec. 72.

A party entering a caveat, and alleging himself to be an executor in the last will of the deceased, without inserting the date, has a right to call for an affidavit of scripta, without swearing as to his belief that he is an executor in some paper left by the deceased; and semble, without being liable to costs. Antrobus v. Leggatt, 3 Hag. Ec. 616.

(I) Costs.

A next of kin declaring "he proceeds no further" in contesting a will, the Court will dismiss, and not condemn him in costs, because it is pleaded "that he attempted to suborn an attesting witness," nor allow affidavits, in proof of the attempt. Meek v. Curtis, 1 Hag. Ec. 127.

(A) Attendance.

In a criminal case, a person, who is present in court, when called as a witness, is bound to be sworn, and to give his evidence, although he has not been subpœnaed. An indictment for stopping a way, is a criminal case for this purpose. Rex v. Sadler, 4 C. & P. 218. [Littledale]

Time for subpœnaing a witness domiciled in London, to give evidence in a town cause. Postan v. Rose, 4 C. & P. 271. [Tindal]

In order to bring a party into contempt, for not attending at a trial as a witness, at the Sittings, in obedience to a subpœna, the writ must specify the place at which the cause is to be tried, viz. Westminster Hall or Guildhall. Milsom v. Day, 3 M. & P. 333.

On a motion for an attachment against a witness for non-attendance at the trial of a cause in pursuance of his subpœna:—Held, that the affidavit should state the party to be a material and necessary witness. Taylor v. Willans, 8 Law J. C.P. 121, s. c. 4 M. & P. 59.

An attachment for non-appearance to a subpœna served in Guernsey is irregular. Fernandez v. Corbin, 2 Sim. 544.

(B) Competency.

[See Insolvent Debtor, Evidence (H).]

(a) Relative Situation.

A woman who was married to a man, but whose marriage to him was void, by reason of her having a former husband living, who had been supposed dead, may be examined against him, to prove his declarations made while she lived with him as his wife. Wells v. Fisher, 2 M. & M. 99, s. c. 5 C. & P. 12. [Patteson]

Where the question was as to a settlement by marriage, and the marriage was disputed on the ground of a prior marriage of the man, who had been called as a witness, but not to any fact relating to the marriage:—Held, that the supposed first wife was a competent witness to be called by the other party to prove the marriage; there being no direct charge against the husband; and the evidence of the wife not being directed to the contradicting of him in any fact deposed to by him. Rex v. the Inhabitants of Bathwick, 9 Law J. M.C. 133, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 639.

(b) Interest.

Where one of two defendants in trover, suffers judgment by default, he may be called as a witness to prove the other not guilty. Ward v. Ventom, Pea. A.C. 126. [Kenyon]

A witness is not inadmissible merely on the ground of his being a party to the suit. Therefore, where one of three defendants suffered judgment by default in an action of debt on bond,—Held, that he might be examined for the plaintiff (he not objecting), his evidence being against his own interest. Worrall v. Jones, 9 Law J. C.P. 70, s. c. 7 Bing. 396, s. c. 5 M. & P. 241.

Where a bill is filed on behalf of a class, a person belonging to that class, and who would have the benefit of the decree if the plaintiff succeeded, is not a competent witness for the plaintiffs. Williams v. Smith, 7 Law J. Chanc. 129.

On a plea in abatement, of the non-joinder of other joint contractors, one of the parties named in the plea is not a competent witness for the defendant. Hare v. Munn, 1 M. & M. 242. [Tenterden]

A witness admitting himself to be jointly liable with the defendant, was held to be incompetent, inasmuch as he, being liable to contribution, was interested in defeating the action or lessening the damages. Hall v. Cecil, 7 Law J. C.P. 242, s. c. 3 M. & P. 273, s. c. 6 Bing. 181.

A witness called for the defendant stated, on the voir dire, that he was bail to the sheriff in the action, but did not justify, and that he had not done anything to get the recognizance he had entered into discharged. He added, that other bail justified, but it appeared that he did not see them do so:—Held, that he was not a competent witness. Hawkins v. Inwood, 4 C. & P. 148. [Tindal]

Where a party is interested in the destruction of a particular custom, or has himself acted in breach of it, he is not a competent witness to disprove the existence of such custom.

In an action on a charter-party, the attesting witness having subsequently, by agreement with the plaintiff, acquired an interest in the proceeds of the voyage:—Held, that he was not a competent witness to prove the execution of the charter-party, nor was evidence of his handwriting admissible. Hewitt v. Stephenson, 7 Law J. C.P. 209, s. c. 3 M. & P. 146.

The inhabitants of a parish are admissible witnesses in an action by the surveyor of the highways against his predecessor for penalties for not accounting, and for the balance of monies in his hands. Heudebourck v. Langston, 2 M. & M. 402, s. c. 3 C. & P. 566. [Tenterden]

In an action against the surety of a collector of rates, to recover sums received and not paid over by the collector, an inhabitant of the place is admissible ex necessitate to prove payments to the collector, although, in the event of the surety's failing to make good the deficiency, he would be liable to a fresh assessment. Middleton v. Frost, 4 C. & P. 16. [Tenterden]

On an objection to a title on account of the estate sold, being subject to a right of common, which was not disclosed, a person claiming a right of common is a good witness. Gibson v. Spurrier, Pea. A.C. 50. [Kenyon]

On an issue directed by the Court, to try the validity of certain deeds of lease and release, and an accompanying trust-deed, the Court held, that the attorney who prepared them was a competent witness to prove the circumstances under which they were executed; notwithstanding his claim for costs, which, it was contended, gave him an interest in supporting them; and notwithstanding he was a party to the trust-deed, under which he was appointed receiver, in which character he had defended an action of trespass brought against him by the present defendant, for breaking and entering a chapel on the estate. Hudson v. Revett, 7 Law J. C.P. 145, s. c. 5 Bing. 368, s. c. 2 M. & P. 663.

The evidence of the remainder-man in tail is not missible on the part of a prior tenant in tail, in an ejectment brought by him for the purpose of trying the validity of a recovery suffered by a former tenant in tail. Doe d. Lord Teynham v. Tyler, 8 Law J. C.P. 100, s. c. 6 Bing. 290, s. c. 4 M. & P. 29.

In a quare impedit, the father of the defendant was called as a witness for him, and it appeared that the witness himself claimed a right of presentation to the vacant rectory, as tenant by the courtesy, in right of his late wife, who was seised of the estate of inheritance:—Held, that his evidence could not be received; although it was contended that his right (if any) had been forfeited by his having neglected to present within six months after the vacancy happened, which would give the bishop a right to present,—it appearing that the bishop had not acted upon that right. Gully v. the Bishop of Exeter, 7 Law J. C.P. 50, s. c. 2 Bing. 171, s. c. 2 M. & P. 266.

A woman who claims dower in respect of property, the subject of an ejectment, is a competent witness on behalf of the party whose case is founded upon the same alleged facts as her own; because her claim to dower could not be affected either way by the result of the ejectment. Doe d. Nightingale v. Macey, 9 Law J. K.B. 2, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 437.

Action for goods sold by the plaintiffs to the defendant, at the sale of which, according to the plaintiffs' evidence, A was present. Defence, that the goods had been bought by A of the plaintiffs, and by him sold to the defendant, who had paid him. To prove this defence, A was tendered as a witness. Held, to be competent, for it was not to be assumed, in the first instance, that he had been guilty of fraud upon the defendant, so as to be liable to him for the costs of the plaintiff's action then depending. Larbalestier v. Clark, 9 Law J. K.B. 159, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 899.

An insolvent debtor is not a competent witness for the plaintiff, in an action brought by his assignee, though he release his interest in the surplus, because his future property is liable to the payment of the debts in the schedule, and therefore he is interested in procuring the recovery of as much money as possible. Delafield v. Freeman, 8 Law J. C.P. 70, s. 6 Bing. 294, s. c. 3 M. & P. 704, s. c. 4 C. & P. 67.

If it be sought to shew the incompetency of a witness by reason that the plaintiffs on the record have become bankrupts, that the action is prosecuted by the assignees in their names, and that the witness is a creditor of the bankrupt plaintiffs; the commission of bankrupt must be produced, although the witness be examined on the voir dire. Hunter v. Leathley, 8 Law J. K.B. 201, s. c. 10 B. & C. 858.

(c) Waiver, and Removal of Objection to.

In equity, an objection to the competency of a witness is not waived by cross-examination. Harrison v. Courtauld, 1 Russ. & M. 428.

In an action on a bill of exchange against two partners, one of them pleaded in bar his bankruptcy and certificate. A nolle prosequi was thereupon entered as to him:—Held, that this made him a competent witness. Afflalo v. Fourdrinier, 8 Law J. C.P. 33, s. c. 6 Bing. 306, s. c. 3 M. & P. 743.

Several persons having agreed to bear equally the expenses of a joint undertaking in an action brought against one of them, another of the contractors is a competent witness for the defendant, if released by him, though the rest do not join in the release. Duke v. Pownall, 1 M. & M. 430. [Tenterden]

An insolvent debtor is not a competent witness in an action brought by his assignee, notwithstanding he release his interest in the surplus of his estate. Delafield v. Freeman, 8 Law J. C.P. 70, s. c. 6 Bing. 294, s. c. 3 M. & P. 704.

In a suit by the assignee of an insolvent to impeach a sale, which a former assignee had made, of an equity of redemption, the insolvent is not rendered a competent witness for the plaintiff by releasing his interest in the residue of his estate. Waldron v. Howell, 3 Russ. 376.

The bail for the defendant may be made a competent witness for him, by the defendant's depositing at the trial, in the hands of the officer of the court, a sum equal to the sum sworn to and the costs of the action, and the Judge's making an order thereupon to strike the name of the bail off the bail-piece. Baillie v. Hole, 1 M. & M. 289, s. c. 3 C. & P. 560. [Tenterden]

In assumpsit, where one defendant pleads a plea operating only in his personal discharge, a verdict may be taken for him on that plea, and he may then be examined as a witness for his co-defendants.

Quære, whether in an action of contract against several defendants, some of whom plead matter negativing the action with respect to all, and the other pleads his bankruptcy only, on which the jury find a verdict for him, he is a competent witness, after that verdict returned, to prove the plea of the other defendants. Bate v. Russell, 1 M. & M. 332. [J. Parke]

(C) Credit.

If a witness is, on cross-examination, asked a question on some collateral matter, in order to affect his credit, he cannot be contradicted by calling another witness for that purpose. Rex v. Rudge, Peo. A.C. 232. [Lawrence]

It is not admissible to impeach a witness by shewing he has made a particular statement, unless the witness denies having made such statement. It is not enough that he states he has no recollection of making such statement. Pain v. Beeston, 2 M. & M. 20. [Tindal]

It is not essential that the witnesses who state that they would not believe another person on his oath, should have ever heard such person give evidence upon oath; as the real question is, whether the witnesses have such a knowledge of the person's character and conduct, as enables them conscientiously to say, that it is impossible to place any reliance on any statement that such person may make. Rex v. Bispham, 4 C. & P. 392. [J. Parke]

In order to discredit a witness by proof of a contradictory statement, it is not enough to ask him generally whether he has ever made such a statement; but particulars must be specified to him. Angus v. Smith, 1 M. & M. 473. [Tindal]

(D) Commission to examine.

[Courts of common law enabled to examine witnesses on interrogatories. 1 Will. 4. c. 22, 9 Law J. Stat. 21.]

The defendant had obtained a rule under 1 Will. 4. c. 22. s. 4, for a commission to examine witnesses on interrogatories in France. Cause being shewn on section 1, alleging want of jurisdiction, Lord Tenterden said, there could be no doubt but that a distinction existed between sec. 1 and sec. 4; and that it would be limiting the commission too much to make it part of the order, that it should be returned in three weeks. The commission was directed to issue, and, if not returned in a proper time, the plaintiff to apply that the cause shall go on. The witnesses intended to be examined, and the time, place, and manner of examining them, were named in the order, which directed the commission to be returned by Michaelmas term, at all events: as it was a London cause, no trial could be lost. Reynard v. Cope, 9 Law J. K.B. 326.

The powers of the 4th section of 1 Will. 4. c. 22. to grant commissions for the examination of witnesses abroad, are vested discretionally in the courts of common law, and are applicable to places out of the king's dominions. Ducket v. Williams, 9 Law J. Exch. 177, s. c. 1 Tyrw. 502, s. c. 1 C. & J. 510.

A commission to examine witnesses in the West Indies, on a bill filed for a discovery, in aid of an action at law brought by the plaintiff, and after a commission, (not praying any relief),—ordered, on motion, although the defendant's answer had not come in, where his time for answering had expired. Hibberson v. Cambridge, 13 Price, 797.

(E) Examination.

(a) At Law.

[See Practice and Rape.]

A person bringing papers under a subpœna duces tecum, may be compelled to produce them without being sworn. Davis v. Dale, 1 M. & M. 514, s. c. 4 C. & P. 335. [Tindal]

Where a witness remains in court, after an order for the witnesses to withdraw, the Judge may still allow him to be examined, subject to observation on his conduct in disobeying the order. Rex v. Colley, 1 M. & M. 329. [Littledale]

A witness was asked whether he had not been imprisoned on a conviction for forging coal-meters' certificates:—Held, not bound to answer. Millman v. Tucker, Pea. A.C. 222. [Ellenborough]

A witness is not excused from answering a question, on the ground that the conduct inquired into on his part would subject him to a penalty, if the time limited for proceeding for such penalty is past. Roberts v. Allatt, 2 M. & M. 192. [Tenterden]

An attorney's clerk is not privileged from answering whether he has received a particular paper from the client. Eirke v. Nokes, 1 M. & M. 303. [Tenterden.] See Bevan v. Waters, ib. 235.

If a witness objects to answer questions, on the ground that they may subject him to criminal proceedings, the counsel on the opposite side cannot argue in support of the witness's objection. Rex v. Adey, 2 M. & M. 94. [Tenterden]

(b) In Equity.

A witness may demur to answer an interrogatory which seeks for information come to his knowledge in professional confidence. Parry v. Watkins, 9 Law J. Chanc. 63.

Quære—whether an order to examine a witness de bene esse in a suit, merely to perpetuate testimony, and not for relief, can regularly be obtained before answer, or without notice to the other side. Ellis v. Sinclair, 3 Y. & J. 182.

(c) In the Ecclesiastical Court.

After publication, the Court will not allow witnesses to be re-examined in the ordinary mode, on a suggestion that the examiner, from a misconstruction of the plea, has improperly rejected evidence: but, if essential to justice, it may direct a viâ suæ re-examination in open court. Ingram v. Wyatt, 1 Hag. Ec. 100.

(F) Interrogatories.

Interrogatories not being ready, and twenty-four hours having elapsed after notice to the adverse proctor, of the production of a witness,—the witness has not, under all circumstances, a right to be dismissed. Ingram v. Wyatt, 1 Hag. Ec. 94.

(G) Depositions.

Where a mandamus for the examination of witnesses in India is obtained on the application of one party, and the other takes no part therein, the latter is nevertheless entitled to copies of the depositions at his own cost. Davis v. Nicholson, 9 Law J. C.P. 114, s. c. 7 Bing. 358, s. c. 5 M. & P. 185.

Under suspicious circumstances, the deposition of a witness, not cross-examined, may be sealed up; but, on a subsequent satisfactory explanation, may be delivered out subject to all objections at the hearing. Ingram v. Wyatt, 1 Hag. Ec. 95.

(H) Protection and Privileges.

[See Production of Deeds, Books, and Papers, (B).]

A broker in an illegal stock-jobbing transaction is not compellable to give evidence of it, though he is only liable to a pecuniary penalty. Raines v. Toogood, Pea. A.C. 105. [Kenyon]

A man served with a subpœna duces tecum, cannot be compelled to produce an instrument by virtue of which he committed a trespass. Miles v. Dawson, Pea. A.C. 56. [Kenyon]

A was served with a subpœna duces tecum, to produce a deed in his possession, which was to be proved by the subscribing witness, but he refused:—Ordered, that he should produce the deed at his own expense, and that he should pay all the other expenses caused by his refusal. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 3 Sim. 285.

A witness, who comes from the country to London, in obedience to a subpœna, to testify in a suit in equity, is protected from arrest during the whole of the time he remains in London bonâ fide for the purpose of giving evidence.

But a witness who does not remain in London for the purpose of giving evidence, and who, after being served with the subpœna, has had it notified to him that he is to attend to be examined on the 22nd of October, is not protected from arrest on the 19th of October.

A witness is not protected from arrest in going to the office of the solicitor of the party, in order to prepare himself for his examination. Gibbs v. Philipson, 8 Law J. Chanc. 43, s. c. 1 Russ. & M. 19.

A witness attending an arbitrator upon a reference, is protected from arrest, in the same manner as a witness who is attending a court in obedience to a subpœna. Wansell v. Southwood, 7 Law J. K.B. 227, s. c. 4 M. & R. 359.

(I) EXPENSES.

A successful party is entitled to the expense of a foreign witness material to his cause, although such witness be not accessible by subpœna.

He is also entitled to the expense of detaining such witness in this country to await the trial of the cause, although opportunity is afforded of examination upon interrogatory. Lonergan v. the Royal Exchange Assurance, 7 Bing. 725, s. c. 5 M. & P. 447.

Allowance may be made in costs for loss of time to a foreign witness necessary to the success of the cause, who is not accessible by subpœna, and refuses to attend without compensation. Lonergan v. the Royal Exchange Assurance, 7 Bing. 729, s. c. 5 M. & P. 805.

No action for loss of time can be maintained by a witness, for his attendance in that character, although the party who compelled his attendance has promised to pay him for loss of time. Collins v. Godefroy, 9 Law J. K.B. 158, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 950.

WORK AND LABOUR.

If A agrees to serve B, as an apothecary's assistant, at such salary as C shall think reasonable, and it appears that no application has been made to C to fix any salary, A cannot recover anything for his services, in an action for work and labour. Owen v. Bassen, 4 C. & P. 93. [Tenterden]

In an action for work and labour, when it is shewn that the work was commenced under a written agreement, such agreement ought to be produced. And the plaintiff cannot recover without it for extras, although a particular item was proceeded on after an admission by the defendant, that it was an extra. Vincent v. Cole, 2 M. & M. 257, s. c. 3 C. & P. 481. [Tenterden]

If, in an action for work and labour, surveyors be called for the defendant, to prove that, in the year 1831, they surveyed the work, and that, in their judgment, the charges were 100*l.* too much,—Held, that a letter from the defendant's attorney, stating that the work had been surveyed in 1829, and that the charges were considered to be 60*l.* too much, is not admissible as evidence in reply. Knapp v. Haskall, 4 C. & P. 590. [Tenterden]

WRECK.

To constitute "wreck," it is not necessary that no person should have escaped alive to land from the vessel.

The grantee of wreck has such a special property in the goods wrecked, as to entitle him to maintain trespass against a wrong-doer, for taking them away; although the grantee had not seized them. The Corporation of Dunwich v. Sterry, 9 Law J. K.B. 167, s. c. 1 B. & Ad. 831.

Parol evidence cannot be resorted to, to support a prescriptive right to wreck, where it appears that the property where wreck was claimed was in the Crown in the reign of Charles I.; for the jury could not infer that it was in those under whom the party claims, from time of legal memory. Alcock v. Cooke, 7 Law J. C.P. 126, s. c. 5 Bing. 340, s. c. 2 M. & P. 625.

ADDENDA:

The following Cases have been accidentally omitted.

COSTS.

The Court will not exercise any supposed power they may have at common law, to tax an attorney's bill, independent of the power given by 2 Geo. 2. c. 2. s. 23. Dagley v. Kentish, 9 Law J. K.B. 183, s. c. 2 B. & Ad. 411.

DEED.

The defendant, by deed of lease and release, and an accompanying deed of trust, conveyed his property to the plaintiff, in trust for the benefit of his creditors; the deeds of lease and release containing a covenant for the defendant and his wife to levy a fine to enure to the uses of the trust-deed. At the time of the execution of the deeds, blanks were left in the trust-deed for the amount of a debt due to one of the creditors, which was not then ascertained. These blanks were on the following day filled up in the presence, and with the assent, of the defendant; and he afterwards joined with his wife in levying the fine, and wrote to the tenants on the estate, desiring them to pay their rents to the plaintiff's agent:—Held, that the subsequent filling up of the blanks did not avoid the deeds. Hudson v. Revett, 7 Law J. C.P. 145, s. c. 5 Bing. 368, s. c. 2 M. & P. 663.

HIGHWAY.

The lessee for years, or other person receiving the benefit of tithes, is liable in respect of them to the highway rates; although he compound with the tithe payers for the amount, and the tithe is not, in fact, severed. Chanter v. Glubb, 7 Law J. M.C. 114, s. c. 4 M. & R. 374, s. c. 9 B. & C. 479.

MALICIOUS AND VEXATIOUS ARREST.

The plaintiff, who had lent to the defendant, at various times, 500*l.*, conceiving her to be a feme sole, arrested her for that amount. Upon the trial it appeared, that during the greater part of the advances, she was a feme covert, and plaintiff recovered only 38*l.* 10*s.*, lent after her husband's death. —Held, that the plaintiff, being at the time of the arrest ignorant of the defendant's coverture, had reasonable or probable cause for the arrest. Had he been aware of it, the defendant would have been entitled to costs. The 43 Geo. 3. c. 46. s. 3. throws upon the defendant the proof, that there was no reasonable cause.

Semble, that "the defendant's undertaking not to bring any action for an excessive arrest," contained in a Judge's order, for reducing the amount of bail, does not extend to an application for costs, under 43 Geo. 3. c. 36. s. 3. Spooner v. Danks, 9 Law J. C.P. 221, s. c. 7 Bing. 772, s. c. 5 M. & P. 701.

POOR.

The interest of a remainder-man, after an estate for life, will not entitle him to a settlement, by reason of forty days' residence during the continuance of the particular estate. Rex v. Ringstead, 7 Law J. K.B. 197, s. c. 9 B. & C. 218, s. c. 4 M. & R. 67.

PRACTICE.

A subpœna tested the 9th of May, and served on the 19th, required the defendant to appear "on Monday the 21st day of March instant;" the Court refused to set aside the service. Page v. Carew, 1 C. & J. 514.

PROHIBITION.

[Proceedings in, improved and regulated by 1 Will. 4. c. 21, 9 Law J. Stat. 20.]

REPLEVIN.

The Court will allow money to be paid into court by the plaintiff in replevin, upon a special application for that purpose. Alderson v. Gadsden, 7 Law J. K.B. 89.

SPECIAL CASE.

When the Sessions, on determining an appeal, have granted a case, but none has been stated, the Court will, under some circumstances, direct a mandamus to the Justices who heard the appeal, to state a case; but not where it is clear that such a proceeding could lead to no result; as, where the chairman, in consequence of his own opinion, and that of the Court, upon the facts, refused to sign any statement but one which would have excluded the point of law relied upon by the party demanding a case. Rex v. the Justices of Pembrokeshire, 2 B. & Ad. 391.

STAMP.

Where, by deeds of lease and release, and an accompanying deed of trust, property is conveyed for the benefit of creditors exceeding five, the whole forming but one assurance, an ad valorem stamp is not requisite, as they fall within the exception in the 55 Geo. 3. c. 184, schedule, part 1, title "Mortgage." Hudson v. Revett, 7 Law J. C.P. 145, s. c. 5 Bing. 368, s. c. 2 M. & P. 663.
